DISSERTATION

CONCERNING THE

ÆRA OF OSSIAN.

INQUIRIES into the antiquities of nations afford more pleaſure than any real advantage to mankind. The ingenious may form ſyſtems of hiſtory on probabilities and a few facts; but at a great diſtance of time, their accounts muſt be vague and uncertain. The infancy of ſtates and kingdoms is as deſtitute of great events, as of the means of tranſmitting them to poſterity. The arts of poliſhed life, by which alone facts can be preſerved with certainty, are the productions of a well-formed community. It is then hiſtorians begin to write, and public tranſactions to be worthy remembrance. The actions of former times are left in obſcurity, or magnified by uncertain traditions. Hence it is that we find ſo much of the marvellous in the origin of every nation; poſterity being always ready to believe any thing, however fabulous, that reflects honour on their anceſtors. The Greeks and Romans were remarkable for this weakneſs. They ſwallowed the moſt abſurd fables concerning the high antiquities of their reſpective nations. Good hiſtorians, however, roſe very early amongſt them, and tranſmitted, with luſtre, their great actions to poſterity. It is to them that they owe that unrivalled fame they now enjoy, while the great actions of other nations are involved in fables, or loſt in obſcurity. The Celtic nations afford a ſtriking inſtance of this kind. They, though once the maſters of Europe from the mouth of the river Oby*, in Ruſſia, to Cape Finiſtere, the weſtern point of Gallicia in Spain, are very little mentioned in hiſtory. They truſted their fame to tradition and the ſongs of their bards, which, by the viciſſitude of human affairs, are long ſince loſt. Their ancient language is the only monument that remains of them: and the traces of it being found in places ſo widely diſtant of each other, ſerves only to ſhew the extent of their ancient power, but throws very little light on their hiſtory.

Of all the Celtic nations, that which poſſeſſed old Gaul is the moſt renowned; not perhaps on account of worth ſuperior

ſuperior to the reſt, but for their wars with a people who had hiſtorians to tranſmit the fame of their enemies, as well as their own, to poſterity. Britain was firſt peopled by them, according to the teſtimony of the beſt authors *; its ſituation in reſpect to Gaul makes the opinion probable; but what puts it beyond all diſpute, is, that the ſame cuſtoms and language prevailed among the inhabitants of both in the days of Julius Cæſar †.

The colony from Gaul poſſeſſed themſelves, at firſt, of that part of Britain which was next to their own country; and ſpreading northward, by degrees, as they increaſed in numbers, peopled the whole iſland. Some adventurers paſſing over from thoſe parts of Britain that are within ſight of Ireland, were the founders of the Iriſh nation: which is a more probable ſtory than the idle fables of Mileſian and Gallician colonies. Diodorus Siculus ‡ mentions it as a thing well known in his time, that the inhabitants of Ireland were originally Britons; and his teſtimony is unqueſtionable, when we conſider that, for many ages, the language and cuſtoms of both nations were the ſame.

Tacitus was of opinion that the ancient Caledonians were of German extract. By the language and cuſtoms which always prevailed in the north of Scotland, and which are undoubtedly Celtic, one would be tempted to differ in opinion from that celebrated writer. The Germans, properly ſo called, were not the ſame with the ancient Celtæ. The manners and cuſtoms of the two nations were ſimilar; but their language different. The Germans ‖ are the genuine deſcendants of the ancient Daæ, afterwards well known by the name of Daci, and paſſed originally into Europe by the way of the northern countries, and ſettled beyond the Danube, towards the vaſt regions of Tranſilvania, Wallachia, and Moldavia; and from thence advanced by degrees into Germany. The Celtæ §, it is certain, ſent many colonies into that country, all of whom retained their own laws, language, and cuſtoms; and it is of them, if any colonies came from Germany into Scotland, that the ancient Caledonians were deſcended.

But whether the Caledonians were a colony of the Celtic Germans, or the ſame with the Gauls that firſt poſſeſſed themſelves of Britain, is a matter of no moment at this diſtance of time. Whatever their origin was, we find them very numerous in the time of Julius Agricola, which is a preſumption preſumption that they were long before ſettled in the country. The form of their government was a mixture of ariſtocracy and monarchy, as it was in all the countries where the Druids bore the chief ſway. This order of men ſeems to have been formed on the ſame ſyſtem with the Dactyli Idæi and Curetes of the ancients. Their pretended converſe with heaven, their magic and divination were the ſame. The knowledge of the Druids in natural cauſes, and the properties of certain things, the fruit of the experiments of ages gained them a mighty reputation among the people. The eſteem of the populace ſoon increaſed into a veneration for the order; which a cunning and ambitious tribe of men took care to improve, to ſuch a degree, that they, in a manner, ingroſſed the management of civil, as well as religious matters. It is generally allowed that they did not abuſe this extraordinary power; the preſerving their character of ſanctity was ſo eſſential to their influence, that they never broke out into violence or oppreſſion. The chiefs were allowed to execute the laws, but the legiſlative power was entirely in the hands of the Druids *. It was by their authority that the tribes were united, in times of the greateſt danger, under one head. The temporary king, or Vergobretus †, was choſen by them, and generally laid down his office at the end of the war. Theſe prieſts enjoyed long this extraordinary privilege among the Celtic nations who lay beyond the pale of the Roman empire. It was in the beginning of the ſecond century that their power among the Caledonians began to decline. The poems that celebrate Trathal and Cormac, anceſtors to Fingal, are full of particulars concerning the fall of the Druids, which account for the total ſilence concerning their religion in the poems that are now given to the public.

The continual wars of the Caledonians againſt the Romans hindered the nobility from initiating themſelves, as the cuſtom formerly was, into the order of the Druids. The precepts of their religion were confined to a few, and were not much attended to by a people inured to war. The Vergobretus, or chief magiſtrate, was choſen without the concurrence of hierarchy, or continued in his office againſt their will. Continual power ſtrengthened his intereſt among the tribes, and enabled him to ſend down, as hereditary to his poſterity, the office he had only received himſelf by election.

On occaſion of a new war againſt the King of the World, as the poems emphatically call the Roman emperor, the Druids, * Cæſ. l. 6. † Fer-gubreth, the man to judge.

Druids, to vindicate the honour of the order, began to refume their ancient privilege of chufing the Vergobretus. Garmal, the fon of Tarno, being deputed by them, came to the grandfather of the celebrated Fingal, who was then Vergobretus, and commanded him, in the name of the whole order to lay down his office. Upon his refufal, a civil war commenced, which foon ended in almoft the total extinction of the religious order of the Druids. A few that remained, retired to the dark receffes of their groves, and the caves they had formerly ufed for their meditations. It is then we find them in the circle of ftones, and unheeded by the world. A total difregard for the order, and utter abhorrence of the Druidical rites enfued. Under this cloud of public hate, all that had any knowledge of the religion of the Druids became extinct, and the nation fell into the laft degree of ignorance of their rites and ceremonies.

It is no matter of wonder then, that Fingal and his fon Offian make fo little, if any, mention of the Druids, who were the declared enemies to their fucceffion in the fupreme magiftracy. It is a fingular cafe, it muft be allowed, that there are no traces of religion in the poems afcribed to Offian; as the poetical compofitions of other nations are fo clofely connected with their mythology. It is hard to account for it to thofe who are not made acquainted with the manner of the old Scottifh bards. That race of men carried their notions of martial honour to an extravagant pitch. Any aid given their heroes in battle, was thought to derogate from their fame; and the bards immediately transferred the glory of the action to him who had given that aid.

Had Offian brought down gods, as often as Homer hath done, to aflift his heroes, this poem had not confifted of eulogiums on his friends, but of hymns to thefe fuperior beings. To this day, thofe that write in the Gaelic language feldom mention religion in their profane poetry; and when they profeffedly write of religion, they never interlard with their compofitions, the actions of their heroes. This cuftom alone, even though the religion of the Druids had not been previoufly extinguifhed, may, in fome meafure, account for Offian's filence concerning the religion of his own times.

To fay, that a nation is void of all religion, is the fame thing as to fay, that it does not confift of people endued with reafon. The traditions of their fathers, and their own obfervations on the works of nature, together with that fuperftition which is inherent in the human frame, have, in all ages, raifed in the minds of men fome idea of a fuperior being. Hence it is, that in the darkeft times, and amongft the the moſt barbarous nations, the very populace themſelves had ſome faint notion, at leaſt, of a divinity. It would be doing injuſtice to Oſſian, who, upon no occaſion, ſhews a narrow mind, to think, that he had not opened his conceptions to that primitive and greateſt of all truths. But let Oſſian's religion be what it will, it is certain he had no knowledge of Chriſtianity, as there is not the leaſt alluſion to it, or any of its rites, in his poems; which abſolutely fixes him to an æra prior to the introduction of that religion. The perſecution begun by Dioclefian, in the year 303, is the moſt probable time in which the firſt dawning of Chriſtianity in the north of Britain can be fixed. The humane and mild character of Conſtantius Chlorus, who commanded them in Britain, induced the perſecuted Chriſtians to take refuge under him. Some of them, through a zeal to propagate their tenets, or through fear, went beyond the pale of the Roman empire, and ſettled among the Caledonians; who were the more ready to hearken to their doctrines, as the religion of the Druids had been exploded ſo long before.

Theſe miſſionaries, either through choice, or to give more weight to the doctrine they advanced, took poſſeſſion of the cells and groves of the Druids; and it was from this retired life they had the name of Culdees *, which language of the country ſignified ſequeſtered perſons. It was with one of the Culdees that Oſſian, in his extreme old age, is ſaid to have diſputed concerning the Chriſtian religion. This diſpute is ſtill extant, and is couched in verſe, according to the cuſtom of the times. The extreme ignorance on the part of Oſſian, of the Chriſtian tenets, ſhews, that that religion had only been lately introduced, as it is not eaſy to conceive, how one of the firſt rank could be totally unacquainted with a religion that had been known for any time in the country. The diſpute bears the genuine marks of antiquity. The obſolete phraſes and expreſſions peculiar to the times, prove it to be no forgery. If Oſſian then lived at the introduction of Chriſtianity, as by all appearance he did, his epoch will be the latter end of the third, and beginning of the fourth century. What puts this point beyond diſpute, is the alluſion in his poems to the hiſtory of the times.

The exploits of Fingal againſt Caracul †, the ſon of the King of the World, are among the firſt brave actions of his youth. A complete poem, which relates to this ſubject, is printed in this collection.

* Culdich. † Caçac'huil, terrible eye. Carac'healla, terrible look. Carac-challamh, a ſort of upper garment.

In the year 210 the emperor Severus, after returning from his expeditions againſt the Caledonians, at York fell into the tedious illneſs of which he afterwards died. The Caledonians and Maiatæ, reſuming courage from his indiſpoſition, took arms in order to recover the poſſeſſions they had loſt. The enraged emperor commanded his army to march into their country, and to deſtroy it with fire and ſword. His orders were but ill executed, for his ſon, Caracalla, was at the head of the army, and his thoughts were entirely taken up with the hopes of his father's death, and with ſchemes to ſupplant his brother Geta. He ſcarcely had entered the enemy's country, when news was brought him that Severus was dead. A ſudden peace is patched up with the Caledonians, and, as it appears from Dion Caſſius, the country they had loſt to Severus was reſtored to them.

The Caracul of Fingal is no other than Caracalla, who, as the ſon of Severus, the emperor of Rome, whoſe dominions were extended almoſt over the known world, was not without reaſon called in the poems of Oſſian, the Son of the King of the World. The ſpace of time between 211, the year Severus died, and the beginning of the fourth century, is not ſo great, but Oſſian the ſon of Fingal, might have ſeen the Chriſtians whom the perſecution under Dioclefian had driven beyond the pale of the Roman empire.

Oſſian, in one of his many lamentations on the death of his beloved ſon Oſcar, mentions among his great actions, a battle which he fought againſt Caros, king of ſhips, on the banks of the winding Carun *. It is more than probable, that the Caros mentioned here, is the ſame with that noted uſurper Carauſius, who aſſumed the purple in the year 287, and ſeizing on Britain, defeated the emperor Maximian Herculius, in ſeveral naval engagements, which gives propriety to his being called in Oſſian's poems, the King of Ships. The winding Carun is that ſmall river retaining ſtill the name of Carron, and runs in the neighbourhood of Agricola's wall, which Carauſius repaired to obſtruct the incurſions of the Caledonians. Several other paſſages in the poems allude to the wars of the Romans; but the two juſt mentioned clearly fix the epoch of Fingal in the third century; and this account agrees exactly with the Iriſh hiſtories, which place the death of Fingal, the ſon of Comhal, in the year 283, and that of Oſcar and their own celebrated Cairbre, in the year 296.

Some people may imagine, that the alluſions to the Roman hiſtory might have been induſtriouſly inſerted into the poems, poems, to give them the appearance of antiquity. This fraud muſt then have been committed at leaſt three ages ago, as the paſſages in which the alluſions are made, are alluded to often in the compoſitions of thoſe times.

Every one knows what a cloud of ignorance and barbariſm overſpread the north of Europe three hundred years ago. The minds of men, addicted to ſuperſtition, contracted a narrowneſs that deſtroyed genius. Accordingly we find the compoſitions of thoſe times trivial and puerile to the laſt degree. But let it be allowed, that, amidſt all the untoward circumſtances of the age, a genius might ariſe, it is not eaſy to determine what could induce him to give the honour of his compoſitions to an age ſo remote. We find no fact that he has advanced, to favour any deſigns which could be entertained by any man who lived in the fifteenth century. But ſhould we ſuppoſe a poet, through humour, or for reaſons which cannot be ſeen at this diſtance of time, would aſcribe his own compoſitions to Oſſian, it is next to impoſſible, that he could impoſe upon his countrymen, when all of them were ſo well acquainted with the traditional poems of their anceſtors.

The ſtrongeſt objection to the authenticity of the poems now given to the public under the name of Oſſian, is the improbability of their being handed down by tradition through ſo many centuries. Ages of barbariſm, ſome will ſay, could not produce poems abounding with the diſintereſted and generous ſentiments ſo conſpicuous in the compoſitions of Oſſian; and could theſe ages produce them, it is impoſſible but they muſt be loſt, or altogether corrupted in a long ſucceſſion of barbarous generations.

Theſe objections naturally ſuggeſt themſelves to men unacquainted with the ancient ſtate of the northern parts of Britain. The bards, who were an inferior order of the Druids, did not ſhare their bad fortune. They were ſpared by the victorious king, as it was through their means only he could hope for immortality to his fame. They attended him in the camp, and contributed to eſtabliſh his power by their ſongs. His great actions were magnified, and the populace, who had no ability to examine into his character narrowly, were dazzled with his fame in the rhimes of the bards. In the mean time, men aſſumed ſentiments that are rarely to be met with in an age of barbariſm. The bards who were originally the diſciples of the Druids, had their minds opened, and their ideas enlarged, by being initiated in the learning of that celebrated order. They could form a perfect hero in their own minds, and aſcribe that character to their prince. The inferior chiefs made this ideal character the model of their conduct, and by degrees brought their minds to that generous ſpirit which breathes in all the poetry of the times. The prince, flattered by his bards, and rivalled by his own heroes, who imitated his character as deſcribed in the eulogies of his poets, endeavoured to excel his people in merit, as he was above them in ſtation. This emulation continuing, formed at laſt the general character of the nation, happily compounded of what is noble in barbarity, and virtuous and generous in a poliſhed people.

When virtue in peace, and bravery in war, are the characteriſtics of a nation, their actions become intereſting, and their fame worthy of immortality. A generous ſpirit is warmed with noble actions, and becomes ambitious of perpetuating them. This is the true ſource of that divine inſpiration, to which the poets of all ages pretended. When they found their themes inadequate to the warmth of their imaginations, they varniſhed them over with fables, ſupplied by their own fancy, or furniſhed by abſurd traditions. Theſe fables, however ridiculous, had their abettors; poſterity either implicitly believed them, or through a vanity natural to mankind, pretended that they did. They loved to place the founders of their families in the days of fable, when poetry, without the fear of contradiction, could give what characters ſhe pleaſed of her heroes. It is to this vanity that we owe the preſervation of what remain of the works of Oſſian. His poetical merit made his heroes famous in a country where heroiſm was much eſteemed and admired. The poſterity of theſe heroes, or thoſe who pretended to be deſcended from them, heard with pleaſure the eulogiums of their anceſtors; bards were employed to repeat the poems, and to record the connection of their patrons with chiefs ſo renowned. Every chief in proceſs of time had a bard in his family, and the office became at laſt hereditary. By the ſucceſſion of theſe bards, the poems concerning the anceſtors of the family were handed down from generation to generation; they were repeated to the whole clan on ſolemn occaſions, and always alluded to in the new compoſitions of the bards. This cuſtom came down near to our own times; and after the bards were diſcontinued, a great number in a clan retained by memory, or committed to writing, their compoſitions, and founded the antiquity of their families on the authority of their poems.

The uſe of letters was not known in the north of Europe till long after the inſtitution of the bards: the records of the families of their patrons, their own, and more ancient poems were handed down by tradition. Their poetical compoſitions were admirably contrived for that purpoſe. They were adapted to muſic; and the moſt perfect harmony obſerved. Each verſe was ſo connected with thoſe which preceded or followed it, that if one line had been remembered in a ſtanza, it was almoſt impoſſible to forget the reſt. The cadences followed in ſo natural a gradation, and the words were ſo adapted to the common turn of the voice, after it is raiſed to a certain key, that it was almoſt impoſſible, from a ſimilarity of ſound, to ſubſtitute one word for another. This excellence is peculiar to the Celtic tongue, and is perhaps to be met with in no other language. Nor does this choice of words clog the ſenſe or weaken the expreſſion. The numerous flections of conſonants, and variation in declenſion, make the language very copious.

The deſcendants of the Celtæ, who inhabited Britain and its iſles, were not ſingular in this method of preſerving the moſt precious monuments of their nation. The ancient laws of the Greeks were couched in verſe, and handed down by tradition. The Spartans, through a long habit, became ſo fond of this cuſtom, that they would never allow their laws to be committed to writing. The actions of great men, and the eulogiums of kings and heroes were preſerved in the ſame manner. All the hiſtorical monuments of the old Germans were comprehended in their ancient ſongs; * which were either hymns to their gods, or elegies in praiſe of their heroes, and were intended to perpetuate the great events in their nation which were carefully interwoven with them. This ſpecies of compoſition was not committed to writing, but delivered by oral tradition. † The care they took to have the poems taught to their children, the uninterrupted cuſtom of repeating them upon certain occaſions, and the happy meaſure of the verſe, ſerved to preſerve them for a long time uncorrupted. This oral chronicle of the Germans was not forgot in the eighth century, and it probably would have remained to this day, had not learning, which thinks every thing, that is not committed to writing, fabulous, been introduced. It was from poetical traditions that Garcillaſſo compoſed his account of the Yncas of Peru. The Peruvians had loſt all other monuments of their hiſtory, and it was from ancient poems which his mother, a princeſs of the blood of the Yncas, taught him in his youth, that he collected the materials of his hiſtory. If other nations then, that had been often over-run over-run by enemies, and had ſent abroad and received colonies, could, for many ages, preſerve, by oral tradition, their laws and hiſtories uncorrupted, it is much more probable that the ancient Scots, a people ſo free of intermixture with foreigners, and ſo ſtrongly attached to the memory of their anceſtors, had the works of their bards handed down with great purity.

* Tacitus de mor. Germ.

It will ſeem ſtrange to ſome, that poems admired for many centuries in one part of this kingdom ſhould be hitherto unknown in the other; and that the Britiſh, who have carefully traced out the works of genius in other nations, ſhould ſo long remain ſtrangers to their own. This, in a great meaſure, is to be imputed to thoſe who underſtood both languages and never attempted a tranſlation. They, from being acquainted but with detached pieces, or from a modeſty, which perhaps the preſent tranſlator ought, in prudence, to have followed, deſpaired of making the compoſitions of their bards agreeable to an Engliſh reader. The manner of thoſe compoſitions is ſo different from other poems, and the ideas ſo confined to the moſt early ſtate of ſociety, that it was thought they had not enough of variety to pleaſe a poliſhed age.

This was long the opinion of the tranſlator of the following collection; and though he admired the poems, in the original, very early, and gathered part of them from tradition for his own amuſement, yet he never had the ſmalleſt hopes of ſeeing them in an Engliſh dreſs. He was ſenſible that the ſtrength and manner of both languages were very different, and that it was next to impoſſible to tranſlate the Galic poetry into any thing of tolerable Engliſh verſe; a proſe tranſlation he could never think of, as it muſt neceſſarily fall ſhort of the majeſty of an original. It was a gentleman, who has himſelf made a figure in the poetical world that gave him the firſt hint concerning a literal proſe tranſlation. He tried it at his deſire, and the ſpecimen was approved. Other gentlemen were earneſt in exhorting him to bring more to the light, and it is to their uncommon zeal that the world owes the Galic poems, if they have any merit.

It was at firſt intended to make a general collection of all the ancient pieces of genius to be found in the Galic language; but the tranſlator had his reaſons for confining himſelf to the remains of the works of Oſſian. The action of the poem that ſtands the firſt, was not the greateſt or moſt celebrated of the exploits of Fingal. His wars were very numerous, and each of them afforded a theme which employed the genius of his ſon. But, excepting the preſent poem, thoſe pieces are irrecoverably loſt, and there only remain a few fragments in the hands of the tranſlator. Tradition has ſtill preſerved, in many places, the ſtory of the poems, and many now living have heard them, in their youth, repeated.

The complete work, now printed, would, in a ſhort time, have ſhared the fate of the reſt. The genius of the Highlanders has ſuffered a great change within theſe few years. The communication with the reſt of the iſland is open, and the introduction of trade and manufactures has deſtroyed that leiſure which was formerly dedicated to hearing and repeating the poems of ancient times. Many have now learned to leave their mountains, and ſeek their fortunes in a milder climate; and though a certain amor patriæ may ſometimes bring them back, they have, during their abſence, imbibed enough of foreign manners to deſpiſe the cuſtoms of their anceſtors. Bards have been long diſuſed, and the ſpirit of genealogy has greatly ſubſided. Men begin to be leſs devoted to their chiefs, and conſanguinity is not ſo much regarded. When property is eſtabliſhed, the human mind confines its views to the pleaſure it procures. It does not go back to antiquity, or look forward to ſucceeding ages. The cares of life increaſe, and the actions of other times no longer amuſe. Hence it is, that the taſte for their ancient poetry is at a low ebb among the Highlanders. They have not, however, thrown off the good qualities of their anceſtors. Hoſpitality ſtill ſubſiſts, and an uncommon civility to ſtrangers. Friendſhip is inviolable, and revenge leſs blindly followed than formerly.

To ſay any thing concerning the poetical merit of the poems, would be an anticipation on the judgment of the public. The poem which ſtands firſt in the collection is truly epic. The characters are ſtrongly marked, and the ſentiments breathe heroiſm. The ſubject of it is an invaſion of Ireland by Swaran king of Lochlin, which is the name of Scandinavia in the Galic language. Cuchullin, general of the Iriſh tribes in the minority of Cormac king of Ireland, upon intelligence of the invaſion, aſſembled his forces near Tura, a caſtle on the coaſt of Ulſter. The poem opens with the landing of Swaran, councils are held, battles fought, and Cuchullin is, at laſt, totally defeated. In the mean time, Fingal, king of Scotland, whoſe aid was ſolicited before the enemy landed, arrived and expelled them from the country. This war, which continued but ſix days and as many nights, is, including the epiſodes, the whole ſtory of the poem. The ſcene is the heath of Lena near a mountain called Cromleach in Ulſter.

All that can be ſaid of the tranſlation, is, that it is literal, and that ſimplicity is ſtudied. The arrangement of the words in the original is imitated, and the inverſions of the ſtyle obſerved. As the tranſlator claims no merit from his verſion, he hopes for the indulgence of the public where he fails. He wiſhes that the imperfect ſemblance he draws, may not prejudice the world againſt an original, which contains what is beautiful in ſimplicity, and grand in the ſublime.

He saw the heaving of her breast.

AN ANCIENT EPIC POEM.

IN SIX BOOKS.

THE ARGUMENT.

Cuchullin (general of the Iriſh tribes, in the minority of Cormac, king of Ireland) ſitting alone beneath a tree, at the gate of Tura, a caſtle of Ulſter (the other chiefs having gone on a hunting party to Cromla, a neighbouring hill), is informed of the landing of Swaran, king of Lochlin, by Moran, the ſon of Fithil, one of his ſcouts. He convenes the chiefs; a council is held, and diſputes run high about giving battle to the enemy. Connal, the petty king of Togorma and an intimate friend of Cuchullin, was for retreating, till Fingal, king of thoſe Caledonians who inhabited the north-weſt coaſt of Scotland, whoſe aid had been previouſly ſolicited, ſhould arrive; but Calmar, the ſon of Matha, lord of Lara, a country in Connaught, was for engaging the enemy immediately. Cuchullin, of himſelf willing to fight, went into the opinion of Calmar. Marching towards the enemy, he miſſed three of his braveſt heroes, Fergus, Duchomar, and Cathbat. Fergus arriving, tells Cuchullin of the death of the two other chiefs; which introduces the affecting epiſode of Morna, the daughter of Cormac. The army of Cuchullin is deſcried at a diſtance by Swaran, who ſent the ſon of Arno to obſerve the motions of the enemy, while he himſelf ranged his forces in order of battle. The ſon of Arno returning to Swaran, deſcribes to him Cuchullin's chariot, and the terrible appearance of that hero. The armies engage, but night coming on, leaves the victory undecided. Cuchullin, according to the hoſpitality of the times, ſends to Swaran a formal invitation to a feaſt, by his bard Carril, the ſon of Kinfena. Swaran refuſes to come. Carril relates to Cuchullin the ſtory of Grudar and Braſſolis. A party, by Connal's advice, is ſent to obſerve the enemy; which cloſes the action of the firſt day.

BOOK I.

CUCHULLIN [a] ſat by Tura's wall; by the tree of the ruſtling leaf. His ſpear leaned againſt the moſſy rock. His ſhield lay by him on the graſs. As he thought of mighty Carbar [b], a hero whom he ſlew in war; the ſcout [c] of the ocean came, Moran [d] the ſon of Fithil!

"Riſe," ſaid the youth, "Cuchullin, riſe; I ſee the ſhips of Swaran. Cuchullin, many are the foe: many the heroes of the dark-rolling ſea."

"Moran!" replied the blue-eyed chief, "thou ever trembleſt, ſon of Fithil: Thy fears have much increaſed the foe. Perhaps it is the king [e] of the lonely hills coming to aid me on green Ullin's plains.

"I ſaw the chief," ſays Moran, "tall as a rock of ice. His ſpear is like that blaſted fir. His ſhield like the riſing moon. He ſat on a rock on the ſhore: his dark hoſt rolled, like clouds around him. Many, chief of men! I ſaid, many are our hands of war. Well art thou named, the Mighty Man, but many mighty men are ſeen from Tura's windy walls."

"He anſwered, like a wave on a rock, who in this land appears like me? Heroes ſtand not in my preſence; they fall to earth beneath my hand. None can meet Swaran in the fight, but Fingal, king of ſtormy hills. Once we wreſtled on the heath of Malmor [f], and our heels overturned the wood. Rocks fell from their place; and rivulets, changing their courſe, fled murmuring from our ſtrife. Three days we renewed our ſtrife, and heroes ſtood at a diſtance and trembled. On the fourth, Fingal ſays, that the king of the ocean fell; but Swaran ſays, he ſtood. Let dark Cuchullin yield to him that is ſtrong as the ſtorms of Malmor."

"No!" replied the blue-eyed chief, "I will never yield to man! Dark Cuchullin ſhall be great or dead! Go, Fithil's ſon, and take my ſpear. Strike the ſounding ſhield of Cabait [g]. It hangs at Tura's ruſtling gate; the ſound of peace is not its voice. My heroes ſhall hear on the hill."

He went and ſtruck the boſſy ſhield. The hills and their rocks replied. The ſound ſpreads along the wood: deer ſtart by the lake of roes. Curah [h] leapt from the ſounding rock; and Connal of the bloody ſpear. Crugal's [i] breaſt of ſnows beats high. The ſon of Favi leaves the dark-brown hind. It is the ſhield of war, ſaid Ronar! the ſpear of Cuchullin, ſaid Lugar! ſon of the ſea put on on thy arms! Calmar lift thy ſounding ſteel! Puno! dreadful hero, riſe! Cairbar from thy red tree of Cromla! Bend thy white knee, O Eth! and deſcend from the ſtreams of Lena. Ca-olt ſtretch thy white ſide as thou moveſt along the whiſtling heath of Mora: thy ſide that is white as the foam of the troubled ſea, when the dark winds pour it on the murmuring rocks of Cuthon [k].

Now I behold the chiefs, in the pride of their former deeds! Their ſouls are kindled at the battles of old; and the actions of other times. Their eyes are like flames of fire. And roll in ſearch of the foes of the land. Their mighty hands are on their ſwords. And lightning pours from their ſides of ſteel. They come like ſtreams from the mountains; each ruſhes roaring from his hill. Bright are the chiefs of battle, in the armour of their fathers. Gloomy and dark their heroes follow, like the gathering of the rainy clouds behind the red meteors of heaven. The ſounds of craſhing arms aſcend. The grey dogs howl between. Unequally burſts the ſong of battle. And rocking Cromla [l] echoes round. On Lena's duſky heath they ſtand, like miſt [m] that ſhades the hills of autumn: when broken and dark it ſettles high, and lifts its head to heaven!

"Hail,"

"Hail," ſaid Cuchullin, "ſons of the narrow vales! hail ye hunters of the deer! Another ſport is drawing near: It is like the dark rolling of that wave on the coaſt! Shall we fight, ye ſons of war! or yield green Innisfail [n] to Lochlin! O Connal [o] ſpeak, thou firſt of men! thou breaker of the ſhields! thou haſt often fought with Lochlin: wilt thou lift thy father's ſpear?"

"Cuchullin!" calm the chief replied, "the ſpear of Connal is keen. It delights to ſhine in battle; and to mix with the blood of thouſands. But though my hand is bent on war, my heart is for the peace of Erin [p]. Behold, thou firſt in Cormac's war, the ſable fleet of Swaran. His maſts are as numerous on our coaſt as reeds in the lake of Lego. His ſhips are like foreſts clothed with miſt, when the trees yield by turns to the ſqually wind. Many are his chiefs in battle. Connal is for peace! Fingal would ſhun his arm the firſt of mortal men! Fingal who ſcatters the mighty, as ſtormy winds the heath; when the ſtreams roar through echoing Cona: and night ſettles with all her clouds on the hill."

"Fly, thou chief of peace," ſaid Calmar [q], the ſon of Matha; "fly, Connal, to thy ſilent hills, where the ſpear of battle never ſhone! Purſue the dark-brown deer of Cromla: and ſtop with thine arrows arrows the bounding roes of Lena. But, blue-eyed ſon of Semo, Cuchullin, ruler of the war, ſcatter thou the ſons of Lochlin [r]! and roar through the ranks of their pride. Let no veſſel of the kingdom of Snow bound on the dark-rolling waves of Inis-tore [s]. O ye dark winds of Erin riſe! roar ye whirlwinds of the heath! Amidſt the tempeſt let me die, torn in a cloud by angry ghoſts of men; amidſt the tempeſt let Calmar die, if ever chaſe was ſport to him, ſo much as the battle of ſhields!"

"Calmar!" ſlow replied the chief, "I never fled, O ſon of Matha! I was ſwift with my friends in battle; but ſmall is the fame of Connal! The battle was won in my preſence; and the valiant overcame! But, ſon of Semo, hear my voice, regard the ancient throne of Cormac. Give wealth and half the land for peace, till Fingal come with battle. Or, if war be thy choice, I lift the ſword and ſpear. My joy ſhall be in the midſt of thouſands; and my ſoul brighten in the gloom of the fight!"

"To me," Cuchullin replies, "pleaſant is the noiſe of arms! pleaſant as the thunder of heaven before the ſhower of ſpring! But gather all the ſhining tribes, that I may view the ſons of war! Let them move along the heath, bright as the ſunſhine before a ſtorm; when the weſt wind collects the the clouds, and the oaks of Morven echo along the ſhore."

"But where are my friends in battle? The companions of my arm in danger? Where art thou, white-boſom'd Cathbat? Where is that cloud in war, Duchomar [t]? And haſt thou left me, O Fergus [u]! in the day of the ſtorm? Fergus, firſt our joy at the feaſt! ſon of Roſſa! arm of death! comeſt thou like a roe [v] from Malmor? Like a hart from the echoing hills? Hail, thou ſon of Roſſa! What ſhades the ſoul of war?"

"Four ſtones [w]" replied the chief, "riſe on the grave of Cathbat. Theſe hands have laid in earth Duchomar, that cloud in war! Cathbat, ſon of Torman! thou wert a ſun-beam on the hill. And thou, O valiant Duchomar, like the miſt of marſhy Lano; when it ſails over the plains of autumn and brings death to the people. Morna, faireſt of maids! calm is thy ſleep in the cave of the rock. Thou haſt fallen in darkneſs like a ſtar, that ſhoots acroſs the deſart, when the traveller is alone, and mourns the tranſient beam."

"Say," ſaid Semo's blue-eyed ſon, "ſay how fell the chiefs of Erin? Fell they by the ſons of Lochlin, ſtriving in the battle of heroes? Or what confines the chiefs of Cromla to the dark and narrow houſe [x]."

"Cathbat,"

" Cathbat," replied the hero, " fell by the ſword of Duchomar at the oak of the noiſy ſtreams. Duchomar came to Tura's cave; and ſpoke to the lovely Morna."

" Morna, [y] faireſt among women, lovely daughter of Cormac-cairbar. Why in the circle of ſtones; in the cave of the rock, alone? The ſtream murmurs hoarſely. The old trees groan in the wind. The lake is troubled before thee, and dark are the clouds of the ſky. But thou art like ſnow on the heath; and thy hair like the miſt of Cromla; when it curls on the rocks, and ſhines to the beam of the weſt. Thy breaſts are like two ſmooth rocks ſeen from Brano of the ſtreams; thy arms like two white pillars in the halls of the mighty Fingal."

" From whence," the white-armed maid replied, " from whence, Duchomar the moſt gloomy of men? Dark are thy brows and terrible. Red are thy rolling eyes. Does Swaran appear on the ſea? What of the foe, Duchomar?"

" From the hill I return, O Morna, from the hill of the dark-brown hinds. Three have I ſlain with my bended yew. Three with my long bounding dogs of the chaſe. Lovely daughter of Cormac, I love thee as my ſoul. I have ſlain one ſtately deer for thee. High was his branchy head; and fleet his feet of wind."

"Duchomar!" calm the maid replied, "I love thee not, thou gloomy man, hard is thy heart of rock; and dark thy terrible brow. But Cathbat, ſon of Torman [z], thou art the love of Morna. Thou art like a ſun beam on the hill in the day of the gloomy ſtorm. Saweſt thou the ſon of Torman, lovely on the hill of his hinds? Here the daughter of Cormac waits the coming of Cathbat."

"And long ſhall Morna wait," Duchomar ſaid, "his blood is on my ſword. Long ſhall Morna wait for him. He fell at Branno's ſtream. High on Cromla I will raiſe his tomb, daughter of Cormac-cairbar; but fix thy love on Duchomar, his arm is ſtrong as a ſtorm."

"And is the ſon of Torman fallen?" ſaid the maid of the tearful eye. "Is he fallen on his echoing heath; the youth with the breaſt of ſnow? he that was firſt in the chaſe of the hill; the foe of the ſtrangers of the ocean. Duchomar thou art dark [a] indeed, and cruel is thy arm to Morna. But give me that ſword, my foe! I love the blood of Cathbat."

He gave the ſword to her tears. But ſhe pierced his manly breaſt! He fell, like the bank of a mountain-ſtream; and ſtretching out his arm he ſaid—

"Daughter

" Daughter of Cormac-cairbar, thou haſt ſlain Duchomar. The ſword is cold in my breaſt: Morna, I feel it cold. Give me to Moina[b] the maid; Duchomar was the dream of her night. She will raiſe my tomb; and the hunter ſhall ſee it and praiſe me. But draw the ſword from my breaſt; Morna, the ſteel is cold."

She came, in all her tears, ſhe came, and drew it from his breaſt. He pierced her white ſide with ſteel; and ſpread her fair locks on the ground. Her burſting blood ſounds from her ſide: and her white arm is ſtained with red. Rolling in death ſhe lay, and Tura's cave anſwered to her groans.

" Peace," ſaid Cuchullin, " to the ſouls of the heroes; their deeds were great in danger. Let them ride around[c] me on clouds; and ſhew their features of war; that my ſoul may be ſtrong in danger; my arm like the thunder of heaven.—But be thou on a moon-beam, O Morna, near the window of my reſt; when my thoughts are of peace; and the din of arms is over.—Gather the ſtrength of the tribes, and move to the wars of Erin.—Attend the car of my battles; rejoice in the noiſe of my courſe. Place three ſpears by my ſide; follow the bounding of my ſteeds; that my ſoul may be ſtrong in my friends, when the battle darkens round the beams of my ſteel."

As ruſhes a ſtream[d] of foam from the dark ſhady ſteep of Cromla; when the thunder is rolling above, and dark-brown night reſts on half the hill. So fierce, ſo vaſt, ſo terrible, ruſhed on the ſons of Erin. The chief, like a whale of ocean, whom all his billows follow, poured valour forth as a ſtream, rolling his might along the ſhore.

The ſons of Lochlin heard the noiſe as the ſound of a winter-ſtream. Swaran ſtruck his boſſy ſhield, and called the ſon of Arno. "What murmur rolls along the hill like the gathered flies of evening? The ſons of Innis-fail deſcend, or ruſtling winds roar in the diſtant wood. Such is the noiſe of Gormal before the white tops of my waves ariſe. O ſon of Arno, aſcend the hill and view the dark face of the heath."

He went, and trembling, ſwift returned. His eyes rolled wildly round. His heart beat high againſt his ſide. His words were faultering, broken, ſlow.

"Riſe, ſon of ocean, riſe chief of the dark-brown ſhields. I ſee the dark, the mountain-ſtream of the battle: the deep-moving ſtrength of the ſons of Erin.—The car, the car of battle comes, like the flame of death; the rapid car of Cuchullin, the noble ſon of Semo. It bends behind like a wave near a rock; like the golden miſt of the heath. Its ſides are emboſſed with ſtones, and ſparkle like the the ſea around the boat of night. Of poliſhed yew is its beam, and its ſeat of the ſmootheſt bone. The ſides are repleniſhed with ſpears; and the bottom is the footſtool of heroes. Before the right ſide of the car is ſeen the ſnorting horſe. The high-maned, broad-breaſted, proud, high-leaping, ſtrong ſteed of the hill. Loud and reſounding is his hoof; the ſpreading of his mane above, is like that ſtream of ſmoke on the heath. Bright are the ſides of the ſteed, and his name is Sulin-Sifadda.

"Before the left ſide of the car, is ſeen the ſnorting horſe. The dark-maned, high-headed, ſtrong-hoofed, fleet, bounding ſon of the hill: his name is Duſronnal among the ſtormy ſons of the ſword. A thouſand thongs bind the car on high. Hard poliſhed bits ſhine in a wreath of foam. Thin thongs bright-ſtudded with gems, bend on the ſtately necks of the ſteeds. The ſteeds that like wreaths of miſt fly over the ſtreamy vales. The wildneſs of deer is in their courſe, the ſtrength of the eagle deſcending on her prey. Their noiſe is like the blaſt of winter on the ſides of the ſnow-headed Gormal [c].

"Within the car is ſeen the chief; the ſtrong ſtormy ſon of the ſword; the hero's name is Cuchullin, ſon of Semo king of ſhells. His red cheek is is like my poliſhed yew. The look of his blue-rolling eye is wide beneath the dark arch of his brow. His hair flies from his head like a flame, as bending forward he wields the ſpear. Fly, king of ocean, fly; he comes, like a ſtorm along the ſtreamy vale."

"When did I fly," replied the king, "from the battle of many ſpears? When did I fly, ſon of Arno, chief of the little ſoul? I met the ſtorm of Gormal when the foam of my waves was high; I met the ſtorm of the clouds and ſhall I fly from a hero? Were it Fingal himſelf my ſoul ſhould not darken before him.—Riſe to the battle, my thouſands; pour round me like the echoing main. Gather round the bright ſteel of your king; ſtrong as the rocks of my land; that meet the ſtorm with joy, and ſtretch their dark woods to the wind."

As autumn's [f] dark ſtorms pour from two echoing hills, towards each other approached the heroes. As two dark ſtreams from high rocks meet, and mix and roar on the plain; loud, rough and dark in battle meet Lochlin and Innis-fail. Chief mixes his ſtrokes with chief, and man with man; ſteel, clanging, ſounded on ſteel, helmets are cleft on high. Blood burſts and ſmokes around.—— Strings twang on the poliſhed yews. Darts ruſh along along the ſky. Spears fall like the circles of light that gild the ſtormy face of night.

As the troubled noiſe of the ocean when roll the waves on high: as the laſt peal of the thunder of heaven, ſuch is the noiſe of battle. Though Cormac's hundred bards were there to give the war to ſong; feeble were the voices of a hundred bards to ſend the deaths to future times. For many were the falls of the heroes; and wide poured the blood of the valiant.

Mourn, ye ſons of ſong, the death of the noble Sith-allin [g]. Let the ſighs of Fiona riſe on the dark heaths of her lovely Ardan. They fell, like two hinds of the deſart, by the hands of the mighty Swaran; when, in the midſt of thouſands he roared; like the ſhrill ſpirit of a ſtorm, that ſits dim, on the clouds of Gormal, and enjoys the death of the mariner.

Nor ſlept thy hand by thy ſide, chief of the iſle of miſt [h]; many were the deaths of thine arm, Cuchullin, thou ſon of Semo. His ſword was like the beam of heaven when it pierces the ſons of the vale; when the people are blaſted and fall, and all the hills are burning around. Duſronnal [i] ſnorted over the bodies of heroes; and Sifadda [k] bathed his hoof in blood. The battle lay behind them as groves overturned on the deſart of Cromla; when the the blaſt has paſſed the heath laden with the ſpirits of night.

Weep on the rocks of roaring winds, O maid of Iniſtore [1], bend thy fair head over the waves, thou fairer than the ſpirit of the hills; when it moves in a ſun-beam at noon over the ſilence of Morven. He is fallen! thy youth is low; pale beneath the ſword of Cuchullin. No more ſhall valour raiſe the youth to match the blood of kings. Trenar, lovely Trenar died, thou maid of Iniſtore. His gray dogs are howling at home, and ſee his paſſing ghoſt. His bow is in the hall unſtrung. No ſound is in the heath of his hinds.

As roll a thouſand waves on a rock, ſo Swaran's hoſt came on; as meets a rock a thouſand waves, ſo Innis-fail met Swaran. Death raiſes all his voices around, and mixes with the ſound of their ſhields. Each hero is a pillar of darkneſs, and the ſword a beam of fire in his hand. The field echoes from wing to wing, as a hundred hammers that riſe by turns on the red ſon of the furnace.

Who are theſe on Lena's heath that are ſo gloomy and dark? Who are theſe like two clouds [m] and their ſwords like lightning above them? The little hills are troubled around, and the rocks tremble with all their moſs. Who is it but Ocean's ſon and the car-borne chief of Erin? Many are the anxious xious eyes of their friends, as they ſee them dim on the heath. Now night conceals the chiefs in her clouds, and ends the terrible fight.

It was on Cromla's ſhaggy ſide that Dorglas placed the deer; [n] the early fortune of the chaſe, before the heroes left the hill. A hundred youths collect the heath; ten heroes blow the fire; three hundred chuſe the poliſhed ſtones. The feaſt is ſmoking wide.

Cuchullin, chief of Erin's war, reſumed his mighty ſoul. He ſtood upon his beamy ſpear, and ſpoke to the ſon of ſongs; to Carril of other times, the gray-haired ſon of Kinfena. [o] "Is this feaſt ſpread for me alone, and the king of Lochlin on Ullin's ſhore, far from the deer of his hills, and ſounding halls of his feaſts! Riſe, Carril of other times, and carry my words to Swaran; tell him that came from the roaring of waters, that Cuchullin gives his feaſt. Here let him liſten to the ſound of my groves amidſt the clouds of night. For cold and bleak the bluſtering winds ruſh over the foam of his ſeas. Here let them praiſe the trembling harp, and hear the ſongs of heroes.

Old Carril went, with ſofteſt voice, and called the king of dark-brown ſhields. Riſe from the ſkins of thy chaſe, riſe, Swaran king of groves. Cuchullin gives the joy of ſhells; partake the feaſt of Erin's blue-eyed chief." He anſwered like the ſullen ſound of Cromla before a ſtorm. Though all thy daughters, Innis-fail! ſhould extend their arms of ſnow; raiſe high the heavings of their breaſts, and ſoftly roll their eyes of love; yet, fixed as Lochlin's thouſand rocks, here Swaran ſhall remain; till morn, with the young beams of my eaſt, ſhall light me to the death of Cuchullin. Pleaſant to my ear is Lochlin's wind. It ruſhes over my ſeas. It ſpeaks aloft in all my ſhrowds, and brings my green foreſts to my mind; the green foreſts of Gormal that often echoed to my winds, when my ſpear was red in the chaſe of the boar. Let dark Cuchullin yield to me the ancient throne of Cormac, or Erin's torrents ſhall ſhew from their hills the red foam of the blood of his pride."

"Sad is the ſound of Swaran's voice," ſaid Carril of other times: "Sad to himſelf alone," ſaid the blue-eyed ſon of Semo. "But, Carril, raiſe thy voice on high, and tell the deeds of other times. Send thou the night away in ſong; and give the joy of grief. For many heroes and maids of love have moved on Innis-fail. And lovely are the ſongs of woe that are heard on Albion's rocks; when the noiſe of the chaſe is over, and the ſtreams of Cona anſwer to the voice of Oſſian [P]."

"In

"In other days,"[q] Carril replies, "came the ſons of Ocean to Erin." A thouſand veſſels bounded over the waves to Ullin's lovely plains. The ſons of Innis-fail aroſe to meet the race of dark-brown ſhields. Cairbar, firſt of men was there, and Grudar, ſtately youth. Long had they ſtrove for the ſpotted bull, that lowed on Golbun's[r] echoing heath. Each claimed him as his own; and death was often at the point of their ſteel. Side by ſide the heroes fought, and the ſtrangers of Ocean fled. Whoſe name was fairer on the hill than the name of Cairbar and Grudar? But ah! why ever lowed the bull on Golbun's echoing heath? They ſaw him leaping like the ſnow. The wrath of the chiefs returned.

On Lubar's[s] graſſy banks they fought, and Grudar like a ſun-beam, fell. Fierce Cairbar came to the vale of the echoing Tura, where Braſſolis[t] faireſt of his ſiſters, all alone, raiſed the ſong of grief. She ſung of the actions of Grudar, the youth of her ſecret ſoul. She mourned him in the field of blood; but ſtill ſhe hoped for his return. Her white boſom is ſeen from her robe, as the moon from the clouds of night. Her voice was ſofter than the harp to raiſe the ſong of grief. Her ſoul was fixed on Grudar; the ſecret look of her eye was his. When ſhalt thou come in thine arms, thou mighty in the war?"

"Take, Braſſolis," Cairbar came and ſaid, "take, Braſſolis, this ſhield of blood. Fix it on high within my hall, the armour of my foe." Her ſoft heart beat againſt her ſide. Diſtracted, pale, ſhe flew. She found her youth in all his blood? ſhe died on Cromla's heath. Here reſts their duſt, Cuchullin; and theſe two lonely yews, ſprung from their tombs, wiſh to meet on high. Fair was Braſſolis on the plain, and Grudar on the hill. The bard ſhall preſerve their names, and repeat them to future times."

"Pleaſant is thy voice, O Carril," ſaid the blue-eyed chief of Erin. "Lovely are the words of other times. They are like the calm ſhower[u] of ſpring, when the ſun looks on the field, and the light cloud flies over the hills. Strike the harp in praiſe of my love, the lonely ſun-beam of Dunſcaich. Strike the harp in the praiſe of Bragela, [v] of her that I left in the iſle of Miſt, the ſpouſe of Semo's ſon. Doſt thou raiſe thy fair face from the rock to find the ſails of Cuchullin? The ſea is rolling far diſtant, and its white foam ſhall deceive thee for my ſails. Retire, for it is night, my love, and the dark winds ſigh in thy hair. Retire to the halls of my feaſts, and think of the times that are paſt: for I will not return till the ſtorm of war is ceaſed. O Connal, ſpeak of wars and arms, and ſend her from my mind, for lovely with her raven-hair is the white boſomed daughter of Sorglan."

Connal, ſlow to ſpeak, replied, "Guard againſt the race of Ocean. Send thy troop of night abroad, and watch the ſtrength of Swaran. Cuchullin! I am for peace till the race of the deſart come; till Fingal come the firſt of men, and beam, like the ſun, on our fields."

The hero ſtruck the ſhield of his alarms; the warriors of the night moved on. The reſt lay in the heath of the deer, and ſlept amidſt the duſky wind. The ghoſts[w] of the lately dead were near, and ſwam on gloomy clouds. And far diſtant, in the dark ſilence of Lena, the feeble voices were heard.

THE ARGUMENT.

The ghoſt of Crugal, one of the Iriſh heroes who was killed in battle, appearing to Connal, foretels the defeat of Cuchullin in the next battle; and earneſtly adviſes him to make peace with Swaran. Connal communicates the viſion; but Cuchullin is inflexible; from a principle of honour he would not be the firſt to ſue for peace, and he reſolved to continue the war. Morning comes; Swaran propoſes diſhonourable terms to Cuchullin, which are rejected. The battle begins, and is obſtinately fought for ſome time, until, upon the flight of Grumal, the whole Iriſh army gave way. Cuchullin and Connal cover their retreat: Carril leads them to a neighbouring hill, whither they are ſoon followed by Cuchullin himſelf, who deſcries the fleet of Fingal making towards the coaſt; but, night coming on, he loſt ſight of it again. Cuchullin, dejected after his defeat, attributes his ill ſucceſs to the death of Ferda his friend, whom he had killed ſome time before. Carril, to ſhew that ill ſucceſs did not always attend thoſe who innocently killed their friends, introduces the epiſode of Comal and Galvina.

FINGAL:

AN ANCIENT EPIC POEM.

CONNAL [a] lay by the ſound of the mountain ſtream, beneath the aged tree. A ſtone, with its moſs, ſupported his head. Shrill through the heath of Lena, he heard the voice of night. At a diſtance from the heroes he lay, for the ſon of the ſword feared no foe.

My hero ſaw in his reſt a dark-red ſtream of fire coming down from the hill. Crugal ſat upon the beam, a chief that lately fell. He fell by the hand of Swaran, ſtriving in the battle of heroes. His face is like the beam of the ſetting moon; his robes are of the clouds of the hill: his eyes are like two decaying flames. Dark is the wound of his breaſt.

"Crugal," ſaid the mighty Connal, "ſon of Dedgal famed on the hill of deer. Why ſo pale and ſad, thou breaker of the ſhields? Thou haſt never been pale for fear. What diſturbs the ſon of the hill?"

Dim, and in tears, he ſtood and ſtretched his pale hand over the hero. Faintly he raiſed his feeble voice, like the gate of the reedy Lego.

"My ghoſt, O Connal, is on my native hills; but my corſe is on the ſands of Ullin. Thou ſhalt never talk with Crugal, or find his lone ſteps in the heath. I am light as the blaſt of Cromla, and I move like the ſhadow of miſt. Connal, ſon of Colgar,[b] I ſee the dark cloud of death: it hovers over the plains of Leno. The ſons of green Erin ſhall fall. Remove from the field of ghoſts," Like the darkened moon[c] he retired, in the midſt of the whiſtling blaſt.

"Stay," ſaid the mighty Connal, "ſtay my dark-red friend. Lay by that beam of heaven, ſon of the windy Cromla. What cave of the hill is thy lonely houſe? What green-headed hill is the place of thy reſt? Shall we not hear thee in the ſtorm? In the noiſe of the mountain ſtream? When the feeble ſons of the wind come forth, and ride on the blaſt of the deſart."

The ſoft-voiced Connal roſe in the midſt of his ſounding arms. He ſtruck his ſhield above Cuchullin. The ſon of battle waked.

"Why," ſaid the ruler of the car, "comes Connal through the night? My ſpear might turn againſt the ſound? and Cuchullin mourn the death of his friend. Speak, Connal, ſon of Colgar, ſpeak, thy counſel is like the ſon of heaven."

"Son

"Son of Semo," replied the chief, "the ghoſt of Crugal came from the cave of his hill. The ſtars dim-twinkled through his form; and his voice was like the ſound of a diſtant ſtream. He is a meſſenger of death. He ſpeaks of the dark and narrow houſe. Sue for peace, O chief of Dunſcaich; or fly over the heath of Lena."

"He ſpoke to Connal," replied the hero, "though ſtars dim-twinkled through his form. Son of Colgar, it was the wind that murmured in the caves of Lena. Or if it was the form[d] of Crugal, why didſt thou not force him to my ſight. Haſt thou inquired where is his cave? The houſe of the ſon of the wind? My ſword might find that voice, and force his knowledge from him. And ſmall is his knowledge, Connal, for he was here to-day. He could not have gone beyond our hills, and who could tell him there of our death?"

"Ghoſts fly on clouds and ride on winds," ſaid Connal's voice of wiſdom. "They reſt together in their caves, and talk of mortal men."

"Then let them talk of mortal men; of every man but Erin's chief. Let me be forgot in their cave; for I will not fly from Swaran. If I muſt fall, my tomb ſhall riſe amidſt the fame of future times. The hunter ſhall ſhed a tear on my ſtone; and ſorrow dwell round the high-boſomed Bragela.

I fear not death, but I fear to fly, for Fingal ſaw me often victorious. Thou dim phantom of the hill, ſhew thyſelf to me! come on thy beam of heaven, and ſhew me my death in thine hand; yet will I not fly, thou feeble ſon of the wind. Go, ſon of Colgar, ſtrike the ſhield of Caithbat, it hangs between the ſpears. Let my heroes riſe to the ſound in the midſt of the battles of Erin. Though Fingal delays his coming with the race of ſtormy hills; we ſhall fight, O Colgar's ſon, and die in the battle of heroes."

The ſound ſpreads wide; the heroes riſe, like the breaking of a blue-rolling wave. They ſtood on the heath, like oaks with all their branches round them [c]; when they echo to the ſtream of froſt, and their withered leaves ruſtle to the wind.

High Cromla's head of clouds is gray; the morning trembles on the half-enlightened ocean. The blue, gray miſt ſwims ſlowly by, and hides the ſons of Innis-fail.

"Riſe ye," ſaid the king of the dark-brown ſhields, "ye that come from Lochlin's waves. The ſons of Erin have fled from our arms—purſue them over the plains of Lena. And Morla, go to Cormac's hall and bid them yield to Swaran; before the people ſhall fall into the tomb; and the hills of Ullin be ſilent. They roſe like a flock of ſea-fowl ſea-fowl when the waves expel them from the ſhore." Their ſound was like a thouſand ſtreams that meet in Cona's vale, when after a ſtormy night, they turn their dark eddies beneath the pale light of the morning.

As the dark ſhades of autumn fly over the hills of graſs; ſo gloomy, dark, ſucceſſive came the chiefs of Lochlin's echoing woods. Tall as the ſtag of Morven moved on the king of groves. His ſhining ſhield is on his ſide like a flame on the heath at night, when the world is ſilent and dark, and the traveller ſees ſome ghoſt ſporting in the beam.

A blaſt from the troubled ocean removed the ſettled miſt. The ſons of Innis-fail appear like a ridge of rocks on the ſhore.

"Go, Morla, go," ſaid Lochlin's king, "and offer peace to theſe. Offer the terms we give to kings when nations bow before us. When the valiant are dead in war, and the virgins weeping on the field."

Great Morla came, the ſon of Swart, and ſtately ſtrode the king of ſhields. He ſpoke to Erin's blue-eyed ſon, among the leſſer heroes.

"Take Swaran's peace," the warrior ſpoke, "the peace he gives to kings, when the nation bow before him. Leave Ullin's lovely plains to us, and give thy ſpouſe and day. Thy ſpouſe high-high-boſom'd heaving fair. Thy dog that overtakes the wind. Give theſe to prove the weakneſs of thine arm, and live beneath our power."

"Tell Swaran, tell that heart of pride, that Cuchullin never yields. I give him the dark-blue rolling of ocean, or I give his people graves in Erin! Never ſhall a ſtranger have the lovely ſun-beam of Dunſcaich; nor ever deer fly on Lochlin's hills before the nimble-footed Luath."

"Vain ruler of the car," ſaid Morla, "wilt thou fight the king; that king whoſe ſhips of many groves could carry off thine Iſle? So little is thy green-hilled Ullin to the king of ſtormy waves."

"In words I yield to many, Morla; but this ſword ſhall yield to none. Erin ſhall own the ſway of Cormac, while Connal and Cuchullin live. O Connal, firſt of mighty men, thou haſt heard the words of Morla; ſhall thy thoughts then be of peace, thou breaker of the ſhields? Spirit of fallen Crugal! why didſt thou threaten us with death! The narrow houſe ſhall receive me in the midſt of the light of renown. Exalt, ye ſons of Innis-fail, exalt the ſpear and bend the bow; ruſh on the foe in darkneſs, as the ſpirits of ſtormy nights."

Then diſmal, roaring, fierce, and deep the gloom of battle rolled along; as miſt [f] that is pour'd on the

the valley, when ſtorms invade the ſilent ſun-ſhine of heaven. The chief moves before in arms, like an angry ghoſt before a cloud; when meteors incloſe him with fire; and the dark winds are in his hand. Carril, far on the heath, bids the horn of battle ſound. He raiſes the voice of the ſong, and pours his ſoul into the minds of heroes.

"Where," ſaid the mouth of the ſong, "where is the fallen Crugal? He lies forgot on earth, and the hall of ſhells [g] is ſilent. Sad is the ſpouſe of Crugal, for ſhe is a ſtranger [h] in the hall of her ſorrow. But who is ſhe, that, like a ſun-beam, flies before the ranks of the foe? It is Degrena [i], lovely fair, the ſpouſe of fallen Crugal. Her hair is on the wind behind. Her eye is red; her voice is ſhrill. Green, empty is thy Crugal now, his form is in the cave of the hill. He comes to the ear of reſt, and raiſes his feeble voice; like the humming of the mountain-bee, or collected flies of evening. But Degrena falls like a cloud of the morn; the ſword of Lochlin is in her ſide. Cairbar, ſhe is fallen, the riſing thought of thy youth. She is fallen, O Cairbar, the thought of thy youthful hours."

Fierce Cairbar heard the mournful ſound, and ruſhed on like ocean's whale; he ſaw the death of his daughter; and roared in the midſt of thouſands ſands [k]. His ſpear met a ſon of Lochlin, and battle ſpread from wing to wing. As a hundred winds in Lochlin's groves, as fire in the firs of a hundred hills; ſo loud, ſo ruinous and vaſt the ranks of men are hewed down. Cuchullin cut off heroes like thiſtles, and Swaran waſted Erin. Curach fell by his hand, and Cairbar of the boſſy ſhield. Morglan lies in laſting reſt; and Ca-olt quivers as he dies. His white breaſt is ſtained with his blood: and his yellow hair ſtretched in the duſt of his native land. He often had ſpread the feaſt where he fell; and often raiſed the voice of the harp: when his dogs leapt around for joy; and the youths of the chaſe prepared the bow.

Still Swaran advanced, as a ſtream that burſts from the deſart. The little hills are rolled in its courſe; and the rocks half-ſunk by its ſide. But Cuchullin ſtood before him like a hill [l], that catches the clouds of heaven. The winds contend on its head of pines; and the hail rattles on its rocks. But, firm in its ſtrength, it ſtands and ſhades the ſilent vale of Cona.

So Cuchullin ſhaded the ſons of Erin, and ſtood in the midſt of thouſands. Blood riſes like the fount of a rock, from panting heroes around him. But Erin falls on either wing like ſnow in the day of the ſun.

O ſons

"O ſons of Innis-fail," ſaid Grumal, "Lochlin conquers on the field. Why ſtrive we as reeds againſt the wind! Fly to the hill of dark-brown hinds." He fled like the ſtag of Morven, and his ſpear is a trembling beam of light behind him. Few fled with Grumal, the chief of the little ſoul: they fell in the battle of heroes on Lena's echoing heath.

High on his car, of many gems, the chief of Erin ſtood; he ſlew a mighty ſon of Lochlin, and ſpoke, in haſte, to Connal. "O Connal, firſt of mortal men, thou haſt taught this arm of death! Though Erin's ſons have fled, ſhall we not fight the foe? O Carril, ſon of other times, carry my living friends to that buſhy hill. Here, Connal, let us ſtand like rocks, and ſave our flying friends."

Connal mounts the car of light. They ſtretch their ſhields like the darkened moon? the daughter of the ſtarry ſkies, when ſhe moves, a dun circle, through heaven. Sithfadda panted up the hill, and Dunſronnal haughty ſteed. Like waves behind a whale, behind them ruſhed the foe.

Now on the riſing ſide of Cromla ſtood Erin's few ſad ſons; like a grove through which the flame had ruſhed, hurried on by the winds of the ſtormy night. Cuchullin ſtood beſide an oak. He rolled his red eye in ſilence, and heard the wind in his buſhy hair; when the ſcout of ocean came,

Moran the ſon of Fithil. "The ſhips," he cried, "the ſhips of the lonely iſle! There Fingal comes, the firſt of men, the breaker of the ſhields. The waves foam before his black prows. His maſts with ſails are like groves in clouds.

"Blow," ſaid Cuchullin, "all ye winds that ruſh over my iſle of lovely miſt. Come to the death of thouſands, O chief of the hills of hinds. Thy ſails, my friend, are to me like the clouds of the morning; and thy ſhips like the light of heaven; and thou thyſelf like a pillar of fire that giveth light in the night. O Connal, firſt of men, how pleaſant are our friends! But the night is gathering around; where now are the ſhips of Fingal? Here let us paſs the hours of darkneſs, and wiſh for the moon of heaven."

The winds came down on the woods. The torrents ruſhed from the rocks. Rain gathered round the head of Cromla; and the red ſtars trembled between the flying clouds. Sad, by the ſide of a ſtream whoſe ſound was echoed by a tree, ſad by the ſide of a ſtream the chief of Erin ſat. Connal ſon of Colgar was there, and Carril of other times.

"Unhappy is the hand of Cuchullin," ſaid the ſon of Semo, "unhappy is the hand of Cuchullin ſince he ſlew his friend. Ferda, thou ſon of Damman, I loved thee as myſelf."

"How,

" How, Cuchullin, ſon of Semo, fell the breaker of the ſhields? Well I remember," ſaid Connal, " the noble ſon of Damman. Tall and fair he was like the rain-bow of the hill."

" Ferda from Albion came, the chief of a hundred hills. In Muri's[m] hall he learned the ſword, and won the friendſhip of Cuchullin. We moved to the chaſe together; and one was our bed in the heath.

" Deugala was the ſpouſe of Cairbar, chief of the plains of Ullin. She was covered with the light of beauty, but her heart was the houſe of pride. She loved that ſun-beam of youth, the noble ſon of Damman." " Cairbar," ſaid the white armed woman, " give me half of the herd. No more I will remain in your halls. Divide the herd, dark Cairbar."

" Let Cuchullin," ſaid Cairbar, " divide my herd on the hill. His breaſt is the ſeat of juſtice. Depart thou light of beauty." I went and divided the herd. One ſnow-white bull remained. I gave that bull to Cairbar. The wrath of Deugala roſe.

" Son of Damman," begun the fair, " Cuchullin pains my ſoul. I muſt hear of his death, or Lubar's ſtream ſhall over me. My pale ghoſt ſhall wander near thee, and mourn the wound of my pride. Pour out the blood of Cuchullin or pierce this heaving breaſt."

"Deugala," ſaid the fair-haired youth, "how ſhall I ſlay the ſon of Semo? He is the friend of my ſecret thoughts, and ſhall I lift the ſword? She wept three days before him, on the fourth he conſented to fight.

"I will fight my friend, Deugala! but may I fall by his ſword. Could I wander on the hill and behold the grave of Cuchullin?" We fought on the hills of Muri. Our ſwords avoid a wound. They ſlide on the helmets of ſteel; and ſound on the ſlippery ſhields. Deugala was near with a ſmile, and ſaid to the ſon of Damman: "Thine arm is feeble, thou ſun-beam of youth. Thy years are not ſtrong for ſteel. Yield to the ſon of Semo. He is like the rock of Malmor."

"The tear is in the eye of youth. He, faultering ſaid, to me: "Cuchullin, raiſe thy boſſy ſhield. Defend thee from the hand of thy friend. My ſoul is laden with grief: for I muſt ſlay the chief of men."

I ſighed as the wind in the chink of a rock. I lifted high the edge of my ſteel. The ſun beam of the battle fell; the firſt of Cuchullin's friends.

Unhappy is the hand of Cuchullin ſince the hero fell.

"Mournful

"Mournful is thy tale, ſon of the car," ſaid Carril of other times. "It ſends my ſoul back to the ages of old, and to the days of other years. Often have I heard of Comal who ſlew the friend he loved; yet victory attended his ſteel; and the battle was conſumed in his preſence.

"Comal was a ſon of Albion; the chief of an hundred hills. His deer drunk of a thouſand ſtreams. A thouſand rocks replied to the voice of his dogs. His face was the mildneſs of youth. His hand the death of heroes. One was his love, and fair was ſhe! the daughter of mighty Conloch. She appeared like a ſun-beam among women. And her hair was like the wing of the raven. Her dogs were taught to the chaſe. Her bow-ſtring ſounded on the winds of the foreſt. Her ſoul was fixed on Comal. Often met their eyes of love. Their courſe in the chaſe was one, and happy were their words in ſecret. But Gormal loved the maid, the dark chief of the gloomy Ardven. He watched her lone ſteps in the heath; the foe of unhappy Comal.

"One day, tired of the chaſe, when the miſt had concealed their friends, Comal and the daughter of Conloch met in the cave of Ronan[n]. It was the wonted haunt of Comal. Its ſides were hung hung with his arms. A hundred ſhields of thongs were there; a hundred helms of ſounding ſteel."

"Reſt here," he ſaid, "my love Galvina; thou light of the cave of Ronan. A deer appears on Mora's brow. I go; but I will ſoon return." "I fear," ſhe ſaid, "dark Grumal my foe; he haunts the cave of Ronan. I will reſt among the arms; but ſoon return, my love."

"He went to the deer of Mora. The daughter of Conloch would try his love. She clothed her white ſides with his armour, and ſtrode from the cave of Ronan. He thought it was his foe. His heart beat high. His colour changed, and darkneſs dimmed his eye. He drew the bow. The arrow flew. Galvina fell in blood. He run with wildneſs in his ſteps and called the daughter of Conloch. No anſwer in the lonely rock." "Where art thou, O my love!" He ſaw at length, her heaving heart beating around the feathered dart. "O Conloch's daughter, is it thou?"—He ſunk upon her breaſt.

"The hunters found the hapleſs pair; he afterwards walked the hill. But many and ſilent were his ſteps round the dark dwelling of his love. The fleet of the ocean came. He fought; the ſtrangers fled. He ſearched for his death over the field. But who could kill the mighty Comal! He threw away away his dark-brown ſhield. An arrow found his manly breaſt. He ſleeps with his loved Galvina at the noiſe of the ſounding ſurge. Their green tombs are ſeen by the mariner, when he bounds on the waves of the north."

AN ANCIENT EPIC POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

Cuchullin, pleaſed with the ſtory of Carril, inſiſts with that bard for more of his ſongs. He relates the actions of Fingal in Lochlin, and death of Agandecca the beautiful ſiſter of Swaran. He had ſcarce finiſhed, when Calmar the ſon of Matha, who had adviſed the firſt battle, came wounded from the field, and told them of Swaran's deſign to ſurpriſe the remains of the Iriſh army. He himſelf propoſes to withſtand ſingly the whole force of the enemy, in a narrow paſs, till the Iriſh ſhould make good their retreat. Cuchullin, touched with the gallant propoſal of Calmar, reſolves to accompany him, and orders Carril to carry off the few that remained of the Iriſh. Morning comes, Calmar dies of his wounds; and, the ſhips of the Caledonians appearing, Swaran gives over the purſuit of the Iriſh, and returns to oppoſe Fingal's landing. Cuchullin aſhamed, after his defeat, to appear before Fingal, retires to the cave of Tura. Fingal engages the enemy, puts them to flight; but the coming on of night makes the victory not deciſive. The king, who had obſerved the gallant behaviour of his grandſon Oſcar, gives him advices concerning his conduct in peace and war. He recommends to him to place the example of his fathers before his eyes, as the beſt model for his conduct; which introduces the epiſode concerning Fainaſol-lis,

lis, the daughter of the king of Craca, whom Fingal had taken under his protection, in his youth. Fillan and Oscar are dispatched to observe the motions of the enemy by night; Gaul the son of Morni desires the command of the army, in the next battle; which Fingal promises to give him. Some general reflections of the poet close the third day.

FINGAL:

AN ANCIENT EPIC POEM.

BOOK III.[a]

"PLEASANT are the words of the ſong," ſaid Cuchullin, "and lovely are the tales of other times. They are like the calm dew of the morning on the hill of roes, when the ſun is faint on its ſide, and the lake is ſettled and blue in the vale. O Carril, raiſe again thy voice, and let me hear the ſong of Tura: which was ſung in my halls of joy, when Fingal king of ſhields was there, and glowed at the deeds of his fathers."

"Fingal! thou man of battle," ſaid Carril, "early were thy deeds in arms. Lochlin was conſumed in thy wrath, when thy youth ſtrove with the beauty of maids. They ſmiled at the fair-blooming face of the hero; but death was in his hands. He was ſtrong as the waters of Lora. His followers were like the roar of a thouſand ſtreams. They took the king of Lochlin in battle, but reſtored him to his ſhips. His big heart ſwelled with pride; and the death of the youth was dark in his ſoul. For none ever, but Fingal, overcame the ſtrength of the mighty Starno [b].

"He ſat in the halls of his ſhells in Lochlin's woody land. He called the gray-haired Snivan, that often ſung round the circle [c] of Loda: when the ſtone of power heard his cry, and the battle turned in the field of the valiant.

"Go, gray-haired Snivan," Starno ſaid, "go to Ardven's ſea-ſurrounded rocks. Tell to Fingal king of the deſart; he that is the faireſt among his thouſands, tell him I give him my daughter, the loveliеſt maid that ever heaved a breaſt of ſnow. Her arms are white as the foam of my waves. Her ſoul is generous and mild. Let him come with his braveſt heroes to the daughter of the ſecret hall."

Snivan came to Albion's windy hills: and fair-haired Fingal went. His kindled ſoul flew before him as he bounded on the waves of the north.

"Welcome," ſaid the dark-brown Starno, "welcome, king of rocky Morven; and ye his heroes of might; ſons of the lonely iſle! Three days within my halls ſhall ye feaſt; and three days purſue my boars, that your fame may reach the maid that dwells in the ſecret hall."

"The king of ſnow [d] deſigned their death, and gave the feaſt of ſhells. Fingal, who doubted the foe, kept on his arms of ſteel. The ſons of death were afraid, and fled from the eyes of the hero. The

The voice of ſprightly mirth aroſe. The trembling harps of joy are ſtrung. Bards ſing the battle of heroes; or the heaving breaſt of love. Ullin, Fingal's bard, was there; the ſweet voice of the hill of Cona. He praiſed the daughter of ſnow; and Morven's [e] high-deſcended chief. The daughter of ſnow overheard, and left the hall of her ſecret ſigh. She came in all her beauty, like the moon from the cloud of the eaſt. Lovelineſs was around her as light. Her ſteps were like the muſic of ſongs. She ſaw the youth and loved him. He was the ſtolen ſigh of her ſoul. Her blue eye rolled on him in ſecret: and ſhe bleſt the chief of Morven.

"The third day, with all its beams, ſhone bright on the wood of boars. Forth moved the dark-browed Starno; and Fingal, king of ſhields. Half the day they ſpent in the chaſe; and the ſpear of Fingal was red in the blood of Gormal [f].

"It was then the daughter of Starno, with blue eyes rolling in tears, came with her voice of love, and ſpoke to the king of Morven.

"Fingal, high-deſcended chief, truſt not Starno's heart of pride. Within that wood he has placed his chiefs; beware of the wood of death. But, remember, ſon of the hill, remember Agandecca; ſave me from the wrath of my father, king of the windy Morven!"

"The youth, with unconcern, went on; his heroes by his ſide. The ſons of death fell by his hand; and Gormal echoed around.

"Before the halls of Starno the ſons of the chaſe convened. The king's dark brows were like clouds. His eyes like meteors of night. "Bring hither," he cries, "Agandecca to her lovely king of Morven. His hand is ſtained with the blood of my people; and her words have not been in vain."

"She came with the red eye of tears. She came with her looſe raven locks. Her white breaſt heaved with ſighs, like the foam of the ſtreamy Lubar. Starno pierced her ſide with ſteel. She fell like a wreath of ſnow that ſlides from the rocks of Ronan; when the woods are ſtill, and the echo deepens in the vale.

"Then Fingal eyed his valiant chiefs, his valiant chiefs took arms. The gloom of the battle roared, and Lochlin fled or died. Pale, in his bounding ſhip he cloſed the maid of the raven hair. Her tomb aſcends on Ardven, and the ſea roars round the dark dwelling of Agandecca."

"Bleſſed be her ſoul," ſaid Cuchullin, "and bleſſed be the mouth of the ſong. Strong was the youth of Fingal, and ſtrong is his arm of age. Lochlin ſhall fall again before the king of echoing Morven. Shew thy face from a cloud, O moon; light light his white ſails on the wave of the night. And if any ſtrong ſpirit [s] of heaven ſits on that low-hung cloud; turn his dark ſhips from the rock, thou rider of the ſtorm!"

Such were the words of Cuchullin at the ſound of the mountain-ſtream; when Calmar aſcended the hill, the wounded ſon of Matha. From the field he came in his blood. He leaned on his bending ſpear. Feeble is the arm of battle! but ſtrong the ſoul of the hero!

"Welcome! O ſon of Matha," ſaid Connal, "welcome art thou to thy friends! Why burſts that broken ſigh from the breaſt of him that never feared before?"

"And never, Connal, will he fear, chief of the pointed ſteel. My ſoul brightens in danger, and exults in the noiſe of battle. I am of the race of ſteel; my fathers never feared.

"Cormar was the firſt of my race. He ſported through the ſtorms of the waves. His black ſkiff bounded on the ocean; and travelled on the wings of the blaſt. A ſpirit once embroiled the night. Seas ſwell and rocks reſound. Winds drive along the clouds. The lightning flies on wings of fire. He feared, and came to land; then bluſhed that he feared at all. He ruſhed again among the waves to find the ſon of the wind. Three youths guide guide the boundlng bark; he ſtood with the ſword unſheathed. When the low-hung vapour paſſed, he took it by the curling head, aud ſearched its dark womb with his ſteel. The ſon of the wind forſook the air. The moon and ſtars returned.

"Such was the boldneſs of my race; and Calmar is like his fathers. Danger flies from the uplifted ſword. They beſt ſucceed who dare."

"But now, ye ſons of green-valley'd Erin, retire from Lena's bloody heath. Collect the ſad remnant of our friends, and join the ſword of Fingal. I heard the ſound of Lochlin's advancing arms; but Calmar will remain and fight. My voice ſhall be ſuch, my friends, as if thouſands were behind me. But, ſon of Semo, remember me. Remember Calmar's lifeleſs corſe. After Fingal has waſted the field, place me by ſome ſtone of remembrance, that future times may hear my fame; and the mother [h] of Calmar rejoice over the ſtone of my renown."

"No: ſon of Matha," ſaid Cuchullin, "I will never leave thee. My joy is in the unequal field: my ſoul increaſes in danger. Connal, and Carril of other times, carry off the ſad ſons of Erin; and when the battle is over, ſearch for our pale corſes in this narrow way. For near this oak we ſhall ſtand in the ſtream of the battle of thouſands. O Fithil's Fithil's ſon, with feet of wind, fly over the heath of Lena. Tell to Fingal that Erin is inthralled, and bid the king of Morven haſten. O let him come like the ſun in a ſtorm, when he ſhines on the hills of graſs."

Morning is gray on Cromla; the ſons of the ſea aſcend. Calmar ſtood forth to meet them in the pride of his kindling ſoul. But pale was the face of the warrior; he leaned on his father's ſpear. That ſpear which he brought from Lara's hall, when the ſoul of his mother was ſad. But ſlowly now the hero falls, like a tree on the plains of Cona. Dark Cuchullin ſtands alone like a rock [i] in a ſandy vale. The ſea comes with its waves, and roars on its hardened ſides. Its head is covered with foam, and the hills are echoing around. Now from the gray miſt of the ocean, the white-ſailed ſhips of Fingal appear. High is the grove of their maſts as they nod, by turns, on the rolling wave.

Swaran ſaw them from the hill, and returned from the ſons of Erin. As ebbs the reſounding ſea, through the hundred iſles of Iniſtore; ſo loud, ſo vaſt, ſo immenſe returned the ſons of Lochlin againſt the king of the deſart hill. But bending, weeping, ſad, and ſlow, and dragging his long ſpear behind, Cuchullin ſunk in Cromla's wood, and mourned his fallen friends. He feared the face of Fingal, who was wont to greet him from the fields of renown.

"How many lie there of my heroes! the chiefs of Innis-fail! they that were cheerful in the hall, when the ſound of the ſhells aroſe. No more ſhall I find their ſteps in the heath, or hear their voice in the chaſe of the hinds. Pale, ſilent, low on bloody beds are they who were my friends! O ſpirits of the lately dead, meet Cuchullin on his heath. Converſe with him on the wind, when the ruſtling tree of Tura's cave reſounds. There, far remote, I ſhall lie unknown. No bard ſhall hear of me. No gray ſtone ſhall riſe to my renown. Mourn me with the dead, O Bragela! departed is my fame."

Such were the words of Cuchullin, when he ſunk in the woods of Cromla.

Fingal, tall in his ſhip, ſtretched his bright lance before him. Terrible was the gleam of the ſteel: it was like the green meteor of death, ſetting in the heath of Malmor, when the traveller is alone, and the broad moon is darkened in heaven.

"The battle is over," ſaid the king, "and I behold the blood of my friends. Sad is the heath of Lena! and mournful the oaks of Cromla. The hunters have fallen there in their ſtrength; and the the ſon of Semo is no more. Ryno and Fillan, my ſons, found the horn of Fingal's war. Aſcend that hill on the ſhore, and call the children of the foe. Call them from the grave of Lamdarg, the chief of other times. Be your voice like that of your father, when he enters the battles of his ſtrength. I wait for the dark mighty man: I wait on Lena's ſhore for Swaran. And let him come with all his race; for ſtrong in battle are the friends of the dead."

Fair Ryno flew like lightning; dark Fillan as the ſhade of autumn. On Lena's heath their voice is heard; the ſons of ocean heard the horn of Fingal's war. As the roaring eddy of ocean returning from the kingdom of ſnows; ſo ſtrong, ſo dark, ſo ſudden came down the ſons of Lochlin. The king in their front appears in the diſmal pride of his arms. Wrath burns in his dark-brown face: and his eyes roll in the fire of his valour.

Fingal beheld the ſon of Starno; and he remembered Agandecca. For Swaran with the tears of youth had mourned his white-boſomed ſiſter. He ſent Ullin of the ſongs to bid him to the feaſt of ſhells. For pleaſant on Fingal's ſoul returned the remembrance of the firſt of his loves.

Ullin came with aged ſteps, and ſpoke to Starno's ſon. "O thou that dwelleſt afar, ſurround-ed, like a rock, with thy waves, come to the feaſt of the king, and paſs the day in reſt. To-morrow, let us fight, O Swaran, and break the echoing ſhields."

"To day," ſaid Starno's wrathful ſon, "we break the echoing ſhields: to-morrow my feaſt will be ſpread; and Fingal lie on earth."

"And, to-morrow, let his feaſt be ſpread," ſaid Fingal with a ſmile; "for, to-day, O my ſons, we ſhall break the echoing ſhields. Oſſian, ſtand thou near my arm. Gaul, lift thy terrible ſword. Fergus, bend thy crooked yew. Throw, Fillan, thy lance through heaven.—Lift your ſhields like the the darkened moon. Be your ſpears the meteors of death. Follow me in the path of my fame; and equal my deeds in battle."

As a hundred winds on Morven; as the ſtreams of a hundred hills; as clouds fly ſucceſſive over heaven; or, as the dark ocean aſſaults the ſhore of the deſart: ſo roaring, ſo vaſt, ſo terrible the armies mixed on Lena's echoing heath. The groan of the people ſpread over the hills; it was like the thunder of night, when the cloud burſts on Cona; and a thouſand ghoſts ſhriek at once on the hollow wind.

Fingal ruſhed on in his ſtrength, terrible as the ſpirit of Trenmor; when, in a whirlwind, he comes to

to Morven to ſee the children of his pride. The oaks reſound on their hills, and the rocks fall down before him. Bloody was the hand of my father when he whirled the lightning of his ſword. He remembers the battles of his youth, and the field is waſted in his courſe.

Ryno went on like a pillar of fire. Dark is the brow of Gaul. Fergus ruſhed forward with feet of wind; and Fillan like the miſt of the hill. Myſelf [k], like a rock, came down, I exulted in the ſtrength of the king. Many were the deaths of my arm; and diſmal was the gleam of my ſword. My locks were not then ſo gray; nor trembled my hands of age. My eyes were not cloſed in darkneſs; nor failed my feet in the race.

Who can relate the deaths of the people; or the deeds of mighty heroes; when Fingal, burning in his wrath, conſumed the ſons of Lochlin? Groans ſwelled on groans, from hill to hill, till night had covered all. Pale, ſtaring like a herd of deer, the ſons of Lochlin convene on Lena.

We ſat and heard the ſprightly harp at Lubar's gentle ſtream. Fingal himſelf was next to the foe; and liſtened to the tales of bards. His godlike race were in the ſong, the chiefs of other times. Attentive, leaning on his ſhield, the king of Morven ſat. The wind whiſtled through his aged locks, and his thoughts are of the days of other years. Near him, on his bending ſpear, my young, my lovely Oſcar ſtood. He admired the king of Morven: and his actions were ſwelling in his ſoul.

"Son of my ſon," begun the king, "O Oſcar, pride of youth, I ſaw the ſhining of thy ſword and gloried in my race. Purſue the glory of our fathers, and be what they have been; when Trenmor lived, the firſt of men, and Trathal the father of heroes. They fought the battle in their youth, and are the ſong of bards. O Oſcar! bend the ſtrong in arms: but ſpare the feeble hand. Be thou a ſtream of many tides againſt the foes of thy people; but like the gale that moves the graſs to thoſe who aſk thine aid. So Trenmor lived; ſuch Trathal was; and ſuch has Fingal been. My arm was the ſupport of the injured; and the weak reſted behind the lightning of my ſteel.

"Oſcar! I was young like thee, when lovely Fainaſollis came: that ſun-beam! that mild light of love! the daughter of Craca's [1] king! I then returned from Cona's heath, and few were in my train. A white-ſailed boat appeared far off; we ſaw it like a miſt that rode on ocean's blaſt. It ſoon approached; we ſaw the fair. Her white breaſt heaved with ſighs. The wind was in her looſe dark hair; her roſy cheek had tears. "Daughter ter of beauty," calm I ſaid, "what ſigh is in that breaſt? Can I, young as I am, defend thee, daughter of the ſea? My ſword is not unmatched in war, but dauntleſs is my heart."

"To thee I fly," with ſighs ſhe replied, "O chief of mighty men! To thee I fly, chief of ſhells, ſupporter of the feeble hand! The King of Craca's echoing iſle owned me the ſun-beam of his race. And often did the hills of Cromla reply to the ſighs of love for the unhappy Fainaſollis. Sora's chief beheld me fair; and loved the daughter of Craca. His ſword is like a beam of light upon the warrior's ſide. But dark is his brow; and tempeſts are in his ſoul. I ſhun him on the rolling ſea; but Sora's chief purſues."

"Reſt thou," I ſaid, "behind my ſhield; reſt in peace, thou beam of light! The gloomy chief of Sora will fly, if Fingal's arm is like his ſoul. In ſome lone cave I might conceal thee, daughter of the ſea! But Fingal never flies; for where the danger threatens, I rejoice in the ſtorm of ſpears." I ſaw the tears upon her cheek. I pitied Craca's fair.

Now, like a dreadful wave afar, appeared the ſhip of ſtormy Borbar. His maſts high-bended over the ſea behind their ſheets of ſnow. White roll the waters on either ſide. The ſtrength of o-

ceaii ſounds. "Come thou," I ſaid, "from the roar of ocean, thou rider of their ſtorm. Partake the feaſt within my hall. It is the houſe of ſtrangers." "The maid ſtood trembling by my ſide; he drew the bow: ſhe fell. "Unerring is thy hand," I ſaid, "but feeble was the foe." We fought, nor weak was the ſtrife of death: He ſunk beneath my ſword. We laid them in two tombs of ſtones; the unhappy children of youth.

Such have I been in my youth, O Oſcar; be thou like the age of Fingal. Never ſeek the battle, nor ſhun it when it comes. "Fillan and Oſcar of the dark-brown hair; ye children of the race; fly over the heath of roaring winds; and view the ſons of Lochlin. Far off I hear the noiſe of their fear, like the ſtorms of echoing Cona. Go; that they may not fly my ſword along the waves of the north. For many chiefs of Erin's race lie here on the dark bed of death. The children of the ſtorm are low; the ſons of echoing Cromla."

The heroes flew like two dark clouds; two dark clouds that are the chariots of ghoſts; when air's dark children come to frighten hapleſs men.

It was then that Gaul [m], the ſon of Morni, ſtood like a rock in the night. His ſpear is glittering to the ſtars; his voice like many ſtreams. "Son of battle," cried the chief, "O Fingal, king of ſhells! let let the bards of many ſongs ſooth Erin's friends to reſt. And, Fingal, ſheath thy ſword of death; and let thy people fight. We wither away without our fame; for our king is the only breaker of ſhields. When morning riſes on our hills, behold at a diſtance our deeds. Let Lochlin feel the ſword of Morni's ſon, that bards may ſing of me. Such was the cuſtom heretofore of Fingal's noble race. Such was thine own, thou king of ſwords, in battles of the ſpear."

"O ſon of Morni," Fingal replied, "I glory in thy fame. Fight; but my ſpear ſhall be near to aid thee in the midſt of danger. Raiſe, raiſe the voice, ſons of the ſong, and lull me into reſt. Here will Fingal lie amidſt the wind of night. And if thou, Agandecca, art near, among the children of thy land; if thou ſitteſt on a blaſt of wind among the high-ſhrowded maſts of Lochlin; come to my dreams [n], my fair one, and ſhew thy bright face to my ſoul."

Many a voice and many a harp in tuneful ſounds aroſe. Of Fingal's noble deeds they ſung, and of the noble race of the hero. And ſometimes on the lovely ſound was heard the name of the now mournful Oſſian.

Often have I fought, and often won in battles of the ſpear. But blind, and tearful, and forlorn

I now walk with little men. O Fingal, with thy race of battle I now behold thee not. The wild roes feed upon the green tomb of the mighty king of Morven. Bleſt be thy ſoul, thou king of ſwords, thou moſt renowned on the hills of Cona!

AN ANCIENT EPIC POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

The action of the poem being ſuſpended by night, Oſſian takes that opportunity to relate his own actions at the lake of Lego, and his courtſhip of Everallin, who was the mother of Oſcar, and had died ſome time before the expedition of Fingal into Ireland. Her ghoſt appears to him, and tells him that Oſcar, who had been ſent, the beginning of the night, to obſerve the enemy, was engaged with an advanced party, and almoſt overpowered. Oſſian relieves his ſon; and an alarm is given to Fingal of the approach of Swaran. The king riſes, calls his army together, and, as he had promiſed the preceding night, devolves the command on Gaul the ſon of Morni, while he himſelf, after charging his ſons to behave gallantly and defend his people, retires to a hill, from whence he could have a view of the battle. The battle joins; the poet relates Oſcar's great actions. But when Oſcar, in conjunction with his father, conquered in one wing, Gaul, who was attacked by Swaran in perſon, was on the point of retreating in the other. Fingal ſends Ullin his bard to encourage him with a war ſong, but notwithſtanding Swaran prevails; and Gaul and his army are obliged to give way. Fingal, deſcending from the hill, rallies them again; Swaran deſiſts from the purſuit, poſſeſſes himſelf of a riſing ground, reſtores the ranks, and waits the approach of Fingal. The king, having encouraged his men, gives the neceſſary orders, and renews the battle. Cuchullin, who, with his friend Connal, and Carril his bard, had retired to the cave of Tura, hearing the noiſe, came to the brow of the hill, which overlooked the field of battle, where he ſaw Fingal engaged with the enemy. He, being hindered by Connal from joining Fingal, who was himſelf upon the point of obtaining a complete victory, ſends Carril to congratulate that hero on his ſucceſs.

FINGAL:

AN ANCIENT EPIC POEM.

BOOK IV.[a]

WHO comes with her ſongs from the mountain, like the bow of the ſhowery Lena? It is the maid of the voice of love. The white-armed daughter of Toſcar. Often haſt thou heard my ſong, often given the tear of beauty. Doſt thou come to the battles of thy people? and to hear the actions of Oſcar? When ſhall I ceaſe to mourn, by the ſtreams of the echoing Cona? My years have paſſed away in battle, and my age is darkened with ſorrow.

Daughter of the hand of ſnow! I was not ſo mournful and blind; I was not ſo dark and forlorn, when Everallin loved me! Everallin with the dark-brown hair, the white-boſomed love of Cormac. A thouſand heroes fought the maid, ſhe denied her love to a thouſand; the ſons of the ſword were deſpiſed: for graceful in her eyes was Oſſian.

I went, in ſuit of the maid, to Lego's ſable ſurge; twelve of my people were there, the ſons of the ſtreamy Morven. We came to Branno, friend of ſtrangers: Branno of the ſounding mail. "From whence," whence," he ſaid, "are the arms of ſteel? Not eaſy to win is the maid, that has denied the blue-eyed ſons of Erin. But bleſt be thou, O ſon of Fingal. Happy is the maid that waits thee. Tho' twelve daughters of beauty were mine, thine were the choice, thou ſon of fame!" Then he opened the hall of the maid, the dark haired Everallin. Joy kindled in our breaſts of ſteel and bleſt the maid of Branno.

Above us on the hill appeared the people of ſtately Cormac. Eight were the heroes of the chief; and the heath flamed with their arms. There Colla, Durra of the wounds, there mighty Toſcar and Tago, there Freſtal the victorious ſtood; Dairo of the happy deeds, and Dala the battle's bulwark in the narrow way. The ſword flamed in the hand of Cormac, and graceful was the look of the hero.

Eight were the heroes of Oſſian; Ullin ſtormy ſon of war; Mullo of the generous deeds; the noble, the graceful Scelacha; Olgan, and Cerdal the wrathful, and Dumariccan's brows of death. And why ſhould Ogar be the laſt; ſo wide renowned on the hills of Ardven?

Ogar met Dala the ſtrong, face to face, on the field of heroes. The battle of the chiefs was like the wind on ocean's foamy waves. The dagger is remembered by Ogar; the weapon which he loved; nine times he drowned it in Dala's ſide. The ſtormy battle turned. Three times I pierced Cormac's ſhield: three times he broke his ſpear. But, unhappy youth of love! I cut his head away. Five times I ſhook it by the lock. The friends of Cormac fled.

Whoever would have told me, lovely maid [b] when then I ſtrove in battle; that blind, forſaken, and forlorn I now ſhould paſs the night; firm ought his mail to have been, and unmatched his arm in battle.

Now [c] on Lena's gloomy heath the voice of muſic died away. The inconſtant blaſt blew hard, and the high oak ſhook its leaves around me; of Everallin were my thoughts, when ſhe, in all the light of beauty, and her blue eyes rolling in tears, ſtood on a cloud before my ſight, and ſpoke with feeble voice.

"O Oſſian, riſe and ſave my ſon; ſave Oſcar chief of men, near the red oak of Lubar's ſtream, he fights with Lochlin's ſons." She ſunk into her cloud again. I clothed me with my ſteel. My ſpear ſupported my ſteps, and my rattling armour rung. I hummed, as I was wont in danger, the ſongs of heroes of old. Like diſtant thunder [d] Lochlin heard; they fled; my ſon purſued.

I called

I called him like a diſtant ſtream. "My ſon return over Lena. No further purſue the foe," I ſaid, "though Oſſian is behind thee." He came; and lovely in my ear was Oſcar's ſounding ſteel. "Why didſt thou ſtop my hand," he ſaid, "till death had covered all? For dark and dreadful by the ſtream they met thy ſon and Fillan. They watched the terrors of the night. Our ſwords have conquered ſome. But as the winds of night pour the ocean over the white ſands of Mora, ſo dark advance the ſons of Lochlin over Lena's ruſtling heath. The ghoſts of night ſhriek afar; and I have ſeen the meteors of death. Let me awake the king of Morven, he that ſmiles in danger; for he is like the ſon of heaven that riſes in a ſtorm."

Fingal had ſtarted from a dream, and leaned on Trenmor's ſhield; the dark-brown ſhield of his fathers; which they had lifted of old in the battles of their race. The hero had ſeen in his reſt the mournful form of Agandecca; ſhe came from the way of the ocean, and ſlowly, lonely, moved over Lena. Her face was pale like the miſt of Cromla; and dark were the tears of her cheek. She often raiſed her dim hand from her robe; her robe which was of the clouds of the deſart: ſhe raiſed raiſed her dim hand over Fingal, and turned away her ſilent eyes.

"Why weeps the daughter of Starno," ſaid Fingal, with a ſigh? "Why is thy face ſo pale, thou daughter of the clouds?" She departed on the wind of Lena; and left him in the midſt of the night. She mourned the ſons of her people that were to fall by Fingal's hand.

The hero ſtarted from reſt, and ſtill beheld her in his ſoul. The ſound of Oſcar's ſteps approached. The king ſaw the gray ſhield on his ſide. For the faint beam of the morning came over the waters of Ullin.

"What do the foes in their fear!" ſaid the riſing king of Morven. "Or fly they through ocean's foam, or wait they the battle of ſteel? But why ſhould Fingal aſk? I hear their voice on the early wind. Fly over Lena's heath, O Oſcar, and awake our friends to battle."

The king ſtood by the ſtone of Lubar; and thrice raiſed his terrible voice. The deer ſtarted from the fountains of Cromla; and all the rocks ſhook on their hills. Like the noiſe of a hundred mountain-ſtreams, that burſt, and roar, and foam; like the clouds that gather to a tempeſt on the blue face of the ſky; ſo met the ſons of the deſart, round the terrible voice of Fingal. For pleaſant was the voice of the king of Morven to the warriors of his land: often had he led them to battle, and returned with the ſpoils of the foe.

"Come to battle," ſaid the king, "ye children of the ſtorm, Come to the death of thouſands. Comhal's ſon will ſee the fight. My ſword ſhall wave on that hill, and be the ſhield of my people. But never may you need it, warriors; while the ſon of Morni fights, the chief of mighty men. He ſhall lead my battle; that his fame may riſe in the ſong. O ye ghoſts of heroes dead! ye riders of the ſtorm of Cromla! receive my falling people with joy, and bring them to your hills. And may the blaſt of Lena carry them over my ſeas, that they may come to my ſilent dreams, and delight my ſoul in reſt.

"Fillan and Oſcar, of the dark-brown hair, fair Ryno, with the pointed ſteel! advance with valour to the fight; and behold the ſon of Morni, Let your ſwords be like his in the ſtrife! and behold the deeds of his hands. Protect the friends of your father: and remember the chiefs of old. My children, I ſhall ſee you yet, though here ye ſhould fall in Erin. Soon ſhall our cold, pale ghoſts meet in a cloud, and fly over the hills of Cona."

Now

Now like a dark and ſtormy cloud, edged round with the red lightning of heaven, and flying weſtward from the morning's beam, the king of hills removed. Terrible is the light of his armour, and two ſpears are in his hand. His gray hair falls on the wind. He often looks back on the war. Three bards attend the ſon of fame, to carry his words to the heroes. High on Cromla's ſide he ſat, waving the lightning of his ſword, and as he waved we moved.

Joy roſe in Oſcar's face. His cheek is red. His eye ſheds tears. The ſword is a beam of fire in his hand. He came, and ſmiling, ſpoke to Oſſian "O ruler of the fight of ſteel! my father, hear thy ſon. Retire with Morven's mighty chief; and give me Oſſian's fame. And if here I fall; my king, remember that breaſt of ſnow, that lonely ſun-beam of my love, the white-handed daughter of Toſcar. For, with red cheek from the rock, and bending over the ſtream, her ſoft hair flies about her boſom, as ſhe pours the ſigh for Oſcar. Tell her I am on my hills a lightly-bounding ſon of the wind; that hereafter, in a cloud, I may meet the lovely maid of Toſcar."

"Raiſe, Oſcar, rather raiſe my tomb. I will not yield the fight to thee. For firſt and bloodieſt in the war my arm ſhall teach thee how to fight. But, remember, my ſon, to place this ſword, this bow, and the horn of my deer, within that dark and narrow houſe, whoſe mark is one gray ſtone. Oſcar, I have no love to leave to the care of my ſon; for graceful Everallin is no more, the lovely daughter of Branno."

Such were our words, when Gaul's loud voice came growing on the wind. He waved on high the ſword of his father, and ruſhed to death and wounds.

As waves white-bubbling over the deep come ſwelling, roaring on; as rocks of ooze meet roaring waves: ſo foes attacked and fought. Man met with man, and ſteel with ſteel. Shields ſound; men fall. As a hundred hammers on the ſon of the furnace, ſo roſe, ſo rung their ſwords.

Gaul ruſhed on like a whirlwind in Ardven. The deſtruction of heroes is on his ſword. Swaran was like the fire of the deſart in the echoing heath of Gormal. How can I give to the ſong the death of many ſpears? My ſword roſe high, and flamed in the ſtrife of blood. And, Oſcar, terrible wert thou, my beſt, my greateſt ſon! I rejoiced in my ſecret ſoul, when his ſword flamed over the ſlain. They fled amain through Lena's heath: and we purſued and ſlew. As ſtones that bound from rock to rock; as axes in echoing woods; as thunder rolls rolls from hill to hill in diſmal broken peals; ſo blow ſucceeded to blow, and death to death, from the hand of Oſcar [e] and mine.

But Swaran cloſed round Morni's ſon, as the ſtrength of the tide of Iniſtore. The king half-roſe from his hill at the fight, and half-aſſumed the ſpear. "Go, Ullin, go, my aged bard," begun the king of Morven. "Remind the mighty Gaul of battle; remind him of his fathers. Support the yielding fight with ſong; for ſong enlivens war." Tall Ullin went, with ſteps of age, and ſpoke to the king of ſwords.

"Son [f] of the chief of generous ſteeds! high-bounding king of ſpears. Strong arm in every perilous toil. Hard heart that never yields. Chief of the pointed arms of death. Cut down the foe; let no white ſail bound round dark Iniſtore. Be thine arm like thunder. Thine eyes like fire, thy heart of ſolid rock. Whirl round thy ſword as a meteor at night, and lift thy ſhield like the flame of death. Son of the chief of generous ſteeds, cut down the foe. Deſtroy." The hero's heart beat high. But Swaran came with battle. He cleft the ſhield of Gaul in twain; and the ſons of the deſart fled.

Now Fingal aroſe in his might, and thrice he reared his voice. Cromla anſwered around, and the the ſons of the deſart ſtood ſtill. They bent their red faces to the earth, aſhamed at the preſence of Fingal. He came like a cloud of rain in the days of the ſun, when ſlow it rolls on the hill, and fields expect the ſhower. Swaran beheld the terrible king of Morven, and ſtopped in the midſt of his courſe. Dark he leaned on his ſpear, rolling his red eyes around. Silent and tall he ſeemed as an oak on the banks of Lubar, which had its branches blaſted of old by the lightning of heaven. It bends over the ſtream, and the gray moſs whiſtles in the wind: ſo ſtood the king. Then ſlowly he retired to the riſing heath of Lena. His thouſands pour around the hero, and the darkneſs of battle gathers on the hill.

Fingal, like a beam from heaven, ſhone in the midſt of his people. His heroes gather around him, and he ſends forth the voice of his power. "Raiſe my ſtandards [g] on high. Spread them on Lena's wind, like the flames of an hundred hills. Let them ſound on the winds of Erin, and remind us of the fight. Ye ſons of the roaring ſtreams, that pour from a thouſand hills, be near the king of Morven: attend to the words of his power. Gaul, ſtrongeſt arm of death! O Oſcar, of the future fights; Connal, ſon of the blue ſteel of Sora; Dermid mid of the dark-brown hair, Offian king of many ſongs, be near your father's arm."

We reared the ſun-beam [h] of battle; the ſtandard of the king. Each hero's ſoul exulted with joy, as, waving, it flew on the wind. It was ſtudded with gold above, as the blue wide ſhell of the nightly ſky. Each hero had his ſtandard too; and each his gloomy men.

"Behold," ſaid the king of generous ſhells, "how Lochlin divides on Lena. They ſtand like broken clouds on the hill, or an half conſumed grove of oaks; when we ſee the ſky through its branches, and the meteor paſſing behind. Let every chief among the friends of Fingal take a dark troop of thoſe that frown ſo high; nor let a ſon of the echoing groves bound on the waves of Iniſtore."

"Mine," ſaid Gaul, "be the ſeven chiefs that came from Lano's lake." "Let Iniſtore's dark king," ſaid Oſcar, "come to the ſword of Offian's ſon." "To mine the king of Iniſcon," ſaid Connal, "heart of ſteel!" "Or Mudan's chief or I," ſaid brown-haired Dermid, "ſhall ſleep on clay-cold earth." My choice, though now ſo weak and dark, was Torman's battling king; I promiſed with my hand to win the hero's dark-brown ſhield. "Bleſt and victorious be my chiefs," ſaid Fingal

of the mildeſt look; "Swaran, king of roaring waves, thou art the choice of Fingal."

Now, like an hundred different winds that pour through many vales; divided, dark, the ſons of [t]he hill advanced, and Cromla echoed around.

How can I relate the deaths when we cloſed in the ſtrife of our ſteel? O daughter of Toſcar! bloody were our hands! The gloomy ranks of Lochlin fell like the banks of the roaring Cona. Our arms were victorious on Lena; each chief fulfilled his promiſe. Beſide the murmur of Branno thou didſt often ſit, O maid; when thy white boſom roſe frequent, like the down of the ſwan when ſlow ſhe ſails the lake, and ſidelong winds are blowing. Thou haſt ſeen the ſun [h] red and ſlow behind his cloud; night gathering round on the mountain, while the unfrequent blaſt [i] roared in narrow vales. At length the rain beats hard: and thunder rolls in peals. Lightning glances on the rocks. Spirits ride on beams of fire. And the ſtrength of the mountain-ſtreams roaring down the hills. Such was the noiſe of battle, maid of the arms of ſnow. Why, daughter of the hill, that tear? the maids of Lochlin have cauſe to weep. The people of their country fell, for bloody was the blue ſteel of the race of my heroes. But I am ſad, forlorn, and blind; and no more the companion nion of heroes. Give, lovely maid, to me thy tears, for I have ſeen the tombs of all my friends.

It was then by Fingal's hand a hero fell, to his grief. Gray-haired he rolled in the duſt, and lifted his faint eyes to the king. "And is it by me thou haſt fallen," ſaid the ſon of Comhal, "thou friend of Agandecca! I ſaw thy tears for the maid of my love in the halls of the bloody Starno. Thou haſt been the foe of the foes of my love, and haſt thou fallen by my hand? Raiſe, Ullin, raiſe the grave of the ſon of Mathron; and give his name to the ſong of Agandecca; for dear to my ſoul haſt thou been, thou darkly-dwelling maid of Ardven.

Cuchullin from the cave of Cromla, heard the noiſe of the troubled war. He called to Connal chief of ſwords, and Carril of other times. The gray-haired heroes heard his voice, and took their aſpen ſpears. They came, and ſaw the tide of battle, like the crowded waves of the ocean; when the dark wind blows from the deep, and rolls the billows through the ſandy vale.

Cuchullin kindled at the ſight, and darkneſs gathered on his brow. His hand is on the ſword of his fathers: his red-rolling eyes on the foe. He thrice attempted to ruſh to battle, and thrice did Connal ſtop him. "Chief of the iſle of miſt," he ſaid, "Fingal ſubdues the foe. Seek not a part of the fame of the king; himſelf is like a ſtorm."

"Then, Carril, go," replied the chief, "and greet the king of Morven. When Lochlin falls away like a ſtream after rain, and the noiſe of the battle is over, then be thy voice ſweet in his ear to praiſe the king of ſwords. Give him the ſword of Caithbat; for Cuchullin is worthy no more to lift the arms of his fathers.

"But, O ye ghoſts of the lonely Cromla! ye ſouls of chiefs that are no more! be ye the companions of Cuchullin, and talk to him in the cave of his ſorrow. For never more ſhall I be renowned among the mighty in the land. I am like a beam that has ſhone; like a miſt that fled away, when the blaſt of the morning came, and brightened the ſhaggy ſide of the hill. Connal, talk of arms no more: departed is my fame. My ſighs ſhall be on Cromla's wind, till my footſteps ceaſe to be ſeen. And thou, white-boſom'd Bragela, mourn over the fall of my fame; for, vanquiſhed, I will never return to thee, thou ſun-beam of Dunſcaich."

FINGAL:

AN ANCIENT EPIC POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

Cuchullin and Connal ſtill remain on the hill. Fingal and Swaran meet; the combat is deſcribed. Swaran is overcome, bound and delivered over as a priſoner to the care of Oſſian, and Gaul the ſon of Morni; Fingal, his younger ſons, and Oſcar, ſtill purſue the enemy. The epiſode of Orla, a chief of Lochlin, who was mortally wounded in the battle, is introduced. Fingal, touched with the death of Orla, orders the purſuit to be diſcontinued; and calling his ſons together, he is informed that Ryno, the youngeſt of them, was killed. He laments his death, hears the ſtory of Lamdarg and Gelchoſſa, and returns towards the place where he had left Swaran. Carril, who had been ſent by Cuchullin to congratulate Fingal on his victory, comes in the mean time to Oſſian. The converſation of the two poets cloſes the action of the fourth day.

FINGAL:

AN ANCIENT EPIC POEM.

BOOK V.[a]

NOW Connal, on Cromla's windy ſide, ſpoke to the chief of the noble car. "Why that gloom, ſon of Semo? Our friends are the mighty in battle. And renowned art thou, O warrior! many were the deaths of thy ſteel. Often has Bragela met with blue-rolling eyes of joy, often has ſhe met her hero, returning in the midſt of the valiant when his ſword was red with ſlaughter, and his foes ſilent in the fields of the tomb. Pleaſant to her ears were thy bards, when thine actions roſe in the ſong.

"But behold the king of Morven; he moves below like a pillar of fire. His ſtrength is like the ſtream of Lubar, or the wind of the echoing Cromla; when the branchy foreſts of night are overturned.

"Happy are thy people, O Fingal, thine arm ſhall fight their battles: thou art the firſt in their dangers; the wiſeſt in the days of their peace. Thou ſpeakeſt and thy thouſands obey; and armies tremble tremble at the ſound of thy ſteel. Happy are thy people, Fingal, chief of the lonely hills.

" Who is that ſo dark and terrible, coming in the thunder of his courſe? who is but Starno's ſon to meet the king of Morven? Behold the battle of the chiefs: it is like the ſtorm of the ocean, when two ſpirits meet far diſtant, and contend for the rolling of the wave. The hunter hears the noiſe on his hill; and ſees the high billows advancing to Ardven's ſhore."

Such were the words of Connal, when the heroes met in the midſt of their falling people. There was the clang of arms! there every blow, like the hundred hammers of the furnace! Terrible is the battle of the kings, and horrid the look of their eyes. Their dark-brown ſhields are cleft in twain; and their ſteel flies, broken, from their helmets. They fling their weapons down. Each ruſhes [b] to the graſp of his foe. Their ſinewy arms bend round each other: they turn from ſide to ſide, and ſtrain and ſtretch their large ſpreading limbs below. But when the pride of their ſtrength aroſe, they ſhook the hill with their heels; rocks tumble from their places on high; the green-headed buſhes are overturned. At length the ſtrength of Swaran fell; and the king of the groves is bound.

Thus

Thus have I ſeen on Cona; (but Cona I behold no more) thus have I ſeen two dark hills removed from their place by the ſtrength of the burſting ſtream. They turn from ſide to ſide, and their tall oaks meet one another on high. Then they fall together with all their rocks and trees. The ſtreams are turned by their ſides, and the red ruin is ſeen afar.

"Sons of the king of Morven," ſaid the noble Fingal, "guard the king of Lochlin; for he is ſtrong as his thouſand waves. His hand is taught to the battle, and his race of the times of old. Gaul, thou firſt of my heroes, and Offian king of ſongs, attend the friend of Agandecca, and raiſe to joy his grief. But, Oſcar, Fillan, and Ryno, ye children of the Race! purſue the reſt of Lochlin over the heath of Lena; that no veſſel may hereafter bound on the dark-rolling waves of Iniſtore."

They flew like lightning over the heath. He ſlowly moved as a cloud of thunder when the ſultry plain of ſummer is ſilent. His ſword is before him as a ſun-beam, terrible as the ſtreaming meteor of night. He came toward a chief of Lochlin, and ſpoke to the ſon of the wave.

"Who is that like a cloud at the rock of the roaring ſtream? He cannot bound over its courſe; yet yet ſtately is the chief! his boſſy ſhield is on his ſide; and his ſpear like the tree of the deſart. Youth of the dark-brown hair, art thou of Fingal's foes?"

"I am a ſon of Lochlin," he cries, "and ſtrong is my arm in war. My ſpouſe is weeping at home, but Orla [c] will never return."

"Or fights or yields the hero," ſaid Fingal of the noble deeds? "foes do not conquer in my preſence: but my friends are renowned in the hall. Son of the wave, follow me; partake the feaſt of my ſhells; purſue the deer of my deſart; and be the friend of Fingal."

"No," ſaid the hero, I aſſiſt the feeble: my ſtrength ſhall remain with the weak in arms. My ſword has been always unmatched, O warrior: let the king of Morven yield."

"I never yielded, Orla, Fingal never yielded to man. Draw thy ſword and chuſe thy foe. Many are my heroes."

"And does the king refuſe the combat," ſaid Orla of the dark-brown hair? "Fingal is a match for Orla: and he alone of all his race. But, king of Morven, if I ſhall fall; (as one time the warrior muſt die;) raiſe my tomb in the midſt, and let it be the greateſt on Lena. And ſend, over the dark-blue wave, the ſword of Orla to the ſpouſe of his love; love; that ſhe may ſhew it to her ſon, with tears, to kindle his ſoul to war."

"Son of the mournful tale," ſaid Fingal, "why doſt thou awaken my tears? One day the warriors muſt die, and the children ſee their uſeleſs arms in the hall. But, Orla, thy tomb ſhall riſe, and thy white-boſomed ſpouſe weep over thy ſword."

They fought on the heath of Lena, but feeble was the arm of Orla. The ſword of Fingal deſcended, and cleft his ſhield in twain. It fell and glittered on the ground, as the moon on the ſtream of night.

"King of Morven," ſaid the hero, "lift thy ſword, and pierce my breaſt. Wounded and faint from battle my friends have left me here. The mournful tale ſhall come to my love on the banks of the ſtreamy Loda; when ſhe is alone in the wood; and the ruſtling blaſt in the leaves."

"No;" ſaid the king of Morven, "I will never wound thee, Orla. On the banks of Loda let her ſee thee eſcaped from the hands of war. Let thy gray-haired father, who, perhaps, is blind with age, hear the ſound of thy voice in his hall. With joy let the hero riſe, and ſearch for his ſon with his hands."

"But never will he find him, Fingal;" ſaid the youth of the ſtreamy Loda. "On Lena's heath I ſhall die; and foreign bards will talk of me. My broad belt covers my wound of death. And now I give it to the wind."

The dark blood poured from his ſide, he fell pale on the heath of Lena. Fingal bends over him as he dies, and calls his younger heroes.

"Oſcar and Fillan, my ſons, raiſe high the memory of Orla. Here let the dark-haired hero reſt far from the ſpouſe of his love. Here let him reſt in his narrow houſe far from the ſound of Loda. The ſons of the feeble will find his bow at home, but will not be able to bend it. His faithful dogs howl on his hills, and his boars, which he uſed to purſue, rejoice. Fallen is the arm of battle; the mighty among the valiant is low!

"Exalt the voice, and blow the horn, ye ſons of the king of Morven: let us go back to Swaran, and ſend the night away on ſong. Fillin, Oſcar, and Ryno, fly, over the heath of Lena. Where, Ryno, art thou, young ſon of fame? Thou art not wont to be the laſt to anſwer thy father."

"Ryno," ſaid Ullin firſt of bards, "is with the awful forms of his fathers. With Trathal king of ſhields, and Trenmor of the mighty deeds. The youth is low, the youth is pale, he lies on Lena's heath."

"And

"And fell the ſwifteſt in the race," ſaid the king, "the firſt to bend the bow? Thou ſcarce haſt been known to me: why did young Ryno fall? But ſleep thou ſoftly on Lena, Fingal ſhall ſoon behold thee. Soon ſhall my voice be heard no more, and my footſteps ceaſe to be ſeen. The bards will tell of Fingal's name; the ſtones will talk of me. But, Ryno, thou art low indeed, thou haſt not received thy fame. Ullin, ſtrike the harp for Ryno; tell what the chief would have been. Farewell, thou firſt in every field. No more ſhall I direct thy dart. Thou that haſt been ſo fair; I behold thee not. Farewell."

The tear is on the cheek of the king; for terrible was his ſon in war. His ſon! that was like a beam of fire by night on the hill; when the foreſt ſink down in its courſe, and the traveller trembles at the ſound.

"Whoſe fame is in that dark-green tomb," begun the king of generous ſhells? "four ſtones with their heads of moſs ſtand there; and mark the narrow houſe of death. Near it let my Ryno reſt, and be the neighbour of the valiant. Perhaps ſome chief of fame is here to fly with my ſon on clouds. O Ullin, raiſe the ſongs of other times. Bring to memory the dark dwellers of the tomb. If in the field of the valiant they never fled from danger, my ſon ſhall reſt with them, far from his friends, on the heath of Lena"

"Here," ſaid the mouth of the ſong, "here reſt the firſt of heroes. Silent is Lamderg [d] in this tomb, and Ullin king of ſwords. And who, ſoft ſmiling from her cloud, ſhews me her face of love? Why, daughter, why ſo pale art thou, firſt of the maids of Cromla? Doſt thou ſleep with the foes in battle, Gelchoſſa, white-boſomed daughter of Tuathal? Thou haſt been the love of thouſands, but Lamderg was thy love." He came to Selma's moſſy towers, and, ſtriking his dark buckler, ſpoke.—

"Where is Gelchoſſa, my love, the daughter of the noble Tuathal? I left her in the hall of Selma, when I fought with the gloomy Ulfadda. Return ſoon, O Lamderg, ſhe ſaid, for here I am in in the midſt of ſorrow. Her white breaſt roſe with ſighs. Her cheek was wet with tears. But I ſee her not coming to meet me; and to ſooth my ſoul after battle. Silent is the hall of my joy; I hear not the voice of the bard. Bran [e] does not ſhake his chains at the gate, glad at the coming of Lamderg. Where is Gelchoſſa, my love, the mild daughter of the generous Tuathal?"

"Lamderg!" ſays Ferchios the ſon of Aidon, "Gelchoſſa may be on Cromla; ſhe and the maids of the bow purſuing the flying deer!"

"Ferchios!"

"Ferchios!" replied the chief of Cromla, "no noiſe meets the ear of Lamderg. No ſound is in the woods of Lena. No deer fly in my ſight. No panting dog purſues. I ſee not Gelchoſſa my love, fair as the full moon ſetting on the hills of Cromla. Go, Ferchios, go to Allad the gray-haired ſon of the rock. His dwelling is in the circle of ſtones. He may know of Gelchoſſa."

The ſon of Aidon went; and ſpoke to the ear of age. "Allad! thou that dwelleſt in the rock, thou that trembleſt alone, what ſaw thine eyes of age?"

"I ſaw" anſwered Allad the old, "Ullin the ſon of Cairbar. He came like a cloud from Cromla; and he hummed a ſurly ſong like a blaſt in a leafleſs wood, He entered the hall of Selma. "Lamderg," he ſaid, "moſt dreadful of men, fight or yield to Ullin." "Lamderg," replied Gelchoſſa, "the ſon of battle, is not here. He fights Ulfadda mighty chief. He is not here, thou firſt of men. But Lamderg never yielded. He will fight the ſon of Cairbar."

"Lovely art thou," ſaid terrible Ullin, "daughter of the generous Tuathal. I carry thee to Cairbar's halls. The valiant ſhall have Gelchoſſa. Three days I remain on Cromla, to wait that ſon of of battle, Lamderg. On the fourth Gelchoſſa is mine, if the mighty Lamderg flies."

"Allad! ſaid the chief of Cromla, "peace to thy dreams in the cave. Ferchios, found the horn of Lamderg that Ullin may hear on Cromla. Lamderg [g], like a roaring ſtorm, aſcended the hill from Selma. He hummed a ſurly ſong as he went, like the noiſe of a falling ſtream. He ſtood like a cloud on the hill, that varies its form to the wind. He rolled a ſtone, the ſign of war. Ullin heard in Cairbar's hall. The hero heard, with joy, his foe, and took his father's ſpear. A ſmile brightens his dark-brown cheek, as he places his ſword by his ſide. The dagger glittered in his hand. He whiſtled as he went.

Gelchoſſa ſaw the ſilent chief, as a wreath of miſt aſcending the hill. She ſtruck her white and heaving breaſt; and ſilent, tearful, feared for Lamderg.

"Cairbar, hoary chief of ſhells," ſaid the maid of the tender hand; "I muſt bend the bow on Cromla; for I ſee the dark-brown hinds.

"She haſted up the hill. In vain! the gloomy heroes fought. Why ſhould I tell the king of Morven how wrathful heroes fight! Fierce Ullin fell. Young Lamderg came all pale to the daughter of generous Tuathal."

"What

"What blood, my love," the ſoft-haired woman ſaid, "what blood runs down my warrior's ſide?" "It is Ullin's blood," the chief replied, "thou fairer than the ſnow of Cromla! Gelchoſſa, let me reſt here a little while." The mighty Lamderg died.

"And ſleepeſt thou ſo ſoon on earth, O chief of ſhady Cromla? three days ſhe mourned beſide her love. The hunters found her dead. They raiſed this tomb above the three. Thy ſon, O king of Morven, may reſt here with heroes."

"And here my ſon ſhall reſt," ſaid Fingal, "the noiſe of their fame has reached my ears. Fillan and Fergus! bring hither Orla; the pale youth of the ſtream of Loda. Not unequalled ſhall Ryno lie in earth when Orla is by his ſide. Weep, ye daughters of Morven; and ye maids of the ſtreamy Loda. Like a tree they grew on the hills; and they have fallen like the oak [h] of the deſart; when it lies acroſs a ſtream, and withers in the wind of the mountain.

"Oſcar! chief of every youth! thou ſeeſt how they have fallen. Be thou, like them, on earth renowned. Like them the ſong of bards. Terrible were their forms in battle; but calm was Ryno in the days of peace. He was like the bow of the ſhower ſeen far diſtant on the ſtream; when the ſun is ſetting on Mora, and ſilence on the hill of deer.

deer. Reſt, youngeſt of my ſons, reſt, O Ryno, on Lena. We two ſhall be no more; for the warrior one day muſt fall."

Such was thy grief, thou king of hills, when Ryno lay on earth. What muſt the grief of Oſſian be, for thou thyſelf art gone. I hear not thy diſtant voice on Cona. My eyes perceive thee not. Often forlorn and dark I ſit at thy tomb; and feel it with my hands. When I think I hear thy voice; it is but the blaſt of the deſart. Fingal has long ſince fallen aſleep, the ruler of the war.

Then Gaul and Oſſian ſat with Swaran on the ſoft green banks of Lubar. I touched the harp to pleaſe the king. But gloomy was his brow. He rolled his red eyes towards Lena. The hero mourned his people."

I lifted my eyes to Cromla, and I ſaw the ſon of generous Semo. Sad and ſlow he retired from his hill towards the lonely cave of Tura. He ſaw Fingal victorious, and mixed his joy with grief. The ſun is bright on his armour, and Connal ſlowly followed. They ſunk behind the hill like two pillars of the fire of night: when winds purſue them over the mountain, and the flaming heath reſounds. Beſide a ſtream of roaring foam his cave is in a rock. One tree bends above it; and the ruſhing winds echo againſt its ſides. Here reſts the chief of Dunſcaich, the ſon of generous Semo. His thoughts are on the battle he loſt; and the tear is on his cheek. He mourned the departure of his fame that fled like the miſt of Cona. O Bragela, thou art too far remote to cheer the ſoul of the hero. But let him ſee thy bright form in his ſoul; that his thoughts may return to the lonely ſunbeam of Dunſcaich.

Who comes with the locks of age? It is the ſon of ſongs. Hail, Carril of other times, thy voice is like the harp in the halls of Tura. Thy words are pleaſant as the ſhower that falls on the fields of the ſun. Carril of the times of old, why comeſt thou from the ſon of the generous Semo?"

"Oſſian king of ſwords," replied the bard, "thou beſt raiſeſt the ſong. Long haſt thou been known to Carril, thou ruler of battles. Often have I touched the harp to lovely Everallin. Thou too haſt often accompanied my voice in Branno's hall of generous ſhells. And often, amidſt our voices, was heard the mildeſt Everallin. One day ſhe ſung of Cormac's fall, the youth that died for her love. I ſaw the tears on her cheek, and on thine, thou chief of men. Her ſoul was touched for the unhappy, though ſhe loved him not. How fair among a thouſand maids was the daughter of the generous Branno!"

" Bring not, Carril," I replied, " bring not her memory to my mind. My ſoul muſt melt at the remembrance. My eyes muſt have their tears. Pale in the earth is ſhe the ſoftly-bluſhing fair of my love. But ſit thou on the heath, O bard, and let us hear thy voice. It is pleaſant as the gale of ſpring that ſighs on the hunter's ear; when he wakens from dreams of joy, and has heard the muſic of the ſpirits of the hill."

FINGAL:

AN ANCIENT EPIC POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

Night comes on. Fingal gives a feaſt to his army, at which Swaran is preſent. The king commands Ullin his bard to give the ſong of peace; a cuſtom always obſerved at the end of a war. Ullin relates the actions of Trenmor great grandfather to Fingal, in Scandinavia, and his marriage with Inibacca, the daughter of a king of Lochlin who was anceſtor to Swaran; which conſideration, together with his being brother to Agandecca, with whom Fingal was in love in his youth, induced the king to releaſe him, and permit him to return, with the remains of his army, into Lochlin, upon his promiſe of never returning to Ireland in a hoſtile manner. The night is ſpent in ſettling Swaran's departure, in ſongs of bards, and in a converſation in which the ſtory of Grumal is introduced by Fingal. Morning comes. Swaran departs; Fingal goes on a hunting party, and finding Cuchullin in the cave of Tura, comforts him, and ſets ſail, the next day, for Scotland; which concludes the poem.

FINGAL:

AN ANCIENT EPIC POEM.

BOOK VI.[a]

THE clouds of night come rolling down, and reſt on Cromla's dark-brown ſteep. The ſtars of the north ariſe over the rolling of the waves of Ullin; they ſhew their heads of fire thro' the flying miſt of heaven. A diſtant wind roars in the wood; but ſilent and dark is the plain of death.

Still on the darkening Lena aroſe in my ears the tuneful voice of Carril. He ſung of the companions of our youth, and the days of former years; when we met on the banks of Lego, and ſent round the joy of the ſhell. Cromla, with its cloudy ſteeps anſwered to his voice. The ghoſts of thoſe he ſung came in the ruſtling blaſts. They were ſeen to bend with joy towards the ſound of their praiſe.

Be thy ſoul bleſt, O Carril, in the midſt of thy eddying winds. O that thou would come to my hall when I am alone by night! And thou doſt come, my friend, I hear often thy light hand on my harp: when it hangs on the diſtant wall, and the feeble ſound touches my ear. Why doſt thou not ſpeak to me in my grief, and tell when I ſhall behold my friends? But thou paſſeſt away in thy murmuring blaſt: and thy wind whiſtles through the gray hair of Oſſian.

Now on the ſide of Mora the heroes gathered to the feaſt. A thouſand aged oaks are burning to the wind. The ſtrength [b] of the ſhells goes round. And the ſouls of warriors brighten with joy. But the king of Lochlin is ſilent, and ſorrow reddens in the eyes of his pride. He often turned toward Lena and remembered that he fell.

Fingal leaned on the ſhield of his father. His gray locks ſlowly waved on the wind, and glittered to the beam of night. He ſaw the grief of Swaran, and ſpoke to the firſt of bards.

"Raiſe, Ullin, raiſe the ſong of peace, and ſooth my ſoul after battle, that my ear may forget the noiſe of arms. And let a hundred harps be near to gladden the king of Lochlin. He muſt depart from us with joy.——None ever went ſad from Fingal. Oſcar! the lightning of my ſword is againſt the ſtrong in battle; but peaceful it lies by my ſide when warriors yield in war."

"Frenmor [c]," ſaid the mouth of the ſongs, "lived in the days of other years. He bounded over the waves of the north: companion of the ſtorm. The high rocks of the land of Lochlin, and and its groves of murmuring ſounds appeared to the hero through the miſt; he bound his white-boſomed ſails. Trenmor purſued the boar that roared along the woods of Gormal. Many had fled from its preſence; but the ſpear of Trenmor ſlew it.

"Three chiefs, that beheld the deed, told of the mighty ſtranger. They told that he ſtood like a pillar of fire in the bright arms of his valour. The king of Lochlin prepared the feaſt, and called the blooming Trenmor. Three days he feaſted at Gormal's windy towers; and got his choice in the combat.

"The land of Lochlin had no hero that yielded not to Trenmor. The ſhell of joy went round with ſongs in praiſe of the king of Morven; he that came over the waves, the firſt of mighty men.

"Now when the fourth gray morn aroſe, the hero launched his ſhip; and walking along the ſilent ſhore waited for the ruſhing wind. For loud and diſtant he heard the blaſt murmuring in the grove.

"Covered over with arms of ſteel a ſon of the woody Gormal appeared. Red was his cheek and fair his hair. His ſkin like the ſnow of Morven. Mild rolled his blue and ſmiling eye when he ſpoke to the king of ſwords.

"Stay,

"Stay, Trenmor, ſtay thou firſt of men, thou haſt not conquered Lonval's ſon. My ſword has often met the brave. And the wiſe ſhun the ſtrength of my bow."

"Thou fair-haired youth," Trenmor replied, "I will not fight with Lonval's ſon. Thine arm is feeble, ſun-beam of beauty. Retire to Gormal's dark-brown hinds."

"But I will retire," replied the youth, "with the ſword of Trenmor; and exult in the ſound of my fame. The virgins ſhall gather with ſmiles around him who conquered Trenmor. They ſhall ſigh with the ſighs of love, and admire the length of thy ſpear; when I ſhall carry it among thouſands, and lift the glittering point to the ſun."

"Thou ſhalt never carry my ſpear," ſaid the angry king of Morven. "Thy mother ſhall find thee pale on the ſhore of the echoing Gormal; and looking over the dark-blue deep, ſee the ſails of him that ſlew her ſon."

"I will not lift the ſpear," replied the youth, "my arm is not ſtrong with years. But with the feathered dart I have learned to pierce a diſtant foe. Throw down that heavy mail of ſteel; for Trenmor is covered all over. I firſt will lay my mail on earth. Throw now thy dart, thou king of Morven."

He

He ſaw the heaving of her breaſt. It was the ſiſter of the king. She had ſeen him in the halls of Gormal; and loved his face of youth. The ſpear dropt from the hand of Trenmor! he bent his red cheek to the ground, for he had ſeen her like a beam of light that meets the ſons of the cave, when they reviſit the fields of the ſun, and bend their aching eyes.

"Chief of the windy Morven," begun the maid of the arms of ſnow; "let me reſt in thy bounding ſhip, far from the love of Corla. For he, like the thunder of the deſart, is terrible to Inabaca. He loves me in the gloom of his pride, and ſhakes ten thouſand ſpears!"

"Reſt thou in peace," ſaid the mighty Trenmor, "behind the ſhield of my fathers. I will not fly from the chief, though he ſhakes ten thouſand ſpears."

"Three days he waited on the ſhore; and ſent his horn abroad. He called Corla to battle from all his echoing hills. But Corla came not to battle. The king of Lochlin deſcended. He feaſted on the roaring ſhore; and gave the maid to Trenmor."

"King of Lochlin," ſaid Fingal, "thy blood flows in the veins of thy foe. Our families met in battle, becauſe they loved the ſtrife of ſpears. But often did they feaſt in the hall; and ſend round the joy of the ſhell. Let thy face brighten with gladneſs, and thine ear delight in the harp. Dreadful as the ſtorm of thine ocean thou haſt poured thy valour forth; thy voice has been like the voice of thouſands when they engage in battle. Raiſe, to-morrow, thy white ſails to the wind, thou brother of Agandecca. Bright as the beam of noon ſhe comes on my mournful ſoul. I ſaw thy tears for the fair one, and ſpared thee in the halls of Starno; when my ſword was red with ſlaughter, and my eye full of tears for the maid. Or doſt thou chuſe the fight? The combat which thy fathers gave to Trenmor is thine; that thou mayeſt depart renowned like the ſun ſetting in the weſt."

"King of the race of Morven," ſaid the chief of the waves of Lochlin; "never will Swaran fight with thee, firſt of a thouſand heroes! I ſaw thee in the halls of Starno, and few were thy years beyond my own. When ſhall I, ſaid I to my ſoul, lift the ſpear like the noble Fingal? We have fought heretofore, O warrior, on the ſide of the ſhaggy Malmor; after my waves had carried me to thy halls, and the feaſt of a thouſand ſhells was ſpread. Let the bards ſend his fame who overcame to future years, for noble was the ſtrife of Malmor.

"But

"But many of the ſhips of Lochlin have loſt their youths on Lena. Take theſe, thou king of Morven, and be the friend of Swaran: And when thy ſons ſhall come to the moſſy towers of Gormal, the feaſt of ſhells ſhall be ſpread, and the combat offered on the vale.

"Nor ſhip," replied the king, "ſhall Fingal take, nor land of many hills. The deſart is enough to me with all its deer and woods. Riſe on thy waves again, thou noble friend of Agandecca. Spread thy white ſails to the beam of the morning, and return to the echoing hills of Gormal."

"Bleſt be thy ſoul, thou king of ſhells," ſaid Swaran of the dark-brown ſhield. "In peace thou art the gale of ſpring. In war the mountain-ſtorm. Take now my hand in friendſhip, thou noble king of Morven. Let thy bards mourn thoſe who fell. Let Erin give the ſons of Lochlin to earth; and raiſe the moſſy ſtones of their fame. That the children of the north hereafter may behold the place where their fathers fought. And ſome hunter may ſay, when he leans on a moſſy tomb, here Fingal and Swaran fought, the heroes of other years. Thus hereafter ſhall he ſay, and our fame ſhall laſt for ever!"

"Swaran," ſaid the king of the hills, "to-day our fame is greateſt. We ſhall paſs away like a dream. No ſound will be in the fields of our battles. Our tombs will be loſt in the heath. The hunter ſhall not know the place of our reſt. Our names may be heard in ſong, but the ſtrength of our arms will ceaſe. O Oſſian, Carril, and Ullin, you know of heroes that are no more. Give us the ſong of other years. Let the night paſs away on the ſound, and morning return with joy."

We gave the ſong to the kings, and a hundred harps accompanied our voice. The face of Swaran brightened like the full moon of heaven, when the clouds vaniſh away, and leave her calm and broad in the midſt of the ſky.

It was then that Fingal ſpoke to Carril the chief of other times. "Where is the ſon of Semo, the king of the iſle of miſt? has he retired, like the meteor of death, to the dreary cave of Tura?"

"Cuchullin," ſaid Carril of other times, lies in the dreary cave of Tura. His hand is on the ſword of his ſtrength. His thoughts on the battle which he loſt. Mournful is the king of ſpears; for he has often been victorious. He ſends the ſword of his war to reſt on the ſide of Fingal. For like the ſtorm of the deſart, thou haſt ſcattered all his foes. Take, O Fingal, the ſword of the hero; for his fame is departed likt miſt when it flies before the ruſtling wind of the vale.

"No;"

"No:" replied the king, "Fingal ſhall never take his ſword. His arm is mighty in war; his fame ſhall never fail. Many have been overcome in battle, that have ſhone afterwards like the ſun of heaven.

"O Swaran, king of the reſounding woods, give all thy grief away. The vanquiſhed, if brave are renowned; they are like the ſun in a cloud when he hides his face in the ſouth, but looks again on the hills of graſs.

"Grumal was a chief of Cona. He fought the battle on every coaſt. His ſoul rejoiced in blood; his ear in the din of arms. He poured his warriors on the ſounding Craca; and Craca's king met him from his grove; for then within the circle of Brumo [d] he ſpoke to the ſtone of power.

"Fierce was the battle of the heroes, for the maid of the breaſt of ſnow. The fame of the daughter of Craca had reached Grumal at the ſtreams of Cona; he vowed to have the white-boſomed maid, or die on the echoing Craca. Three days they ſtrove together, and Grumal on the fourth was bound.

"Far from his friend they placed him in the horrid circle of Bruma; where often, they ſaid, the ghoſts of the dead howled round the ſtone of the ſear. But afterwards he ſhone like a pillar of the light of heaven. They fell by his mighty hand, and Grumal had his fame.

" Raiſe, ye bards of other times, raiſe high the praiſe of heroes; that my ſoul may ſettle on their fame; and the mind of Swaran ceaſe to be ſad."

They lay in the heath of Mora; the dark winds ruſtled over the heroes. A hundred voices at once aroſe, a hundred harps were ſtrung; they ſung of other times, and the mighty chiefs of former years.

When now ſhall I hear the bard; or rejoice at the fame of my fathers? The harp is not ſtrung on Morven; nor the voice of muſic raiſed on Cona. Dead with the mighty is the bard; and fame is in the deſart no more.

Morning trembles with the beam of the eaſt, and glimmers on gray-headed Cromla. Over Lena is heard the horn of Swaran, and the ſons of the ocean gather around. Silent and ſad they mount the wave, and the blaſt of Ullin is behind their ſails. White, as the miſt of Morven, they float along the ſea.

" Call," ſaid Fingal, " call my dogs, the long-bounding ſons of the chaſe. Call white-breaſted Bran; and the ſurly ſtrength of Luath. Fillan, and Ryno, but he is not here! My ſon reſts on the bed of death. Fillan and Fergus, blow my horn, horn, that the joy of the chaſe may ariſe; that the deer of Cromla may hear and ſtart at the lake of roes."

The ſhrill ſound ſpreads along the wood. The ſons of heathy Cromla ariſe. A thouſand dogs fly off at once, gray-bounding through the heath. A deer fell by every dog, and three by the white-breaſted Bran. He brought them, in their flight, to Fingal, that the joy of the king might be great.

One deer fell at the tomb of Ryno; and the grief of Fingal returned. He ſaw how peaceful lay the ſtone of him who was the firſt at the chaſe. "No more ſhalt thou riſe, O my ſon, to partake of the feaſt of Cromla. Soon will thy tomb be hid, and the graſs grow rank on thy grave. The ſons of the feeble ſhall paſs over it, and ſhall not know that the mighty lie there.

"Oſſian and Fillan, ſons of my ſtrength, and Gaul king of the blue ſwords of war, let us aſcend the hill to the cave of Tura, and find the chief of the battles of Erin, Are theſe the walls of Tura? gray and lonely they riſe on the heath. The king of ſhells is ſad, and the halls are deſolate. Come let us find the king of ſwords, and give him all our joy. But is that Cuchullin, O Fillan, or a pillar of ſmoke on the heath? The wind of Cromla is on my eyes, and I diſtinguiſhed not my friend."

"Fingal!"

"Fingal!" replied the youth, "it is the ſon of Semo. Gloomy and ſad is the hero; his hand is on his ſword. Hail to the ſon of battle, breaker of the ſhields?"

"Hail to thee," replied Cuchullin, "hail to all the ſons of Morven. Delightful is thy preſence, O Fingal, it is like the ſun on Cromla; when the hunter mourns his abſence for a ſeaſon, and ſees him between the clouds. Thy ſons are like ſtars that attend thy courſe, and give light in the night. It is not thus thou haſt ſeen me, O Fingal, returning from the wars of the deſart; when the kings of the world [c] had fled, and joy returned to the hill of hinds."

"Many are thy words, Cuchullin," ſaid Connan [f] of ſmall renown. "Thy words are many, ſon of Semo, but where are thy deeds in arms? Why did we come over the ocean to aid thy feeble ſword? Thou flyeſt to thy cave of ſorrow, and Connan fights thy battles: Reſign to me theſe arms of light; yield them, thou ſon of Erin."

"No hero," replied the chief, "ever fought the arms of Cuchullin; and had a thouſand heroes fought them it were in vain, thou gloomy youth. I fled not to the cave of ſorrow, as long as Erin's warriors lived."

"Youth

" Youth of the feeble arm," ſaid Fingal, " Connan, ſay no more. Cuchullin is renowned in battle, and terrible over the deſart. Often have I heard thy fame, thou ſtormy chief of Innis-fail. Spread now thy white ſails for the iſle of miſt, and ſee Bragela leaning on her rock. Her tender eye is in tears, and the winds lift her long hair from her heaving breaſt. She liſtens to the winds of night to hear the voice of thy rowers [g]; to hear the ſong of the ſea, and the ſound of thy diſtant harp."

" And long ſhall ſhe liſten in vain; Cuchullin ſhall never return. How can I behold Bragela to raiſe the ſigh of her breaſt? Fingal, I was always victorious in the battles of other ſpears!"

" And hereafter thou ſhalt be victorious," ſaid Fingal king of ſhells. " The fame of Cuchullin ſhall grow like the branchy tree of Cromla. Many battles await thee, O chief, and many ſhall be the wounds of thy hand. Bring hither, Oſcar, the deer, and prepare the feaſt of ſhells; that our ſouls may rejoice after danger, and our friends delight in our preſence."

We ſat, we feaſted, and we ſung. The ſoul of Cuchullin roſe. The ſtrength of his arm returned and gladneſs brightened on his face. Ullin gave the ſong, and Carril raiſed the voice. I often, joined the bards, and ſung of battles of the ſpear. Battles! where I often fought; but now I fight no more. The fame of my former actions is ceaſed; and I ſit forlorn at the tombs of my friends.

Thus they paſſed the night in the ſong; and brought back the morning with joy. Fingal aroſe on the heath, and ſhook his glittering ſpear. He moved firſt toward the plains of Lena, and we followed like a ridge of fire. "Spread the ſail," ſaid the king of Morven, "and catch the winds that pour from Lena." We roſe on the wave with ſongs, and ruſhed, with joy, through the foam of the ocean.

BOOK I.

[a] Cuchullin, or rather Cuth-Ullin, the voice of Ullin, a poetical name given the ſon of Semo, grandſon to Caithbat, a druid celebrated by the bards for his wiſdom and valour, from his commanding the forces of the Province of Ulſter againſt the Ferbolg or Belgæ, who were in poſſeſſion of Connaught. Cuchullin when very young married Bragela the daughter of Sorglan, and paſſing over into Ireland, lived for ſome time with Connal, grandſon by a daughter to Congal the petty king of Ulſter. His wiſdom and valour in a ſhort time gained him ſuch reputation, that in the minority of Cormac the ſupreme king of Ireland, he was choſen guardian to the young king, and ſole manager of the war againſt Swaran king of Lochlin. After a ſeries of great actions he was killed in battle ſomewhere in Connaught, in the twenty-ſeventh year of his age. He was ſo remarkable for his ſtrength, that to deſcribe a ſtrong man it has paſſed into a proverb, "He has the ſtrength of Cuchullin." They ſhew the remains of his palace at Dunſcaich in the iſle of Sky; and a ſtone to which he bound his dog Luath, goes ſtill by his name.

[c] We

[c] We may conclude from Cuchullin's applying ſo early for foreign aid, that the Iriſh were not then ſo numerous as they have ſince been; which is a great preſumption againſt the high antiquities of that people. We have the teſtimony of Tacitus, that one legion only was thought ſufficient, in the time of Agricola, to reduce the whole iſland under the Roman yoke; which would not probably have been the caſe had the iſland been inhabited for any number of centuries before.

[d] Moran ſignifies many; and Fithil or rather Fili, an inferior bard.

[e] Fingal the ſon of Comhal and Morna the daughter of Thaddu. His grandfather was Trathal, and great grandfather Trenmor, both of whom are often mentioned in the poem. Trenmor, according to tradition, had two ſons; Trathal, who ſucceeded him in the kingdom of Morven, and Connar, called by the bards Connar the Great, who was elected king of all Ireland, and was the anceſtor of that Cormac who ſat on the Iriſh throne when the invaſion of Swaran happened. It may not be improper here to obſerve, that the accent ought always to be placed on the laſt ſyllable of Fingal.

[g] Cabait, or rather Cathbait, grandfather to the hero, was ſo remarkable for his valour, that his ſhield was made uſe of to alarm his poſterity to the battles of the family. We find Fingal making the ſame uſe of his own ſhield in the 4th book. A horn was the moſt common inſtrument to call the army together, before the invention of bagpipes.

[i] Cruth-geal, fair-complexioned.

Crom-leach,

[l] Crom-leach ſignified a place of worſhip among the Druids. It is here the proper name of a hill on the coaſt of Ullin or Ulſter.

[m] So when th' embattled clouds in dark array,
Along the ſkies their gloomy lines diſplay;
The low-hung vapours motionleſs and ſtill
Reſt on the ſummits of the ſhaded hill. Pope.

[n] Ireland, ſo called from a colony that ſettled there called Falans. Innis-fail, i. e. the iſland of the Fa-il or Falans.

[o] Connal, the friend of Cuchullin, was the ſon of Cathbait prince of Tongorma or the iſland of blue waves, probably one of the Hebrides. His mother was Fioncoma the daughter of Congal. He had a ſon by Foba of Conachar-neſſar, who was afterwards king of Ulſter. For his ſervices in the war againſt Swaran, he had lands conferred on him, which, from his name, were called Tir-chonnuil or Tir-connel, i. e. the land of Connal.

[p] Erin, a name of Ireland; from ear or iar Weſt, and in an iſland. This name was not always confined to Ireland, for there is the higheſt probability that the Ierne of the ancients was Britain to the North of the Forth. For Ierne is ſaid to be to the North of Britain, which could not be meant of Ireland.

Strabo, lib. 2. et 4. Caſaub. lib. 1.

[q] Calm-er, a ſtrong man.

[r] The Gaelic name of Scandinavia in general; in a more confined ſenſe that of the peninſula of Jutland.

[s] Innis-tore, the iſland of whales, the ancient name of the Orkney iſlands.

[u] Fear-guth, the man of the word; or a commander of an army.

[v] Be

[v] Be thou like a roe or young hart on the mountains of Bether. Solomon's Song.

[w] This paſſage alludes to the manner of burial among the ancient Scots. They opened a grave ſix or eight feet deep: the bottom was lined with fine clay; and on this they laid the body of the deceaſed, and, if a warrior, his ſword, and the heads of twelve arrows by his ſide. Above they laid another ſtratum of clay, in which they placed the horn of a deer, the ſymbol of hunting. The whole was covered with a fine mold, and four ſtones placed on end to mark the extent of the grave. Theſe are the four ſtones alluded to here.

[y] Muirne, or Morna, a woman beloved by all.

[z] Torman, thunder. This is the true origin of the Jupiter Taramis of the ancients.

[b] Moina, ſoft in temper and perſon.

[c] It was the opinion then, as indeed it is to this day, of ſome of the Highlanders, that the ſouls of the deceaſed hovered round their living friends; and ſometimes appeared to them when they were about to enter on any great undertaking.

[d] As torrents roll encreas'd by numerous rills
With rage impetuous down the echoing hills;
Ruſh to the vales, and pour'd along the plain,
Roar thro' a thouſand channels to the main. Pope.

[e] A hill of Lochlin.

[f] The reader may compare this paſſage with a ſimilar one in Homer. Iliad. 4. v. 446.

Now ſhield with ſhield, with helmet helmet clos'd,
To armour armour, lance to lance oppos'd.

Hoſt

Hoſt againſt hoſt, with ſhadowy ſquadrons drew,
The ſounding darts in iron tempeſts flew;
With ſtreaming blood the ſlipp'ry fields are dy'd,
And ſlaughter'd heroes ſwell the dreadful tide. Pope.

Arms on armour craſhing, bray'd
Horrible diſcord, and the madding wheels
Of brazen chariots rag'd, &c. Milton.

g Sithallin ſignifies a handſome man; Fiona, a fair maid; and Ardan, pride.

h The Iſle of Sky; not improperly called the Iſle of Miſt, as its high hills, which catch the clouds from the weſtern ocean, occaſion almoſt continual rains.

i One of Cuchullin's horſes. Dubhſtron-gheal.

l The maid of Iniſtore was the daughter of Gorlo king of Iniſtore or Orkney iſlands. Trenar was brother to the king of Iniſcon, ſuppoſed to be one of the iſlands of Shetland. The Orkneys and Shetland were at that time ſubject to the king of Lochlin. We find that the dogs of Trenar are ſenſible at home of the death of their maſter, the very inſtant he is killed. It was the opinion of the times, that the ſouls of heroes went immediately after death to the hills of their country, and the ſcenes they frequented the moſt happy time of their life. It was thought too that dogs and horſes ſaw the ghoſts of the deceaſed.

m ——As when two black clouds
With heaven's artillery fraught, come rattling on Over the Caſpian. Milton.

n The ancient manner of preparing feaſts after hunting, is handed down by tradition. A pit lined with ſmooth ſtones was made; and near it ſtood a heap of ſmooth flat ſtones ſtones of the flint kind. The ſtones as well as the pit were properly heated with heath. Then they laid ſome veniſon in the bottom, and a ſtratum of the ſtones above it; and thus they did alternately till the pit was full. The whole was covered over with heath to confine the ſteam. Whether this is probable I cannot ſay; but ſome pits are ſhewn, which the vulgar ſay, were uſed in that manner.

[o] Cean-feana. i. e. the head of the people.

[p] Oſſian the ſon of Fingal and author of the peom. One cannot but admire the addreſs of the poet in putting his own praiſe ſo naturally into the mouth of Cuchullin. The Cona here mentioned is perhaps that ſmall river that runs through Glenco in Argyleſhire. One of the hills which environ that romantic valley is ſtill called Scorna-fena, or the hill of Fingal's people.

[q] This epiſode is introduced with propriety. Calmar and Connal, two of the Iriſh heroes, had diſputed warmly before the battle about engaging the enemy. Carril endeavours to reconcile them with the ſtory of Cairbar and Grudar; who, though enemies before, fought ſide by ſide in the war. The poet obtained his aim, for we find Calmar and Connal perfectly reconciled in the third book.

[s] Lubar, a river in Ulſter. Labhar, loud, noiſy.

[u] But when he ſpeaks, what elocution flows!
Like the ſoft fleeces of deſcending ſnows. Pope.

[v] Bragela was the daughter of Sorglan, and the wife of Cuchullin. Cuchullin, upon the death of Artho, ſupreme king king of Ireland, paſſed over into Ireland, probably by Fingal's order, to take upon him the adminiſtration of affairs in that kingdom during the minority of Cormac the ſon of Artho. He left his wife Bragela in Dunſcaich, the ſeat of the family in the iſle of Sky.

[w] It was long the opinion of the ancient Scots, that a ghoſt was heard ſhrieking near the place where a death was to happen ſoon after. The accounts given to this day, among the vulgar, of this extraordinary matter, are very poetical. The ghoſt comes mounted on a meteor, and ſurrounds twice or thrice the place deſtined for the perſon to die; and then goes along the road through which the funeral is to paſs, ſhrieking at intervals; at laſt, the meteor and ghoſt diſappear above the burial place.

BOOK II.

[a] The ſcene of Connal's repoſe is familiar to thoſe who have been in the Highlands of Scotland. The poet removes him to a diſtance from the army, to add more horror to the deſcription of Crugal's ghoſt by the lonelineſs of the place. It perhaps will not be diſagreeable to the reader, to ſee how two other ancient poets handled a ſimilar ſubject.

When lo! the ſhade, before his cloſing eyes,
Of ſad Patroclus roſe, or ſeem'd to riſe,
In the ſame robe he living wore, he came,
In ſtature, voice, and pleaſing look the ſame.
The form familiar hover'd o'er his head,
And ſleeps Achilles thus? the phantom ſaid. Pope.

When Hector's ghoſt before my ſight appears:
A bloody ſhroud he ſeem'd, and bath'd in tears.
Such as he was, when, by Pelides ſlain, Theſſalian courſers dragg'd him o'er the plain.
Swoln were his feet, as when the thongs were thruſt
Through the bor'd holes; his body black with duſt.
Unlike that Hector, who return'd from toils
Of war triumphant, in Æacian ſpoils:
Or him, who made the fainting Greeks retire,
And launch'd againſt their navy Phrygian fire.
His hair and beard ſtood ſtiffen'd with his gore;
And all the wounds he for his country bore. Dryden.

[b] Connal the ſon of Caithbat, the friend of Cuchullin, is ſometimes, as here, called the ſon of Colgar; from one of that name who was the founder of his family.

[c] Like a thin ſmoke he ſees the ſpirit fly,
And hears a feeble, lamentable cry. Pope.

[d] The poet teaches us the opinions that prevailed in his time concerning the ſtate of ſeparate ſouls. From Connal's expreſſion, "That the ſtars dim-twinkled through the form of Crugal," and Cuchullin's reply, we may gather that they both thought the ſoul was material: ſomething like the εἴδωλον of the ancient Greeks.

[e] ——————As when heaven's fire
Hath ſcath'd the foreſt oaks, or mountain pines
With ſinged tops, their ſtately growth though bare Stand on the blaſted heath. Milton.

[f] ——————As evening miſt
Ris'n from a river o'er the mariſh glides
And gathers ground faſt at the lab'rers heel Homeward returning. Milton.

The

[g] The ancient Scots, as well as the preſent Highlanders, drunk in ſhells; hence it is that we ſo often meet, in the old poetry, with the chief of ſhells, and the halls of ſhells.

[h] Crugal had married Degrena but a little time before the battle, conſequently ſhe may with propriety be called a ſtranger in the hall of her ſorrow.

[i] Deo-grena ſignifies a ſun beam.

[k] Mediiſque in millibus ardet. Virg.

[l] Virgil and Milton have made uſe of a compariſon ſimilar to this; I ſhall lay both before the reader, and let him judge for himſelf which of theſe two great poets have beſt ſucceeded.

Like Eryx or like Athos great he ſhows
Or father Appenine when white with ſnows;
His head divine obſcure in clouds he hides,
And ſhakes the ſounding foreſt on his ſides. Dryden.
On th' other ſide Satan alarm'd,
Collecting all his might, dilated ſtood
Like Teneriff or Atlas unremov'd:
His ſtature reach'd the ſky. Milton.

[m] Muri, ſay the Iriſh bards, was an academy in Ulſter for teaching the uſe of arms. The ſignification of the word is a cluſter of people; which renders the opinion probable. Cuchullin is ſaid to have been the firſt who introduced into Ireland complete armour of ſteel. He is famous among the Senachies, for teaching horſemanſhip to the Iriſh, and for being the firſt who uſed a chariot in that kingdom; which laſt circumſtance was the occaſion of Oſſian's being ſo circumſtantial in his deſcription of Cuchullin's car, in the firſt book.

[n] The unfortunate death of this Roman is the ſubject of the ninth fragment of Ancient Poetry, publiſhed in 1764; it is not the work of Offian though it is writ in his manner, and bears the genuine marks of antiquity. The conciſe expreſſions of Offian are imitated, but the thoughts are too jejune and confined to be the production of that poet. Many poems go under his name that have been evidently compoſed ſince his time; they are very numerous in Ireland, and ſome have come to the tranſlator's hands. They are trivial and dull to the laſt degree; ſwelling into ridiculous bombaſt, or ſinking into the loweſt kind of profaic ſtyle.

BOOK III.

[a] The ſecond night, ſince the opening of the poem, continues; and Cuchullin, Connal, and Carril ſtill ſit in the place deſcribed in the preceding book. The ſtory of Agandecca is introduced here with propriety, as great uſe is made of it in the courſe of the poem, and as it, in ſome meaſure, brings about the cataſtrophe.

[b] Starno was the father of Swaran as well as Agandecca. His fierce and cruel character is well marked in other poems concerning the times.

[c] This paſſage moſt certainly alludes to the religion of Lochlin, and the ſtone of power here mentioned is the image of one of the deities of Scandinavia.

[d] Starno is here poetically called the king of ſnow, from the great quantities of ſnow that fall in his dominions.

[e] All the north-weſt coaſt of Scotland probably went of old under the name of Morven, which ſignifies a ridge of very high hills.

[f] Gormal

[f] Gormal is the name of a hill in Lochlin, in the neighbourhood of Starno's palace.

[g] This is the only paſſage in the poem that has the appearance of religion. But Cuchullin's apoſtrophe to this ſpirit is accompanied with a doubt, ſo that it is not eaſy to determine whether the hero meant a ſuperior being, or the ghoſts of deceaſed warriors, who were ſuppoſed in thoſe times to rule the ſtorms, and to tranſport themſelves in a guſt of wind from one country to another.

[h] Alcletha, her lamentation over her ſon is introduced in the poem concerning the death of Cuchullin, printed in this collection.

[i] So ſome tall rock o'erhangs the hoary main,
By winds aſſail'd, by billows beat in vain,

[k] Here the poet celebrates his own actions, but he does it in ſuch a manner that we are not diſpleaſed. The mention of the great actions of his youth immediately ſuggeſts to him the helpleſs ſituation of his age. We do not deſpiſe him for ſelfiſh praiſe, but feel his misfortunes.

[l] What the Craca here mentioned was, is not, at this diſtance of time, eaſy to determine. The moſt probable opinion is, that it was one of the Shetland iſles. There is a ſtory concerning a daughter of the king of Craca in the ſixth book.

[m] Gaul, the ſon of Morni, was chief of a tribe that diſputed long the pre-eminence with Fingal himſelf. They were reduced at laſt to obedience, and Gaul, from an enemy, turned Fingal's beſt friend and greateſt hero. His character is ſomething like that of Ajax in the Iliad; a hero of more ſtrength than conduct in battle. He was very fond of military fame, and here he demands the next battle to himſelf. The poet, by an artifice, removes Fingal, that his return may be the more magnificent.

[n] The poet prepares us for the dream of Fingal in the next book.

BOOK IV.

[a] Fingal being aſleep, and the action ſuſpended by night, the poet introduces the ſtory of his courtſhip of Everallin the daughter of Branno. The epiſode is neceſſary to clear up ſeveral paſſages that follow in the poem; at the ſame time that it naturally brings on the action of the book, which may be ſuppoſed to begin about the middle of the third night from the opening of the poem. The book, as many of Oſſian's other compoſitions, is addreſſed to the beautiful Malvina the daughter of Toſcar. She appears to have been in love with Oſcar, and to have affected the company of the father after the death of the ſon.

[b] The poet addreſſes himſelf to Malvina the daughter of Toſcar.

[c] The poet returns to his ſubject. If one could fix the time of the year in which the action of the poem happened, from the ſcene deſcribed here, I ſhould be tempted to place it in autumn. The trees ſhed their leaves, and the winds are variable, both which circumſtances agree with that ſeaſon of the year.

[d] Oſſian gives the reader a high idea of himſelf. His very ſong frightens the enemy. This paſſage reſembles one in the eighteenth Iliad, where the voice of Achilles frightens the Trojans from the body of Patroclus.

Forth

Forth march'd the chief, and diſtant from the crowd
High on the rampart rais'd his voice aloud.
So high his brazen voice the hero rear'd

e Oſſian never fails to give a fine character to his beloved ſon. His ſpeech to his father is that of a hero; it contains the ſubmiſſion due to a parent, and the warmth that becomes a young warriour. There is a propriety in dwelling here on the actions of Oſcar, as the beautiful Malvina, to whom the book is addreſſed, was in love with that hero.

f The war-ſong of Ullin varies from the reſt of the poem, in the verſification. It runs down like a torrent; and conſiſts almoſt entirely of epithets. The cuſtom of encouraging men in battle with extempore rhymes, has been carried down almoſt to our own times. Several of theſe war-ſongs are extant, but the moſt of them are only a group of epithets, without beauty or harmony, utterly deſtitute of poetical merit.

g Th' imperial enſign, which full high advanc'd

h Fingal's ſtandard was diſtinguiſhed by the name of ſun-beam; probably on account of its bright colour, and its being ſtudded with gold. To begin a battle is expreſſed, in old compoſition, by lifting of the ſun-beam.

i Above the reſt, the ſun, who never lies,
Foretells the change of weather in the ſkies.
For if he riſe, unwilling to his race,
Clouds on his brow, and ſpots upon his face;
Or if through miſts he ſhoots his ſullen beams,
Frugal of light, in looſe and ſtraggling ſtreams, Suſpect a driſling day. Dryden.

k For

[k] For ere the riſing winds begin to roar,
The working ſeas advance to waſh the ſhore;
Soft whiſpers run along the leafy wood,
And mountains whiſtle to the murm'ring flood. Dryden.

[l] The rapid rains, deſcending from the hills,
To rolling torrents ſwell the creeping rills. Dryden.

BOOK V.

[a] The fourth day ſtill continues. The poet by putting the narration in the mouth of Connal, who ſtill remained with Cuchullin on the ſide of Cromla, gives propriety to the praiſes of Fingal. The beginning of this book, in the original, is one of the moſt beautiful parts of the poem. The verſification is regular and full, and agrees very well with the ſedate character of Connal. No poet has adapted the cadence of his verſe more to the temper of the ſpeaker, than Oſſian has done. It is more than probable that the whole poem was originally deſigned to be ſung to the harp, as the verſification is ſo various, and ſo much ſuited to the different paſſions of the human mind.

[b] This paſſage reſembles one in the twenty-third Iliad.
Cloſe lock'd above, their heads and arms are mixt;
Below their planted feet at diſtance fixt;
Now to the graſp each manly body bends;
The humid ſweat from ev'ry pore deſcends;
Their bones reſound with blows: ſides, ſhoulders, thighs, Swell to each gripe, and bloody tumours riſe. Pope.

[c] The ſtory of Orla is ſo beautiful and affecting in the original, that many are in poſſeſſion of it in the north of Scotland, who never heard a ſyllable more of the poem. It varies ries the action, and awakes the attention of the reader when he expected nothing but languor in the conduct of the poem, as the great action was over in the conqueſt of Swaran.

[d] Lamh-dhearg, ſignifies bloody hand. Gelchoſſa, white legged. Tuathal, ſurly. Ulfadda, long-beard. Ferchios, the conqueror of men.

[e] Bran is a common name of gray-hounds to this day. It is a cuſtom in the north of Scotland, to give the names of the heroes mentioned in this poem to their dogs; a proof that they are familiar to the ear, and their fame generally known.

[f] Allad is plainly a druid: he is called the ſon of the rock, from his dwelling in a cave; and the circle of ſtones here mentioned is the pale of the druidical temple. He is here conſulted as one who had a ſupernatural knowledge of things; from the druids, no doubt, came the ridiculous notion of the ſecond ſight, which prevailed in the Highlands and iſles.

[g] The reader will find this paſſage altered from what it was in ancient poetry. It is delivered down very differently by tradition, and the tranſlator has choſen that reading which favours leaſt of bombaſt.

[h] ———as the mountain oak
Nods to the ax, till with a groaning ſound
It ſinks and ſpreads its honours on the ground. Pope.

BOOK VI.

[a] This book opens with the fourth night, and ends on the morning of the ſixth day. The time of five days, five nights, and a part of the ſixth day is taken up in the poem.

The ſcene lies in the heath of Lena, and the mountain Cromla on the coaſt of Ulſter.

[b] By the ſtrength of the ſhell is meant the liquor the heroes drunk; of what kind it was, cannot be aſcertained at this diſtance of time. The tranſlator has met with ſeveral ancient poems that mention wax-lights and wine as common in the halls of Fingal. The names of both are borrowed from the Latin, which plainly ſhews that our anceſtors had them from the Romans, if they had them at all. The Caledonians in their frequent incurſions to the province, might become acquainted with thoſe conveniencies of life, and introduce them into their own country, among the booty which they carried from South Britain.

[c] Trenmor was great grandfather to Fingal. The ſtory is introduced to facilitate the diſmiſſion of Swaran.

[d] This paſſage alludes to the religion of the king of Craca. See a note on a ſimilar ſubject in the third book.

[e] This is the only paſſage in the poem, wherein the wars of Fingal againſt the Romans are alluded to: the Roman emperor is diſtinguiſhed in old compoſitions by the title of king of the world.

[f] Connan was of the family of Morni. He is mentioned in ſeveral other poems, and always appears with the ſame character. The poet paſſed him over in ſilence till now, and his behaviour here deſerves no better uſage.

[g] The practice of ſinging when they row is univerſal among the inhabitants of the north-weſt coaſt of Scotland and the iſles. It deceives time, and inſpirits the rowers.

COMALA:

A DRAMATIC POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

This poem is valuable on account of the light it throws on the antiquity of Oſſian's compoſitions. The Caracul mentioned here, is the ſame with Caracalla the ſon of Severus, who in the year 211 commanded an expedition againſt the Caledonians. The variety of the meaſure ſhews that the poem was originally ſet to muſic, and perhaps preſented before the chiefs upon ſolemn occaſions. Tradition has handed down the ſtory more complete than it is in the poem. "Comala, the daughter of Sarno king of Iniſtore or Orkney iſlands, fell in love with Fingal the ſon of Comhal at a feaſt, to which her father had invited him, (Fingal, B. III.) upon his return from Lochlin, after the death of Agandecca. Her paſſion was ſo violent, that ſhe followed him, diſguiſed like a youth, who wanted to be employed in his wars. She was ſoon diſcovered by Hidallan the ſon of Lamor, one of Fingal's heroes, whoſe love ſhe had ſlighted ſome time before. Her romantic paſſion and beauty recommended her ſo much to the king, that he had reſolved to make her his wife; when news was brought him of Caracul's expedition. He marched to ſtop the progreſs of the enemy, and Comala attended him. He left her on a hill, within ſight of Caracul's army, when he himſelf went to battle, having previouſly promiſed, if he ſurvived, to return that night." The ſequel of the ſtory may be gathered from the poem itſelf.

THE chaſe is over. No noiſe on Ardven but the torrent's roar! Daughter of Morni, come from Crona's banks. Lay down the bow and take the harp. Let the night come on with ſongs, and our joy be great on Ardven.

[a] Melil. And night comes on, thou blue-eyed maid, gray night grows dim along the plain. I ſaw a deer at Crona's ſtream; a moſſy bank he ſeemed through the gloom, but ſoon he bounded away. A meteor played round his branchy horns; and the awful faces of other times looked from the clouds of Crona.

[b] Derſa. Theſe are the ſigns of Fingal's death. The king of ſhields is fallen! and Caracul prevails. Riſe Comala, [c] from thy rocks; daughter of Sarno, riſe riſe in tears. The youth of thy love is low, and his ghoſt is already on our hills.

Melil. There Comala ſits forlorn; two gray dogs near ſhake their rough ears, and catch the flying breeze. Her red cheek reſts on her arm, and the mountain wind is in her hair. She turns her blue-rolling eyes towards the fields of his promiſe. Where art thou, O Fingal, for the night is gathering around?

Comala. O Carun[d] of the ſtreams! why do I behold thy waters rolling in blood? Has the noiſe of the battle been heard on thy banks; and ſleeps the king of Morven? Riſe, moon, thou daughter of the ſky! look from between thy clouds, that I may behold the light of his ſteel, on the field of his promiſe. Or rather let the meteor, that lights our departed fathers through the night, come, with its red light, to ſhew me the way to my fallen hero. Who will defend me from ſorrow? Who from the love of Hidallan? Long ſhall Comala look before ſhe can behold Fingal in the midſt of his hoſt; bright as the beam of the morning in the cloud of an early ſhower.

[e] Hidal. Roll, thou miſt of gloomy Crona, roll on the path of the hunter. Hide his ſteps from mine eyes, and let me remember my friend no more. The bands of battle are ſcattered, and no crowding ſteps are round the noiſe of his ſteel. O Carun, roll thy ſtreams of blood, for the chief of the people fell.

Comala. Who fell on Carun's graſſy banks, ſon of the cloudy night? Was he white as the ſnow of Ardven? Blooming as the bow of the ſhower? Was his hair like the miſt of the hill, ſoft and curling in the day of the ſun? Was he like the thunder of heaven in battle? Fleet as the roe of the deſart?

Hidal. O that I might behold his love, fair-leaning from her rock! Her red eye dim in tears, and her bluſhing cheek half hid in her locks! Blow, thou gentle breeze, and lift the heavy locks of the maid, that I may behold her white arm, and lovely cheek of her ſorrow!

Comala. And is the ſon of Comhal fallen, chief of the mournful tale? The thunder rolls on the hill! The lightning flies on wings of fire! But they frighten not Comala; for her Fingal fell. Say, chief of the mournful tale, fell the breaker of ſhields?

Hidal. The nations are ſcattered on their hills; for they ſhall hear the voice of the chief no more.

Comala. Confuſion purſue thee over thy plains; and deſtruction overtake thee, thou king of the world. Few be thy ſteps to the grave; and let one virgin virgin mourn thee. Let her be, like Comala, tearful in the days of her youth. Why haſt thou told me, Hidallan, that my hero fell? I might have hoped a little while his return, and have thought I ſaw him on the diſtant rock; a tree might have deceived me with his appearance; and the wind of the hill been the ſound of his horn in mine ear. O that I were on the banks of Carun! that my tears might be warm on his cheek!

Hidal. He lies on the banks of Carun: on Ardven, heroes raiſe his tomb. Look on them, O moon, from thy clouds; be thy beam bright on his breaſt, that Comala may behold him in the light of his armour.

Comala. Stop, ye ſons of the grave, till I behold my love. He left me at the chace alone. I knew not that he went to war. He ſaid he would return with the night; and the king of Morven is returned. Why didſt thou not tell me that he would fall, O trembling ſon of the rock[f]! Thou haſt ſeen him in the blood of his youth, but thou didſt not tell Comala.

Melil. What ſound is that on Ardven! Who is that bright in the vale? Who comes like the ſtrength of rivers, when their crowded waters glitter to the moon?

Comala.

Comala. Who is it but the foe of Comala, the ſon of the king of the world! Ghoſt of Fingal! do thou, from thy cloud, direct Comala's bow. Let him fall like the hart of the deſart. It is Fingal in the crowd of his ghoſts. Why doſt thou come, my love, to frighten and pleaſe my ſoul?

Fingal. Raiſe, ye bards of the ſong, the wars of the ſtreamy Carun. Caracul has fled from my arms along the fields of his pride. He ſets far diſtant like a meteor that incloſes a ſpirit of night, when the winds drive it over the heath, and the dark woods are gleaming around. I heard a voice like the breeze of my hills. Is it the huntreſs of Galmal, the white-handed daughter of Sarno? Look from thy rocks, my love; and let me hear the voice of Comala.

Comala. Take me to the cave of thy reſt, O lovely ſon of death!

Fingal. Come to the cave of my reſt. The ſtorm is over, and the ſun is on our fields. Come to the cave of my reſt, huntreſs of echoing Cona.

Comala. He is returned with his fame; I feel the right hand of his battles. But I muſt reſt beſide the rock till my ſoul ſettle from fear. Let the harp be near; and raiſe the ſong, ye daughters of Morni.

Derſa. Comala has ſlain three deer on Ardven, and the fire aſcends on the rock; go to the feaſt of Comala, king of the woody Morven!

Fingal. Raiſe ye ſons of ſong, the wars of the ſtreamy Caran; that my white-handed maid may rejoice: while I behold the feaſt of my love.

Bards. Roll, ſtreamy Carun, roll in joy, the ſons of battle fled. The ſteed is not ſeen on our fields; and the wings [g] of their pride ſpread in other lands. The ſun will now riſe in peace, and the ſhadows deſcend in joy. The voice of the chaſe will be heard; and the ſhields hang in the hall. Our delight will be in the war of the ocean, and our hands be red in the blood of Lochlin. Roll, ſtreamy Carun, roll in joy, the ſons of battle fled.

Melil. Deſcend, ye light miſts from high; ye moon-beams, lift her ſoul. Pale lies the maid at the rock! Comala is no more!

Fingal. Is the daughter of Sarno dead; the white boſomed maid of my love? Meet me Comala, on my heaths, when I ſit alone at the ſtreams of my hills.

Hidal. Ceaſed the voice of the huntreſs of Galmal? Why did I trouble the ſoul of the maid? When ſhall I ſee thee, with joy, in the chaſe of the dark-brown hinds?

Fingal.

Fingal. Youth of the gloomy brow! no more ſhalt thou feaſt in my halls. Thou ſhalt not purſue my chaſe, and my foes ſhall not fall by thy ſword [h]. Lead me to the place of her reſt that I may behold her beauty. Pale ſhe lies at the rock, and the cold winds lift her hair. Her bow-ſtring ſounds in the blaſt, and her arrow was broken in her fall. Raiſe the praiſe of the daughter of Sarno, and give her name to the wind of hills.

Bards. See meteors roll around the maid; and moon beams lift her ſoul! Around her, from their clouds, bend the awful faces of her fathers; Sarno [i] of the gloomy brow; and the red-rolling eyes of Fidallan. When ſhall thy white-hand ariſe, and thy voice be heard on our rocks? The maids ſhall ſeek thee on the heath, but they will not find thee. Thou ſhalt come, at times, to their dreams, and ſettle peace in their ſoul. Thy voice ſhall remain in their ears, and they ſhall think with joy on the dreams of their reſt. Meteors roll around the maid, and moon-beams lift her ſoul!

[c] Comala, the maid of the pleaſant brow.

[d] Caran or Cra'on, a winding river. This river retains ſtill the name of Carron, and falls into the Forth ſome miles to the north of Falkirk.

[e] Hidallan was ſent by Fingal to give notice to Comala of his return; he, to revenge himſelf on her for ſlighting his love ſome time before, told her that the king was killed in battle. He even pretended that he carried his body from the field to be buried in her preſence; and this circumſtance makes it probable that the poem was preſented of old.

[f] By the ſon of the rock ſhe means a druid. It is probable that ſome of the order of the druids remained as late as the beginning of the reign of Fingal; and that Comala had conſulted one of them concerning the event of the war with Caracul.

[g] Perhaps the poet alludes to the Roman eagle.

[h] The ſequel of the ſtory of Hidallan is introduced, as an epiſode, in the poem which immediately follows in this collection.

[i] Sarno the father of Comala died ſoon after the flight of his daughter. Fidallan was the firſt king that reigned in Iniſtore.

THE WAR OF CAROS:

A POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

Caros is probably the noted uſurper Carauſius, by birth a Menapian, who aſſumed the purple in the year 284; and, ſeizing on Britain, defeated the emperor Maximian Herculius in ſeveral naval engagements, which gives propriety to his being called in this poem the king of ſhips. He repaired Agricola's wall, in order to obſtruct the incurſions of the Caledonians; and when he was employed in that work, it appears he was attacked by a party under the command of Oſcar the ſon of Oſſian. This battle is the foundation of the preſent poem, which is addreſſed to Malvina the daughter of Toſcar.

BRING, daughter of Toſcar, bring the harp; the light of the ſong riſes in Oſſian's ſoul. It is like the field, when darkneſs covers the hills around, and the ſhadow grows ſlowly on the plain of the ſun.

I behold my ſon, O Malvina, near the moſſy rock of Crona [a] but it is the miſt of the deſart tinged with the beam of the weſt: Lovely is the miſt that aſſumes the form of Oſcar! turn from it, ye winds, when ye roar on the ſide of Ardven.

Who

Who comes towards my ſon, with the murmur of a ſong? His ſtaff is in his hand, his gray hair looſe on the wind. Surely joy lightens his face; and he often looks back to Caros. It is Ryno [b] of the ſong, he that went to view the foe.

"What does Caros king of ſhips," ſaid the ſon of the now mournful Oſſian? "ſpreads he the wings [c] of his pride, bard of the times of old?"

"He ſpreads them, Oſcar," replied the bard, "but it is behind his gathered heap [d]. He looks over his ſtones with fear, and beholds thee, terrible, as the ghoſt of night that rolls the wave to his ſhips."

"Go, thou firſt of my bards," ſays Oſcar, "and take the ſpear of Fingal. Fix a flame on its point, and ſhake it to the winds of heaven. Bid him in ſongs to advance, and leave the rolling of his wave. Tell to Caros that I long for battle; and that my bow is weary of the chaſe of Cona. Tell him the mighty are not here; and that my arm is young."

He went with the ſound of his ſong. Oſcar reared his voice on high. It reached his heroes on Ardven, like the noiſe of a cave; when the ſea of Togorma rolls before it; and its trees meet the roaring winds. They gather around my ſon like the ſtreams of the hill; when, after rain, they roll in the pride of their courſe.

Ryno

Ryno came to the mighty Caros, and ſtruck his flaming ſpear. "Come to the battle of Oſcar, O thou that ſitteſt on the rolling of waters. Fingal is diſtant far; he hears the ſongs of his bards in Morven: and the wind of his hall is in his hair. His terrible ſpear is at his ſide; and his ſhield that is like that darkened moon. Come to the battle of Oſcar, the hero is alone."

He came not over the ſtreamy Carun;[e] the bard returned with his ſong. Gray night grows dim on Crona. The feaſt of ſhells is ſpread. A hundred oaks burn to the wind, and faint light gleams over the heath. The ghoſts of Ardven paſs through the beam, and ſhew their dim and diſtant forms. Comala[f] is half unſeen on her meteor; and Hidallan is ſullen and dim, like the darkened moon behind the miſt of night.

"Why art thou ſad?" ſaid Ryno; for he alone beheld the chief. "Why art thou ſad, Hidallan, haſt thou not received thy fame? The ſongs of Oſſian have been heard, and thy ghoſt has brightened in the wind, when thou didſt bend from thy cloud to hear the ſong of Morven's bard."

"And do thine eyes behold the hero," ſaid Oſcar, "like the dim meteor of night? Say, Ryno, ſay, how fell the chief that was ſo renowned in the days of our fathers? His name remains on the rocks rocks of Cona; and I have often ſeen the ſtreams of his hills."

Fingal, replied the bard, had driven Hidallan from his wars. The king's ſoul was ſad for Comala, and his eyes could not behold Hidallan. Lonely, ſad, along the heath, he ſlowly moved with ſilent ſteps. His arms hang diſordered on his ſide. His hair flies looſe from his helmet. The tear is in his down-caſt eyes; and the ſigh half ſilent in his breaſt. Three days he ſtrayed unſeen, alone, before he came to Lamor's halls: the moſſy halls of his fathers, at the ſtream of Balva.[g] There Lamor ſat alone beneath a tree; for he had ſent his people with Hidallan to war. The ſtream ran at his feet, and his grey hairs reſted on his ſtaff. Sightleſs are his aged eyes. He hums the ſong of other times. The noiſe of Hidallan's feet came to his ear: he knew the tread of his ſon.

"Is the ſon of Lamor returned; or is it the ſound of his ghoſt? Haſt thou fallen on the banks of Carun, ſon of the aged Lamor? Or, if I hear the ſound of Hidallan's feet; where are the mighty in war? where are my people, Hidallan, that were wont to return with their echoing ſhields? Have they fallen on the banks of Carun?"

"No:" replied the ſighing youth, "the people of Lamor live. They are renowned in battle, my father; ther; but Hidallan is renowned no more. I muſt ſit alone on the banks of Balva, when the roar of the battle grows."

"But thy fathers never ſat alone," replied the riſing pride of Lamor. "They never ſat alone on the banks of Balva, when the roar of battle roſe. Doſt thou not behold that tomb? Mine eyes diſcern it not: there reſts the noble Garmallon who never fled from war. Come, thou renowned in battle, he ſays, come to thy father's tomb. How am I renowned, Garmallon? my ſon has fled from war!"

"King of the ſtreamy Balva!" ſaid Hidallan with a ſigh, "why doſt thou torment my ſoul? Lamor, I never feared. Fingal was ſad for Comala, and denied his wars to Hidallan: Go to the gray ſtreams of thy land, he ſaid, and moulder like a leafleſs oak, which the winds have bent over Balva, never more to grow!"

"And muſt I hear," Lamor replied, "the lonely tread of Hidallan's feet? When thouſands are renowned in battle, ſhall he bend over my gray ſtreams? Spirit of the noble Garmallon! carry Lamor to his place; his eyes are dark; his ſoul is ſad: and his ſon has loſt his fame!"

"Where," ſaid the youth, "ſhall I ſearch for fame to gladden the ſoul of Lamor? From whence ſhall I return with renown, that the ſound of my arms may be pleaſant in his ear? If I go to the chaſe of hinds, my name will not be heard. Lamor will not feel my dogs, with his hands, glad at my arrival from the hill. He will not inquire of his mountains, or of the dark-brown deer of his déſarts.

"I muſt fall," ſaid Lamor, "like a leafleſs oak: it grew on a rock, but the winds have overturned it. My ghoſt will be ſeen on my hills, mournful for my young Hidallan. Will not ye, ye miſts, as ye riſe, hide him from my ſight? My ſon! go to Lamor's hall: there the arms of our fathers hang. Bring the ſword of Garmallon; he took it from a foe."

He went and brought the ſword with all its ſtudded thongs. He gave it to his father. The gray-haired hero felt the point with his hand.

"My ſon! lead me to Garmallon's tomb: it riſes beſide that ruſtling tree. The long graſs is withered; I heard the breeze whiſtling there. A little fountain murmurs near, and ſends its water to Balva. There let me reſt; it is noon: and the ſun is on our fields."

He led him to Garmallon's tomb. Lamor pierced the ſide of his ſon. They ſleep together; and their ancient halls moulder on Balva's banks.

Ghoſts

Ghoſts are ſeen there at noon: the valley is ſilent, and the people ſhun the place of Lamor.

"Mournful is thy tale," ſaid Oſcar, "ſon of the times of old! My ſoul ſighs for Hidallan; he fell in the days of his youth. He flies on the blaſt of the deſart, and his wandering is in a foreign land. Sons of the echoing Morven! draw near to the foes of Fingal. Send the night away in ſongs; and watch the ſtrength of Caros. Oſcar goes to the people of other times; to the ſhades of ſilent Ardven; where his fathers ſit dim in their clouds, and behold the future war. And art thou there, Hidallan, like a half-extinguiſhed meteor? Come to my ſight, in thy ſorrow, chief of the roaring Balva!"

The heroes move with their ſongs. Oſcar ſlowly aſcends the hill. The meteors of night are ſetting on the heath before him. A diſtant torrent faintly roars. Unfrequent blaſts ruſh through aged oaks. The half enlightened moon ſinks dim and red behind her hill. Feeble voices are heard on the heath. Oſcar drew his ſword.

"Come," ſaid the hero, "O ye ghoſts of my fathers! ye that fought againſt the kings of the world! Tell me the deeds of future times; and your diſcourſe in your caves: when you talk together and behold your ſons in the fields of the valiant."

Trenmor came, from his hill, at the voice of his mighty ſon. A cloud, like the ſteed of the ſtranger, ſupported his airy limbs. His robe is of the miſt of Lano, that brings death to the people. His ſword is a meteor half-extinguiſhed. His face is without form, and dark. He ſighed thrice over the hero: and thrice the winds of the night roared around. Many were his words to Oſcar: but they only came by halves to our ears: they were dark as the tales of other times, before the light of the ſong aroſe. He ſlowly vaniſhed like a miſt that melts on the ſunny hill. It was then, O daughter of Toſcar, my ſon began firſt to be ſad. He foreſaw the fall of his race; and, at times, he was thoughtful and dark; like the ſun when he carries a cloud on his face: but he looks afterwards on the hills of Cona.

Oſcar paſſed the night among his fathers, gray morning met him on the banks of Carun. A green vale ſurrounded a tomb which aroſe in the times of old. Little hills lift their heads at a diſtance; and ſtretch their old trees to the wind. The warriors of Caros ſat there, for they had paſſed the ſtream by night. They appeared, like the trunks of aged pines, to the pale light of the morning. Oſcar ſtood at the tomb, and raiſed thrice his terrible voice. The rocking hills echoed around: the ſtarting ing roes bounded away. And the trembling ghoſts of the dead fled, ſhrieking on their clouds. So terrible was the voice of my ſon, when he called his friends.

A thouſand ſpears roſe around; the people of Caros roſe. Why, daughter of Toſcar, why that tear? My ſon, though alone, is brave. Oſcar is like a beam of the ſky; he turns around and the people fall. His hand is like the arm of a ghoſt, when he ſtretches it from a cloud; the reſt of his thin form is unſeen: but the people die in the vale! My ſon beheld the approach of the foe; and he ſtood in the ſilent darkneſs of his ſtrength. "Am I alone, ſaid Oſcar, in the midſt of a thouſand foes? Many a ſpear is there! many a darkly-rolling eye! Shall I fly to Ardven? But did my fathers ever fly! The mark of their arm is in a thouſand battles. Oſcar too will be renowned. Come, ye dim ghoſts of my fathers, and behold my deeds in war! I may fall; but I will be renowned like the race of the echoing Morven." He ſtood dilated in his place, like a flood ſwelling in a narrow vale. The battle came, but they fell: bloody was the ſword of Oſcar.

The noiſe reached his people at Crona; they came like a hundred ſtreams. The warriors of Caros fled, and Oſcar remained like a rock left by the ebbing ſea.

Now

Now dark and deep, with all his ſteeds, Caros rolled his might along: the little ſtreams are loſt in his courſe; and the earth is rocking round. Battle ſpreads from wing to wing: ten thouſand ſwords gleam at once in the ſky. But why ſhould Oſſian ſing of battles? For never more ſhall my ſteel ſhine in war. I remember the days of my youth with ſorrow; when I feel the weakneſs of my arm. Happy are they who fell in their youth, in the midſt of their renown! They have not beheld the tombs of their friends: or failed to bend the bow of their ſtrength. Happy art thou, O Oſcar, in the midſt of thy ruſhing blaſt. Thou often goeſt to the fields of thy fame, where Caros fled from thy lifted ſword.

Darkneſs comes on my ſoul, O fair daughter of Toſcar, I behold not the form of my ſon at Carun; nor the figure of Oſcar on Crona. The ruſtling winds have carried him far away; and the heart of his father is ſad.

But lead me, O Malvina, to the ſound of my woods, and the roar of my mountain ſtreams. Let the chace be heard on Cona; that I may think on the days of other years. And bring me the harp, O maid, that I may touch it when the light of my ſoul ſhall ariſe. Be thou near, to learn the ſong; and future times ſhall hear of Oſſian.

The

The ſons of the feeble hereafter will lift the voice on Cona; and, looking up to the rocks, ſay, "Here Oſſian dwelt." They ſhall admire the chiefs of old, and the race that are no more: while we ride on our clouds, Malvina, on the wings of the roaring winds. Our voices ſhall be heard, at times, in the deſart; and we ſhall ſing on the winds of the rock.

NOTES ON THE WAR OF CAROS:

[a] Crona is the name of a ſmall ſtream which runs into the Carron. On its banks is the ſcene of the preceding dramatic poem.

[b] Ryno is often mentioned in the ancient poetry. He ſeems to have been a bard, of the firſt rank, in the days of Fingal.

[c] The Roman eagle.

[d] Agricola's wall, which Carauſius repaired.

[e] The river Carron.

[f] This is the ſcene of Comala's death, which is the ſubject of the dramatic poem. The poet mentions her in this place, in order to introduce the ſequel of Hidallan's ſtory, who, on account of her death, had been expelled from the wars of Fingal.

[g] This is perhaps that ſmall ſtream, ſtill retaining the name of Balva, which runs through the romantic valley of Glentivar in Stirlingſhire. Balva ſignifies a ſilent ſtream; and Glentivar, the ſequeſtered vale.

THE WAR OF INIS-THONA: A POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

This poem is an epiſode introduced in a great work compoſed by Oſſian, in which the actions of his friends, and his beloved ſon Oſcar, were interwoven. The work itſelf is loſt, but ſome epiſodes, and the ſtory of the poem, are handed down by tradition. Inis-thona was an iſland of Scandinavia, ſubject to its own king, but depending upon the kingdom of Lochlin.

OUR youth is like the dream of the hunter on the hill of heath. He ſleeps in the mild beams of the ſun; but he awakes amidſt a ſtorm; the red lightning flies around: and the trees ſhake their heads to the wind. He looks back with joy on the day of the ſun, and the pleaſant dreams of his reſt!

When ſhall Oſſian's youth return, or his ear delight in the ſound of arms? When ſhall I, like Oſcar, travel in the light of my ſteel? Come, with your ſtreams, ye hills of Cona, and liſten to the voice of Oſſian? The ſong riſes, like the ſun, in my ſoul; and my heart feels the joys of other times.

I behold

I behold my towers, O Selma! and the oaks of thy ſhaded wall: thy ſtreams ſound in my ear; thy heroes gather round. Fingal ſits in the midſt; and leans on the ſhield of Trenmor: his ſpear ſtands againſt the wall; he liſtens to the ſong of his bards. The deeds of his arm are heard; and the actions of the king in his youth.

Oſcar had returned from the chaſe, and heard the hero's praiſe. He took the ſhield of Branno [a] from the wall; his eyes were filled with tears. Red was the cheek of youth. His voice was trembling, low. My ſpear ſhook its bright head in his hand: he ſpoke to Morven's king.

"Fingal! thou king of heroes! Oſſian, next to him in war! ye have fought the battle in your youth; your names are renowned in ſong. Oſcar is like the miſt of Cona: I appear and vaniſh. The bard will not know my name. The hunter will not ſearch in the heath for my tomb. Let me fight, O heroes, in the battles of Inis-thona. Diſtant is the land of my war! ye ſhall not hear of Oſcar's fall. Some bard may find me there, and give my name to the ſong. The daughter of the ſtranger ſhall ſee my tomb, and weep over the youth that came from afar. The bard ſhall ſay, at the feaſt, hear the ſong of Oſcar from the diſtant land."

"Oſcar," replied the king of Morven; "thou ſhalt fight, ſon of my fame! Prepare my dark-boſomed ſhip to carry my hero to Inis-thona. Son of my ſon, regard our fame: for thou art of the race of renown. Let not the children of ſtrangers ſay, feeble are the ſons of Morven! Be thou, in battle, like the roaring ſtorm: mild as the evening ſun in peace. Tell, Oſcar, to Inis-thona's king, that Fingal remembers his youth; when we ſtrove in the combat together in the days of Agandecca."

They lifted up the ſounding ſail; the wind whiſtled through the thongs[b] of their maſts. Waves laſhed the oozy rocks: the ſtrength of ocean roared. My ſon beheld, from the wave, the land of groves. He ruſhed into the echoing bay of Runa; and ſent his ſword to Annir king of ſpears. The gray-haired hero roſe, when he ſaw the ſword of Fingal. His eyes were full of tears; and he remembered the battles of their youth. Twice they lifted the ſpear before the lovely Agandecca: heroes ſtood far diſtant, as if two ghoſts contended.

"But now," begun the king, "I am old; the ſword lies uſeleſs in my hall. Thou who art of Morven's race! Annir has been in the ſtrife of ſpears; but he is pale and withered now, like the oak of Lano. I have no ſon to meet thee with joy, or to carry thee to the halls of his fathers.

Argon

Argon is pale in the tomb, and Ruro is no more. My daughter is in the hall of ſtrangers, and longs to behold my tomb. Her ſpouſe ſhakes ten thouſand ſpears; and comes [c] like a cloud of death from Lano. Come thou to ſhare the feaſt of Annir, ſon of echoing Morven."

Three days they feaſted together; on the fourth Annir heard the name of Oſcar.[d] They rejoiced in the ſhell;[e] and purſued the boars of Runa. Beſide the fount of moſſy ſtones, the weary heroes reſt. The tear ſteals in ſecret from Annir: and he broke the riſing ſigh. "Here darkly reſt," the hero ſaid, "the children of my youth. This ſtone is the tomb of Ruro: that tree ſounds over the grave of Argon. Do ye hear my voice, O my ſons, within your narrow houſe? Or do ye ſpeak in theſe ruſtling leaves, when the winds of the deſart riſe?"

"King of Inis-thona," ſaid Oſcar, "how fell the children of youth? The wild-boar often ruſhes over their tombs, but he does not diſturb the hunters. They purſue deer [f] formed of clouds, and bend their airy-bow. They ſtill love the ſport of their youth; and mount the wind with joy."

"Cormalo," replied the king, "is chief of ten thouſand ſpears; he dwells at the dark-rolling waters of Lano; [g] which ſend forth the cloud of death. He came to Runa's echoing halls, and fought the honour of the ſpear.[h] The youth was lovely as the firſt beam of the ſun; and few were they who could meet him in fight! My heroes yielded to Cormalo: and my daughter loved the ſon of Lano. Argon and Ruro returned from the chaſe; the tears of their pride deſcended: They rolled their ſilent eyes on Runa's heroes, becauſe they yielded to a ſtranger: three days they feaſted with Cormalo: on the fourth my Argon fought. But who could fight with Argon! Lano's chief was overcome. His heart ſwelled with the grief of pride, and he reſolved in ſecret to behold the death of my ſons. They went to the hills of Runa, and purſued the dark-brown hinds. The arrow of Cormalo flew in ſecret; and my children fell. He came to the maid of his love; to Inis-thona's dark-haired maid. They fled over the deſart, and Annir remained alone. Night came on and day appeared; nor Argon's voice, nor Ruro's came. At length their much loved dog is ſeen; the fleet and bounding Runar. He came into the hall and howled; and ſeemed to look towards the place of their fall. We followed him: we found them there: and laid them by this moſſy ſtream. This is the haunt of Annir, when the chaſe of the hinds is over. I bend like the trunk of an aged oak above them: and my tears for ever flow."

"O Ronnan!"

"O Ronnan!" ſaid the riſing Oſcar, "Ogar king of ſpears! call my heroes to my ſide, the ſons of ſtreamy Morven. To-day we go to Lano's water, that ſends forth the cloud of death. Cormalo will not long rejoice: death is often at the point of our ſwords."

They came over the deſart like ſtormy clouds, when the winds roll them over the heath: their edges are tinged with lightning: and the echoing groves foreſee the ſtorm. The horn of Oſcar's battle was heard; and Lano ſhook in all its waves. The children of the lake convened around the ſounding ſhield of Cormalo. Oſcar fought, as he was wont in battle. Cormalo fell beneath his ſword: and the ſons of the diſmal Lano fled to their ſecret vales. Oſcar brought the daughter of Inis-thona to Annir's echoing halls. The face of age was bright with joy; he bleſt the king of ſwords.

How great was the joy of Oſſian, when he beheld the diſtant ſail of his ſon! it was like a cloud of light that riſes in the eaſt, when the traveller is ſad in a land unknown; and diſmal night, with her ghoſts, is ſitting around him. We brought him, with ſongs, to Selma's halls. Fingal ordered the feaſt of ſhells to be ſpread. A thouſand bards raiſed the name of Oſcar: and Morven anſwered to the noiſe. The daughter of Toſcar was there, and her voice was like the harp; when the diſtant ſound comes, in the evening, on the ſoft ruſtling breeze of the vale.

O lay me, ye that ſee the light, near ſome rock of my hills: let the thick hazels be around, let the ruſtling oak be near. Green be the place of my reſt; and let the ſound of the diſtant torrent be heard. Daughter of Toſcar, take the harp, and raiſe the lovely ſong of Selma; that ſleep may overtake my ſoul in the midſt of joy; that the dreams of my youth may return, and the days of the mighty Fingal. Selma! I behold thy towers, thy trees, and ſhaded wall. I ſee the heroes of Morven; and hear the ſong of bards. Oſcar lifts the ſword of Cormalo; and a thouſand youths admire its ſtudded thongs. They look with wonder on my ſon; and admire the ſtrength of his arm. They mark the joy of his father's eyes; they long for an equal fame. And ye ſhall have your fame, O ſons of ſtreamy Morven. My ſoul is often brightened with the ſong; and I remember the companions of my youth. But ſleep deſcends with the ſound of the harp; and pleaſant dreams begin to riſe. Ye ſons of the chaſe ſtand far diſtant, nor diſturb my reſt. The bard of other times converſes now with his fathers, the chiefs of the days of old.

old. Sons of the chaſe ſtand far diſtant; diſturb not the dreams of Oſſian.

THE WAR OF INIS-THONA.

[a] This is Branno, the father of Everallin, and grandfather to Oſcar; he was of Iriſh extraction, and lord of the country round the lake of Lego. His great actions are handed down by tradition, and his hoſpitality has paſſed into a proverb.

[b] Leather thongs were uſed in Oſſian's time, inſtead of ropes.

[c] Cormalo had reſolved on a war againſt his father-in-law Annir king of Inis-thona, in order to deprive him of his kingdom; the injuſtice of his deſigns was ſo much reſented by Fingal, that he ſent his grandſon, Oſcar, to the aſſiſtance of Annir. Both armies came ſoon to a battle, in which the conduct and valour of Oſcar obtained a complete victory. An end was put to the war by the death of Cormalo, who fell in a ſingle combat, by Oſcar's hand. Thus is the ſtory delivered down by tradition; though the poet, to raiſe the character of his ſon, makes Oſcar himſelf propoſe the expedition.

[d] It was thought, in thoſe days of heroiſm, an infringement upon the laws of hoſpitality, to aſk the name of a ſtranger, before he had feaſted three days in the great hall of the family. He that aſks the name of the ſtranger, is, to this this day an opprobrious term applied, in the north, to the inhoſpitable.

[e] To rejoice in the ſhell is a phraſe for feaſting ſumptuouſly, and drinking freely.

[f] The notion of Oſſian concerning the ſtate of the deceaſed, was the ſame with that of the ancient Greeks and Romans. They imagined that the ſouls purſued, in their ſeparate ſtate, the employments and pleaſures of their former life.

[g] Lano was a lake of Scandinavia, remarkable, in the days of Oſſian, for emitting a peſtilential vapour in autumn. And thou, O valiant Duchomar, like the miſt of marſhy Lano; when it ſails over the plains of autumn, and brings death to the people. Fingal, B. I.

A POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

Fingal, on his return from Ireland, after he had expelled Swaran from that kingdom, made a feaſt to all his heroes: he forgot to invite Ma-ronnan and Aldo, two chiefs, who had not been along with him on his expedition. They reſented his neglect: and went over to Erragon king of Sora, a country of Scandinavia, the declared enemy of Fingal. The valour of Aldo ſoon gained him a great reputation in Sora; and Lorma the beautiful wife of Erragon fell in love with him. He found means to eſcape with her, and to come to Fingal, who reſided then in Selma on the weſtern coaſt. Erragon invaded Scotland, and was ſlain in battle by Gaul the ſon of Morni, after he had rejected terms of peace offered him by Fingal. In this war Aldo fell, in a ſingle combat, by the hands of his rival Erragon; and the unfortunate Lorma afterwards died of grief.

SON of the diſtant land, who dwelleſt in the ſecret cell! do I hear the ſounds of thy grove? or is it the voice of thy ſongs? The torrent was loud in my ear, but I heard a tuneful voice; doſt thou praiſe the chiefs of thy land; or the ſpirits [a] of the wind? But, lonely dweller of the rocks! look over that heathy plain: thou ſeeſt green tombs, with their rank, whiſtling graſs; with their ſtones of moſſy heads: thou ſeeſt them, ſon of the rock; but Oſſian's eyes have failed.

A mountain ſtream comes roaring down and ſends its waters round a green hill: four moſſy ſtones, in the midſt of withered graſs, rear their heads on the top: two trees which the ſtorms have bent, ſpread their whiſtling branches around. This is thy dwelling, Erragon [b]; this thy narrow houſe: the ſound of thy ſhells has been long forgot in Sora: and thy ſhield is become dark in thy hall. Erragon, king of ſhips! chief of diſtant Sora: how haſt thou fallen on our mountains? How is the mighty low? Son of the ſecret cell! doſt thou delight in ſongs? Hear the battle of Lora: the ſound of its ſteel is long ſince paſt. So thunder on the darkened hill roars and is no more. The ſun returns with his ſilent beams: the glittering rocks, and the green heads of the mountains ſmile.

The bay of Cona received our ſhips [c], from Ullin's rolling waves: our white ſheets hung looſe to the maſts: and the boiſterous winds roared behind the groves of Morven. The horn of the king is ſounded, and the deer ſtart from the rocks. Our arrows flew in the woods; and the feaſt of the hill was ſpread. Our joy was great on our rocks, for the fall of the terrible Swaran. Two heroes were forgot at our feaſt; and the rage of their boſoms burned. They rolled their red eyes in ſecret: the ſigh burſt from their breaſts. They are ſeen to talk together, and to throw their ſpears on earth. They were two dark clouds, in the miſt of our joy; like pillars of miſt on the ſettled ſea: it glitters to the ſun, but the mariners fear a ſtorm.

"Raiſe my white ſails," ſaid Ma-ronna, "raiſe them to the winds of the weſt; let us ruſh, O Aldo, through the foam of the northern wave. We are forgot at the feaſt: but our arms have been red in blood. Let us leave the hills of Fingal, and ſerve the king of Sora. His countenance is fierce, and the war darkens round his ſpear. Let us be renowned, O Aldo, in the battles of echoing Sora."

They took their ſwords and ſhields of thongs; and ruſhed to Lumar's ſounding bay. They came to Sora's haughty king, the chief of bounding ſteeds. Erragon had returned from the chaſe: his ſpear was red in blood. He bent his dark face to the ground: and whiſtled as he went. He took ſtrangers to his feaſts: they fought and conquered in his wars.

Aldo returned with his fame towards Sora's lofty walls. From her tower looked the ſpouſe of Erragon, the humid, rolling eyes of Lorma. Her dark-brown hair flies on the wind of ocean: her white breaſt heaves, like ſnow on the heath; when the gentle winds ariſe, and ſlowly move it in the light. She ſaw young Aldo, like the beam of Sora's ſetting ſun. Her ſoft heart ſighed: tears filled her eyes; and her white arm ſupported her head. Three days ſhe ſat within the hall, and covered grief with joy. On the fourth ſhe fled with the hero, along the rolling ſea. They came to Cona's moſſy towers, to Fingal king of ſpears.

"Aldo of the heart of pride!" ſaid the riſing king of Morven, "ſhall I defend thee from the wrath of Sora's injured king? who will now receive my people into their halls, or give the feaſt of ſtrangers, ſince Aldo of the little ſoul, has carried away the fair of Sora? Go to thy hills, thou feeble hand, and hide thee in thy caves; mournful is the battle we muſt fight, with Sora's gloomy king. Spirit of the noble Trenmor! when will Fingal ceaſe to fight? I was born in the midſt of battles [d], and my ſteps muſt move in blood to my tomb. But my hand did not injure the weak, my ſteel did not touch the feeble in arms. I behold thy tempeſts, O Morven, which will overturn my halls; when my children are dead in battle, and none remain to dwell in Selma. Then will the feeble come, but they will not know my tomb: my renown is in the ſong: and my actions ſhall be as a dream to future times."

His people gathered around Erragon, as the ſtorms round the ghoſt of night; when he calls them from the top of Morven, and prepares to pour them on the land of the ſtranger. He came to the ſhore of Cona, and ſent his bard to the king; to demand the combat of thouſands; or the land of many hills. Fingal ſat in his hall with the companions of his youth around him. The young heroes were at the chaſe, and far diſtant in the deſart. The gray-haired chiefs talked of other times, and of the actions of their youth; when the aged Narthmor [e] came, the king of ſtreamy Lora.

"This is no time," begun the chief, "to hear the ſongs of other years: Erragon frowns on the coaſt, and lifts ten thouſand ſwords. Gloomy is the king among his chiefs! he is like the darkened moon, amidſt the meteors of night."

"Come," ſaid Fingal, "from thy hall, thou daughter of my love; come from thy hall, Boſmina [f], maid of ſtreamy Morven! Narthmor, take the the ſteeds [g] of the ſtrangers, and attend the daughter of Fingal: let her bid the king of Sora to our feaſt, to Selma's ſhaded wall. Offer him, O Boſmina, the peace of heroes, and the wealth of generous Aldo: our youths are far diſtant, and age is on our trembling hands."

She came to the hoſt Erragon, like a beam of light to a cloud. In her right hand ſhone an arrow of gold; and in her left a ſparkling ſhell, the ſign of Morven's peace. Erragon brightened in her preſence as a rock, before the ſudden beams of the ſun; when they iſſue from a broken cloud, divided by the roaring wind.

"Son of the diſtant Sora," begun the mildly bluſhing maid, "come to the feaſt of Morven's king, to Selma's ſhaded walls. Take the peace of heroes, O warriour, and let the dark ſword reſt by thy ſide. And if thou chuſeſt the wealth of kings, hear the words of the generous Aldo. He gives to Erragon an hundred ſteeds, the children of the rein; an hundred maids from diſtant lands; an hundred hawks with fluttering wing, that fly acroſs the ſky. An hundred girdles [h] ſhall alſo be thine, to bind high-boſomed women; the friends of the births of heroes, and the cure of the ſons of toil. Ten ſhells ſtudded with gems ſhall ſhine in Sora's towers: the blue water trembles on their ſtars, ſtars, and ſeems to be ſparkling wine. They gladdened once the kings of the world [i], in the midſt of their echoing halls. Theſe, O hero, ſhall be thine; or thy white-boſomed ſpouſe. Lorma ſhall roll her bright eyes in thy halls; though Fingal loves the generous Aldo: Fingal! who never injured a hero, though his arm is ſtrong."

"Soft voice of Cona!" replied the king, "tell him, that he ſpreads his feaſt in vain. Let Fingal pour his ſpoils around me; and bend beneath my power. Let him give me the ſwords of his fathers, and the ſhields of other times: that my children may behold them in my halls, and ſay, Theſe are the arms of Fingal."

"Never ſhall they behold them in thy halls," ſaid the riſing pride of the maid. "They are in the mighty hands of heroes who never yielded in war. King of the echoing Sora! the ſtorm is gathering on our hills. Doſt thou not foreſee the fall of thy people, ſon of the diſtant land?"

She came to Selma's ſilent halls; the king beheld her down-caſt eyes. He roſe from his place, in his ſtrength, and ſhook his aged locks. He took the ſounding mail of Trenmor, and the dark-brown ſhield of his fathers. Darkneſs filled Selma's hall, when he ſtretched his hand to his ſpear: the ghoſts of thouſands were near, and foreſaw the the death of the people. Terrible joy roſe in the face of the aged heroes: they ruſhed to meet the foe; their thoughts are on the actions of other years; and on the fame of the tomb.

Now the dogs of the chaſe appeared at Trathal's tomb: Fingal knew that his young heroes followed them, and he ſtopt in the midſt of his courſe. Oſcar appeared the firſt; then Morni's ſon, and Nemi's race: Fercuth [k] ſhewed his gloomy form: Dermid ſpread his dark-hair on the wind. Oſſian came the laſt. I hummed the ſong of other times: my ſpear ſupported my ſteps over the little ſtreams, and my thoughts were of mighty men. Fingal ſtruck his boſſy ſhield; and gave the diſmal ſign of war; a thouſand ſwords, at once unſheathed, gleam on the waving heath. Three gray-haired ſons of ſong raiſe the tuneful, mournful voice. Deep and dark with ſounding ſteps, we ruſh, a gloomy ridge, along: like the ſhower of a ſtorm when it pours on the narrow vale.

The king of Morven ſat on his hill: the ſunbeam of the battle flew on the wind: the companions of his youth are near, with all their waving locks of his age. Joy roſe in the hero's eyes when he beheld his ſons in war; when he ſaw them amidſt the lightning of ſwords, and mindful of the deeds of their fathers. Erragon came on, in his ſtrength, like the roar of a winter ſtream: the battle falls in his courſe, and death is at his ſide.

"Who comes," ſaid Fingal, "like the bounding roe, like the hart of echoing Cona? His ſhield glitters on his ſide; and the clang of his armour is mournful. He meets with Erragon in the ſtrife! Behold the battle of the chiefs! it is like the contending of ghoſts in a gloomy ſtorm. But falleſt thou, ſon of the hill, and is thy white boſom ſtained with blood? Weep, unhappy Lorma, Aldo is no more."

The king took the ſpear of his ſtrength; for he was ſad for the fall of Aldo: he bent his deathful eyes on the foe; but Gaul met the king of Sora. Who can relate the fight of the chiefs? The mighty ſtranger fell.

"Sons of Cona!" Fingal cried aloud, "ſtop the hand of death. Mighty was he that is now ſo low! and much is he mourned in Sora! The ſtranger will come towards his hall, and wonder why it is ſilent. The king is fallen, O ſtranger, and the joy of his houſe is ceaſed. Liſten to the ſound of his woods: perhaps his ghoſt is there; but he is far diſtant, on Morven, beneath the ſword of a foreign foe." Such were the words of Fingal, when the bard raiſed the ſong of peace; we ſtopped our uplifted ſwords, and ſpared the feeble foe. We laid Erragon in that tomb; and I raiſed the voice of grief: the clouds of night came rolling down, and the ghoſt of Erragon appeared to ſome. His face was cloudy and dark; and an half-formed ſigh is in his breaſt. Bleſt be thy ſoul, O king of Sora! thine arm was terrible in war!

Lorma ſat, in Aldo's hall, at the light of a flaming oak: the night came, but he did not return: and the ſoul of Lorma is ſad. "What detains thee, hunter of Cona? for thou didſt promiſe to return. Has the deer been diſtant far; and do the dark winds ſigh, round thee, on the heath? I am in the land of ſtrangers, where is my friend, but Aldo? Come from thy echoing hills, O my beſt beloved!"

Her eyes are turned toward the gate, and ſhe liſtens to the ruſtling blaſt. She thinks it is Aldo's tread, and joy riſes in her face: but ſorrow returns again, like a thin cloud on the moon. "And wilt thou not return, my love? Let me behold the face of the hill. The moon is in the eaſt. Calm and bright is the breaſt of the lake! When ſhall I behold his dogs returning from the chaſe? When ſhall I hear his voice, loud and diſtant on the wind? Come from thy echoing hills, hunter of woody Cona?"

His

His thin ghoſt appeared, on a rock, like the watry beam of the moon, when it ruſhes from between two clouds, and the midnight ſhower is on the field. She followed the empty form over the heath, for ſhe knew that her hero fell. I heard her approaching cries on the wind, like the mournful voice of the breeze, when it ſighs on the graſs of the cave.

She came, ſhe found her hero: her voice was heard no more: ſilent ſhe rolled her ſad eyes; ſhe was pale as a watry cloud, that riſes from the lake, to the beam of the moon. Few were her days on Cona: ſhe ſunk into the tomb: Fingal commanded his bards; and they ſung over the death of Lorma. The daughters of Morven mourned her for one day in the year, when the dark winds of autumn returned.

Son of the diſtant land [k] thou dwelleſt in the field of fame: O let thy ſong riſe, at times, in the praiſe of thoſe that fell: that their thin ghoſts may rejoice around thee; and the ſoul of Lorma come on a moon-beam,[l] when thou lieſt down to reſt, and the moon looks into thy cave. Then ſhalt thou ſee her lovely; but the tear is ſtill on her cheek.

CONLATH AND CUTHONA:

A POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

Conlath was the youngeſt of Morni's ſons, and brother to the celebrated Gaul, who is ſo often mentioned in Oſſian's poems. He was in love with Cuthona the daughter of Rumar, when Toſcar the ſon of Kinfena, acompanied by Fercuth his friend, arrived, from Ireland, at Mora where Conlath dwelt. He was hoſpitably received, and according to the cuſtom of the times, feaſted, three days, with Conlath. On the fourth he ſet ſail, and coaſting the iſland of waves, probably, one of the Hebrides, he ſaw Cuthona hunting, fell in love with her, and carried her away, by force, in his ſhip. He was forced, by ſtreſs of weather, into I-thona a deſert iſle. In the mean time Conlath, hearing of the rape, ſailed after him, and found him on the point of ſailing for the coaſt of Ireland. They fought; and they and their followers fell by mutual wounds. Cuthona did not long ſurvive; for ſhe died of grief the third day after. Fingal, hearing of their unfortunate death, ſent Stormal the ſon of Moran to bury them, but forgot to ſend a bard to ſing the funeral ſong over their tombs. The ghoſt of Conlath came, long after, to Oſſian, to entreat him to tranſmit, to poſterity, his and Cuthona's fame. For it was the opinion of the times, that the ſouls of the deceaſed were not happy, till their elegies were compoſed by a bard.

DID not Oſſian hear a voice? or is it the ſound of days that are no more? Often does the memory memory of former times come, like the evening ſun, on my ſoul. The noiſe of the chaſe is renewed; and, in thought, I lift the ſpear. But Oſſian did hear a voice: Who art thou, ſon of the night? The ſons of little men are aſleep, and the midnight wind is in my hall. Perhaps it is the ſhield of Fingal that echoes to the blaſt, it hangs in Oſſian's hall, and he feels it ſometimes with his hands. Yes! I hear thee, my friend: long has thy voice been abſent from mine ear! What brings thee, on thy cloud, to Oſſian, ſon of the generous Morni? Are the friends of the aged near thee? Where is Oſcar, ſon of fame? He was often near thee, O Conlath, when the din of battle roſe.

Ghoſt of Conlath. Sleeps the ſweet voice of Cona, in the midſt of his ruſtling hall? Sleeps Oſſian in his hall, and his friends without their fame? The ſea rolls round the dark I-thona,[a] and our tombs are not ſeen by the ſtranger. How long ſhall our fame be unheard, ſon of the echoing Morven?

Oſſian. O that mine eyes could behold thee, as thou ſitteſt, dim, on thy cloud! Art thou like the miſt of Lano; or an half-extinguiſhed meteor? Of what are the ſkirts of thy robe? Of what is thine airy bow? But he is gone on his blaſt like the ſhadow of miſt. Come from thy wall, my harp, and let me hear thy ſound. Let the light of memory

riſe on I-thona; that I may behold my friends. And Oſſian does behold his friends on the dark-blue iſle. The cave of Thona appears, with its moſſy rocks and bending trees. A ſtream roars at its mouth, and Toſcar bends over its courſe. Fercuth is ſad by his ſide: and the maid [b] of his love ſits at a diſtance and weeps. Does the wind of the waves deceive me? Or do I hear them ſpeak?

Toſcar. The night was ſtormy. From their hills the groaning oaks came down. The ſea darkly tumbled beneath the blaſt, and the roaring waves were climbing againſt our rocks. The lightning came often and ſhewed the blaſted fern. Fercuth! I ſaw the ghoſt of night. [c] Silent he ſtood, on that bank; his robe of miſt flew on the wind. I could behold his tears: an aged man he ſeemed, and full of thought.

Fercuth. It was thy father, O Toſcar; and he foreſees ſome death among his race. Such was his appearance on Cromla, before the great Ma-ronnan [d] fell. Ullin! [e] with thy hills of graſs, how pleaſant are thy vales! Silence is near thy blue ſtreams, and the ſun is on thy fields. Soft is the ſound of the harp in Selama, [f] and pleaſant the cry of the hunter on Cromla. But we are in the dark I-thona, ſurrounded by the ſtorm. The billows lift their white heads heads above our rocks: and we tremble amidſt the night.

Toſcar. Whither is the ſoul of battle fled, Fercuth with the locks of age? I have ſeen thee undaunted in danger, and thine eyes burning with joy in the fight. Whither is the ſoul of battle fled? Our fathers never feared. Go: view the ſettling ſea: the ſtormy wind is laid. The billows ſtill tremble on the deep, and ſeem to fear the blaſt. But view the ſettling ſea: morning is gray on our rocks. The ſun will look ſoon from his eaſt; in all his pride of light. I lifted up my ſails, with joy, before the halls of generous Conlath. My courſe was by the iſle of waves, where his love purſued the deer. I ſaw her, like that beam of the ſun that iſſues from the cloud. Her hair was on her heaving breaſt; ſhe, bending forward, drew the bow: her white arm ſeemed, behind her, like the ſnow of Cromla: Come to my ſoul, I ſaid, thou huntreſs of the iſle of waves! But ſhe ſpends her time in tears, and thinks of the generous Conlath. Where can I find thy peace, Cuthona, lovely maid?

Cuthona.[g] A diſtant ſteep bends over the ſea, with aged trees and moſſy rocks: the billows roll at its feet: on its ſide is the dwelling of roes. The people call it Ardven. There the towers of Mora riſe. There Conlath looks over the ſea for his only love.

love. The daughters of the chaſe returned, and he beheld their downcaſt eyes. Where is the daughter of Rumar? But they anſwered not. My peace dwells on Ardven, ſon of the diſtant land!

Toſcar. And Cuthona ſhall return to her peace; to the halls of generous Conlath. He is the friend of Toſcar: I have feaſted in his halls. Riſe, ye gentle breezes of Ullin, and ſtretch my ſails towards Ardven's ſhores. Cuthona ſhall reſt on Ardven: but the days of Toſcar will be ſad. I ſhall ſit in my cave in the field of the ſun. The blaſt will ruſtle in my trees, and I ſhall think it is Cuthona's voice. But ſhe is diſtant far, in the halls of the mighty Conlath.

Cuthona. Oh! what cloud is that? It carries the ghoſts of my fathers. I ſee the ſkirts of their robes, like gray and watry miſt. When ſhall I fall, O Rumar? Sad Cuthona ſees her death. Will not Conlath behold me, before I enter the narrow houſe? [h]

Oſſian. And he will behold thee, O maid: he comes along the rolling ſea. The death of Toſcar is dark on his ſpear; and a wound is in his ſide. He is pale at the cave of Thona, and ſhews his ghaſtly wound. Where art thou with thy tears, Cuthona? the chief of Mora dies. The viſion grows dim on my mind: I behold the chiefs no more. But, O ye bards of future times, remember the fall of Conlath with tears: he fell before his day; and ſadneſs darkened in his hall. His mother looked to his ſhield on the wall, and it was bloody [i]. She knew that her hero died, and her ſorrow was heard on Mora. Art thou pale on thy rock, Cuthona, beſide the fallen chiefs? Night comes, and day returns, but none appears to raiſe their tomb. Thou frightneſt the ſcreaming fowls away, and thy tears for ever flow. Thou art pale as a watry cloud, that riſes from a lake.

The ſons of the deſart came, and they found her dead. They raiſe a tomb over the heroes; and ſhe reſts at the ſide of Conlath. Come not to my dreams, O Conlath; for thou haſt received thy fame. Be thy voice far diſtant from my hall; that ſleep may deſcend at night. O that I could forget my friends: till my footſteps ceaſe to be ſeen! till I come among them with joy! and lay my limbs in the narrow aged houſe!

[c] It was long thought, in the north of Scotland, that ſtorms were raiſed by the ghoſts of the deceaſed. CARTHON:

A POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

This poem is complete, and the ſubject of it, as of moſt of Oſſian's compoſitions, tragical. In the time of Comhal the ſon of Trathal, and father of the celebrated Fingal, Cleſſammor the ſon of Thaddu and brother of Morna, Fingal's mother, was driven by a ſtorm into the river Clyde, on the banks of which ſtood Balclutha, a town belonging to the Britons between the walls. He was hoſpitably received by Reuthamir, the principal man in the place, who gave him Moina his only daughter in marriage. Reuda, the ſon of Cormo, a Briton who was in love with Moina, came to Reuthamir's houſe, and behaved haughtily towards Cleſſammor. A quarrel enſued, in which Reuda was killed; the Britons, who attended him preſſed ſo hard on Cleſſammor, that he was obliged to throw himſelf into the Clyde, and ſwim to his ſhip. He hoiſted ſail, and the wind being favourable, bore him out to ſea. He often endeavoured to return, and carry off his beloved Moina by night; but the wind continuing contrary, he was forced to deſiſt.

Moina, who had been left with child by her huſband, brought forth a ſon, and died ſoon after. Reuthamir named the child Carthon, i. e. the murmur of waves, from the ſtorm which carried off Cleſſammor his father, who was ſuppoſed to have been caſt away. When Carthon thon was three years old, Comhal the father of Fingal, in one of his expeditions againſt the Britons, took and burnt Balclutha. Ruthamir was killed in the attack: and Carthon was carried ſafe away by his nurſe, who fled farther into the country of the Britons. Carthon, coming to man's eſtate, was reſolved to revenge the fall of Balclutha on Comhal's poſterity. He ſet ſail, from the Clyde, and, falling on the coaſt of Morven, defeated two of Fingal's heroes, who came to oppoſe his progreſs. He was, at laſt, unwittingly killed by his father Cleſſammor, in a ſingle combat. This ſtory is the foundation of the preſent poem, which opens on the night preceding the death of Carthon, ſo that what paſſed before is introduced by way of epiſode. The poem is addreſſed to Malvina the daughter of Toſcar.

A TALE of the times of old! The deeds of days of other years!

The murmur of thy ſtreams, O Lora, brings back the memory of the paſt. The ſound of thy woods Garmaller, is lovely in mine ear. Doſt thou not behold, Malvina, a rock with its head of heath? Three aged firs bend from its face; green is the narrow plain at its feet; there the flower of the mountain grows, and ſhakes its white head in the breeze. The thiſtle is there alone, and ſheds its aged beard. Two ſtones, half ſunk in the ground, ſhew their heads of moſs. The deer of the mountain avoids the place, for he beholds holds the gray ghoſt that guards it [a], for the mighty lie, O Malvina, in the narrow plain of the rock.

A tale of the times of old! the deeds of days of other years.

Who comes from the land of ſtrangers, with his thouſands around him? the ſun-beam pours its bright ſtream before him; and his hair meets the wind of his hills. His face is ſettled from war. He is calm as the evening beam that looks, from the cloud of the weſt, on Cona's ſilent vale. Who is it but Comhal's ſon [b], the king of mighty deeds! He beholds his hills with joy, and bids a thouſand voices raiſe. Ye have fled over your fields, ye ſons of the diſtant lands! The king of the world ſits in his hall, and hears of his people's flight. He lifts his red eye of pride, and takes his father's ſword. "Ye have fled over your fields, ſons of the diſtant land!"

Such were the words of the bards, when they came to Selma's halls. A thouſand lights [c] from the ſtranger's land roſe, in the midſt of the people. The feaſt is ſpread around; and the night paſſed away in joy. Where is the noble Cleſſammor [d] ſaid the fair haired Fingal! Where is the companion of my father, in the days of my joy? Sullen and dark he paſſes his days in the vale of echoing echoing Lora: but, behold, he comes from the hill, like a ſteed in his ſtrength, who finds his companions in the breeze; and toſſes his bright mane in the wind. Bleſt be the ſoul of Cleſſammor, why ſo long from Selma?

"Returns the chief" ſaid Cleſſammor, "in the midſt of his fame? Such was the renown of Comhal in the battles of his youth. Often did we paſs over Carun to the land of the ſtrangers: our ſwords returned, not unſtained with blood: nor did the kings of the world rejoice. Why do I remember the battles of my youth? My hair is mixed with gray. My hand forgets to bend the bow; and I lift a lighter ſpear. O that my joy would return, as when I firſt beheld the maid; the white boſomed daughter of ſtrangers, Moina [e] with the dark-blue eyes!"

"Tell," ſaid the mighty Fingal, "the tale of thy youthful days. Sorrow like a cloud on the ſun, ſhades the ſoul of Cleſſammor. Mournful are thy thoughts, alone, on the banks of the roaring Lora. Let us hear the ſorrow of thy youth, and the darkneſs of thy days.

"It was in the days of peace," replied the great Cleſſammor, "I came, in my bounding ſhip, to Balclutha's [f] walls of towers. The winds had roared behind my ſails, and Clutha's [g] ſtreams received my my dark-boſomed veſſel. Three days I remained in Reuthamir's halls, and ſaw that beam of light, his daughter. The joy of the ſhell went round, and the aged hero gave the fair. Her breaſts were like foam on the wave, and her eyes like ſtars of light: her hair was dark as the raven's wing: her ſoul was generous and mild. My love for Moina was great: and my heart poured forth in joy.

" The ſon of a ſtranger came; a chief who loved the white boſomed Moina. His words were mighty in the hall, and he often half unſheathed his ſword. Where, he ſaid, is the mighty Comhal, the reſtleſs wanderer [h] of the heath? Comes he, with his hoſt, to Balclutha, ſince Cleſſammor is ſo bold? My ſoul, I replied, O warrior! burns in a light of its own. I ſtand without fear in the midſt of thouſands, though the valiant are diſtant far. Stranger! thy words are mighty, for Cleſſammor is alone. But my ſword trembles by my ſide, and longs to glitter in my hand. Speak no more of Comhal, ſon of the winding Clutha!"

" The ſtrength of his pride aroſe. We fought; he fell beneath my ſword. The banks of Clutha heard his fall, and a thouſand ſpears glittered around. I fought: the ſtrangers prevailed: I plunged into the ſtream of Clutha. My white ſails roſe over the waves, and I bounded on the dark-blue ſea. Moina came to the ſhore, and rolled the red eye of her tears: her dark hair flew on the wind; and I heard her cries. Often did I turn my ſhip! but the winds of the eaſt prevailed. Nor Clutha ever ſince have I ſeen: nor Moina of the dark-brown hair. She fell on Balclutha; for I have ſeen her ghoſt. I knew her as ſhe came through the duſky night, along the murmur of Lora: ſhe was like the new moon ſeen through the gathered miſt: when the ſky pours down its flaky ſnow, and the world is ſilent and dark."

"Raiſe, ye bards," ſaid the mighty Fingal, "the praiſe of unhappy Moina. Call her ghoſt, with your ſongs, to our hills; that ſhe may reſt with the fair of Morven, the ſun-beams of other days, and the delight of heroes of old. I have ſeen the walls of Balclutha, but they were deſolate. The fire had reſounded in the halls: and the voice of the people is heard no more. The ſtream of Clutha was removed from its place, by the fall of the walls. The thiſtle ſhook, there, its lonely head: the moſs whiſtled to the wind. The fox looked out, from the windows, the rank graſs of the wall waved round his head. Deſolate is the dwelling of Moina, ſilence is in the houſe of her fathers. Raiſe the ſong of mourning, O bards, over the land of ſtrangers. They have but fallen before us: for, one day, we muſt fall. Why doſt thou build the hall, ſon of the winged days? Thou lookeſt from thy towers to-day; yet a few years, and the blaſt of the deſart comes; it howls in thy empty court, and whiſtles round thy half-worn ſhield. And let the blaſt of the deſart come! we ſhall be renowned in our day. The mark of my arm ſhall be in the battle, and my name in the ſong of bards. Raiſe the ſong; ſend round the ſhell: and let joy be heard in my hall. When thou ſon of heaven, ſhalt fail! if thou ſhalt fail, thou mighty light! if thy brightneſs is for a ſeaſon, like Fingal; our fame ſhall ſurvive thy beams."

Such was the ſong of Fingal, in the day of his joy. His thouſand bards leaned forward from their ſeats, to hear the voice of the king. It was like the muſic of the harp on the gale of the ſpring. Lovely were thy thoughts, O Fingal! why had not Oſſian the ſtrength of thy ſoul? But thou ſtandeſt alone, my father; and who can equal the king of Morven?

The night paſſed away in ſong, and morning returned in joy; the mountains ſhewed their gray heads; and the blue face of ocean ſmiled. The white wave is ſeen tumbling round the diſtant rock; and the gray miſt riſes, ſlowly, from the lake. It came, in the figure of an aged man, along the ſilent lent plain. Its large limbs did not move in ſteps; for a ghoſt ſupported it in mid air. It came towards Selma's hall, and diſſolved in a ſhower of blood.

The king alone beheld the terrible ſight, and he foreſaw the death of the people. He came, in ſilence, to his hall; and took his father's ſpear. The mail rattled on his breaſt. The heroes roſe around. They looked in ſilence on each other, marking the eyes of Fingal. They ſaw the battle in his face: the death of armies on his ſpear. A thouſand ſhields, at once, are placed on their arms; and they drew a thouſand ſwords. The hall of Selma brightened around. The clang of arms aſcends. The gray dogs howl in their place. No word is among the mighty chiefs. Each marked the eyes of the king; and half aſſumed his ſpear.

"Sons of Morven," begun the king, "this is no time to fill the ſhell. The battle darkens near us; and death hovers over the land. Some ghoſt, the friend of Fingal, has forewarned us of the foe. The ſons of the ſtranger come from the darkly rolling ſea. For, from the water, came the ſign of Morven's gloomy danger. Let each aſſume his heavy ſpear, and gird on his father's ſword. Let the dark helmet riſe on every head; and the mail pour its lightning from every ſide. The battle gathers like a tempeſt, and ſoon ſhall ye hear the roar of death."

The hero moved on before his hoſt, like a cloud before a ridge of heaven's fire; when it pours on the ſky of night, and mariners foreſee a-ſtorm. On Cona's riſing heath they ſtood: the white boſomed maids beheld them above like a grove; they foreſaw the death of their youths, and looked towards the ſea with fear. The white wave deceived them for diſtant ſails, and the tear is on their cheek. The ſun roſe on the ſea, and we beheld a diſtant fleet. Like the miſt of ocean they came: and poured their youth upon the coaſt. The chief was among them, like the ſtag in the midſt of the herd. His ſhield is ſtudded with gold, and ſtately ſtrode the king of ſpears. He moved towards Selma; his thouſands moved behind.

"Go, with thy ſong of peace," ſaid Fingal; "go, Ullin, to the king of ſwords. Tell him that we are mighty in battle; and that the ghoſts of our foes are many. But renowned are they who have feaſted in my halls! they ſhew the arms[k] of my fathers in a foreign land: the ſons of the ſtrangers wonder, and bleſs the friend of Morven's race; for our names have been heard afar; the kings of the world ſhook in the midſt of their people."

Ullin

Ullin went with his ſong. Fingal reſted on his ſpear: he ſaw the mighty foe in his armour: and he bleſt the ſtranger's ſon. "How ſtately art thou, ſon of the ſea!" ſaid the king of woody Morven. "Thy ſword is a beam of might by thy ſide: thy ſpear is a fir that defies the ſtorm. The varied face of the moon is not broader than thy ſhield. Ruddy is thy face of youth! ſoft the ringlets of thy hair! But this tree may fall; and his memory be forgot! The daughter of the ſtranger will be ſad, and look to the rolling ſea: the children will ſay, We ſee a ſhip; perhaps it is the king of Balclutha. The tear ſtarts from their mother's eye. Her thoughts are of him that ſleeps in Morven."

Such were the words of the king, when Ullin came to the mighty Carthon: he threw down the ſpear before him; and raiſed the ſong of peace. "Come to the feaſt of Fingal, Carthon, from the rolling ſea! partake the feaſt of the king, or lift the ſpear of war. The ghoſts of our foes are many: but renowned are the friends of Morven! Behold that field, O Carthon; many a green hill riſes there, with moſſy ſtones and ruſtling graſs: theſe are the tombs of Fingal's foes, the ſons of the rolling ſea."

"Doſt thou ſpeak to the feeble in arms," ſaid Carthon, "bard of the woody Morven? Is my face face pale for fear, ſon of the peaceful ſong? Why, then, doſt thou think to darken my ſoul with the tales of thoſe who fell? My arm has fought in the battle; my renown is known afar. Go to the feeble in arms, and bid them yield to Fingal. Have not I ſeen the fallen Balclutha? And ſhall I feaſt with Comhal's ſon? Comhal! who threw his fire in the midſt of my father's hall! I was young, and knew not the cauſe why the virgins wept. The columns of ſmoke pleaſed mine eye, when they roſe above my walls; I often looked back, with gladneſs, when my friends fled along the hill. But when the years of my youth came on, I beheld the moſs of my fallen walls: my ſigh aroſe with the morning, and my tears deſcended with night. Shall I not fight, I ſaid to my ſoul, againſt the children of my foes? And I will fight, O bard; I feel the ſtrength of my ſoul."

His people gathered around the hero, and drew, at once, their ſhining ſwords. He ſtands, in the midſt, like a pillar of fire; the tear half-ſtarting from his eye, for he thought of the fallen Balclutha, and the crowded pride of his ſoul aroſe. Sidelong he looked up to the hill, where our heroes ſhone in arms; the ſpear trembled in his hand: and, bending forward, he ſeemed to threaten the king.

"Shall

"Shall I," ſaid Fingal to his ſoul, "meet, at once, the king: Shall I ſtop him, in the midſt of his courſe, before his fame ſhall ariſe? But the bard, hereafter, may ſay, when he ſees the tomb of Carthon; Fingal took his thouſands, along with him, to battle, before the noble Carthon fell. No: bard of the times to come! thou ſhalt not leſſen Fingal's fame. My heroes will fight the youth, and Fingal behold the battle. If he overcomes, I ruſh, in my ſtrength, like the roaring ſtream of Cona. Who, of my heroes, will meet the ſon of the rolling ſea? Many are his warriors on the coaſt: and ſtrong is his aſhen ſpear!"

Cathul [l] roſe, in his ſtrength, the ſon of the mighty Lormar: three hundred youths attend the chief, the race [m] of native ſtreams. Feeble was his arm againſt Carthon, he fell; and his heroes fled. Connal [n] reſumed the battle, but he broke his heavy ſpear: he lay bound on the field: and Carthon purſued his people. "Cleſſammor!" ſaid the king [o] of Morven, "where is the ſpear of thy ſtrength? Wilt thou behold Connal bound; thy friend, at the ſtream of Lora? Riſe, in the light of thy ſteel, thou friend of Comhal. Let the youth of Balclutha feel the ſtrength of Morven's race." He roſe in the ſtrength of his ſteel, ſhaking his grizzly locks.

He

He fitted the ſhield to his ſide; and ruſhed, in the pride of valour.

Carthon ſtood, on that heathy rock, and ſaw the hero's approach. He loved the terrible joy of his face: and his ſtrength, in the locks of age. "Shall I lift that ſpear," he ſaid, "that never ſtrikes, but once, a foe? Or ſhall I, with the words of peace, preſerve the warrior's life? Stately are his ſteps of age! lovely the remnant of his years. Perhaps it is the love of Moina; the father of Carborne Carthon. Often have I heard, that he dwelt at the echoing ſtream of Lora."

Such were his words, when Cleſſammor came, and lifted high his ſpear. The youth received it on his ſhield, and ſpoke the words of peace. "Warrior of the aged locks! Is there no youth to lift the ſpear? Haſt thou no ſon, to raiſe the ſhield before his father, and to meet the arm of youth? Is the ſpouſe of thy love no more? or weeps ſhe over the tombs of thy ſons? Art thou of the kings of men? What will be the fame of my ſword if thou ſhalt fall?"

It will be great, thou ſon of pride! begun the tall Cleſſammor, I have been renowned in battle; but I never told my name [P] to a foe. Yield to me, ſon of the wave, and then thou ſhalt know, that the mark of my ſword is in many a field. "I never never yielded, king of ſpears!" replied the noble pride of Carthon: "I have alſo fought in battles; and I behold my future fame. Deſpiſe me not, thou chief of men; my arm, my ſpear is ſtrong. Retire among thy friends, and let young heroes fight." "Why doſt thou wound my ſoul," replied Cleſſammor with a tear? "Age does not tremble on my hand; I ſtill can lift the ſword. Shall I fly in Fingal's ſight; in the ſight of him I loved? Son of the ſea! I never fled: exalt thy pointed ſpear."

They fought, like two contending winds, that ſtrive to roll the wave. Carthon bade his ſpear to err; for he ſtill thought that the foe was the ſpouſe of Moina. He broke Cleſſammor's beamy ſpear in twain: and ſeized his ſhining ſword. But as Carthon was binding the chief; the chief drew the dagger of his fathers. He ſaw the foe's uncovered ſide; and opened, there, a wound.

Fingal ſaw Cleſſammor low: he moved in the ſound of his ſteel. The hoſt ſtood ſilent, in his preſence; they turned their eyes toward the hero. He came, like the ſullen noiſe of a ſtorm, before the winds ariſe: the hunter hears it in the vale, and retires to the cave of the rock. Carthon ſtood in his place: the blood is ruſhing down his ſide: he ſaw the coming down of the king; and his hopes of fame aroſe [q]; but pale was his cheek: his hair flew looſe, his helmet ſhook on high: the force of Carthon failed! but his ſoul was ſtrong.

Fingal beheld the hero's blood; he ſtopt the uplifted ſpear. "Yield, king of ſwords!" ſaid Comhal's ſon; "I behold thy blood. Thou haſt been mighty in battle; and thy fame ſhall never fade." Art thou the king ſo far renowned," replied the car-borne Carthon? "Art thou that light of death, that frightens the kings of the world. But why ſhould Carthon aſk? for he is like the ſtream of his deſart; ſtrong as a river, in his courſe: ſwift as the eagle of the ſky. O that I had fought with the king; that my fame might be great in the ſong! that the hunter, beholding my tomb, might ſay, he fought with the mighty Fingal. But Carthon dies unknown! he has poured out his force on the feeble."

"But thou ſhalt not die unknown," replied the king of woody Morven: "my bards are many, O 'Carthon, and their ſongs deſcend to future times. The children of the years to come ſhall hear the fame of Carthon; when they ſit round the burning oak [r], and the night is ſpent in the ſongs of old. The hunter, ſitting in the heath, ſhall hear the ruſtling blaſt; and, raiſing his eyes, behold the rock where Carthon fell. He ſhall turn turn to his ſon, and ſhew the place where the mighty fought; There the king of Balclutha fought, like the ſtrength of a thouſand ſtreams."

Joy roſe in Carthon's face: he lifted his heavy eyes. He gave his ſword to Fingal, to lie within his hall, that the memory of Balclutha's king might remain on Morven. The battle ceaſed along the field, for the bard had ſung the ſong of peace. The chiefs gathered round the falling Carthon, and heard his words, with ſighs. Silent they leaned on their ſpears, while Balclutha's hero ſpoke. His hair ſighed in the wind, and his words were feeble.

"King of Morven," Carthon ſaid, "I fall in the midſt of my courſe. A foreign tomb receives, in youth, the laſt of Reuthamir's race. Darkneſs dwells in Balclutha: and the ſhadows of grief in Crathmo. But raiſe my remembrance on the banks of Lora: where my fathers dwelt. Perhaps the huſband of Moina will mourn over his fallen Carthon." His words reached the heart of Cleſſammor: he fell, in ſilence, on his ſon. The hoſt ſtood darkened around: no voice is heard on the plains of Lora. Night came, and the moon, from the eaſt, looked on the mournful field: but ſtill they ſtood, like a ſilent grove that lifts its head on Gormal, when the loud winds are laid, and dark autumn is on the plain.

Three days they mourned over Carthon; on the fourth his father died. In the narrow plain of the rock they lie; and a dim ghoſt defends their tomb. There lovely Moina is often ſeen; when the ſun-beam darts on the rock, and all around is dark. There ſhe is ſeen, Malvina, but not like the daughters of the hill. Her robes are from the ſtrangers land; and ſhe is ſtill alone.

Fingal was ſad for Carthon; he deſired his bards to mark the day, when ſhadowy autumn returned. And often did they mark the day, and ſing the hero's praiſe. "Who comes ſo dark from ocean's roar, like autumn's ſhadowy cloud? Death is trembling in his hand! his eyes are flames of fire! Who roars along dark Lora's heath? Who but Carthon king of ſwords? The people fall! ſee! how he ſtrides, like the ſullen ghoſt of Morven! But there he lies a goodly oak, which ſudden blaſts overturned! When ſhalt thou riſe, Balclutha's joy! lovely car-borne Carthon? Who comes ſo dark from ocean's roar, like autumn's ſhadowy cloud?" Such were the words of the bards, in the day of their mourning: I have accompanied their voice; and added to their ſong. My ſoul has been mournful for Carthon; he fell in the days of his valour:

and thou, O Cleſſammor! where is thy dwelling in the air? Has the youth forgot his wound? And flies he, on the clouds, with thee? I feel the ſun, O Malvina, leave me to my reſt. Perhaps they may come to my dreams; I think I hear a feeble voice. The beam of heaven delights to ſhine on the grave of Carthon: I feel it warm around.

O thou that rolleſt above, round as the ſhield of my fathers! Whence are thy beams, O ſun! thy everlaſting light? Thou comeſt forth, in thy awful beauty, and the ſtars hide themſelves in the ſky; the moon, cold and pale, ſinks in the weſtern wave. But thou thyſelf moveſt alone: who can be a companion of thy courſe! The oaks of the mountains fall: the mountains themſelves decay with years; the ocean ſhrinks and grows again: the moon herſelf is loſt in heaven; but thou art for ever the ſame; rejoicing in the brightneſs of thy courſe. When the world is dark with tempeſts; when thunder rolls, and lightning flies; thou lookeſt in thy beauty, from the clouds, and laugheſt at the ſtorm. But to Oſſian, thou lookeſt in vain; for he beholds thy beams no more; whether thy yellow hair flows on the eaſtern clouds, or thou trembleſt at the gates of the weſt. But thou art perhaps, like me, for a ſeaſon, and thy years will have an end. Thou ſhalt ſleep in thy clouds, clouds, careleſs of the voice of the morning. Exult then, O ſun, in the ſtrength of thy youth! Age is dark and unlovely; it is like the glimmering light of the moon, when it ſhines through broken clouds, and the miſt is on the hills: the blaſt of the north is on the plain, the traveller ſhrinks in the midſt of his journey.

NOTES ON CARTHON.

[a] It was the opinion of the times, that deer ſaw the ghoſts of the dead. To this day, when beaſts ſuddenly ſtart without any apparent cauſe, the vulgar think that they ſee the ſpirits of the deceaſed.

[b] Fingal returns here, from an expedition againſt the Romans, which was celebrated by Oſſian in a particular poem.

[c] Probably wax-lights; which are often mentioned as carried, among other booty, from the Roman province.

[e] Moina, ſoft in temper and perſon. We find the Britiſh names in this poem derived from the Galic, which is a proof that the ancient language of the whole iſland was one and the ſame.

[f] Balclutha, i. e. the town of Clyde, probably the Alcluth of Bede.

[g] Clutha, or Cluath, the Galic name of the river Clyde, the ſignification of the word is bending, in alluſion to the winding winding courſe of the river. From Clutha is derived its Latin name, Glotta.

[h] The word in the original here rendered reſtleſs wanderer, is Scuta, which is the true origin of the Scoti of the Romans: an opprobrious name impoſed by the Britons, on the Caledonians, on account of the continual incurſions into their country.

[i] The title of this poem in the original, is Duan na nlaoi, i. e. The Poem of Hymns; probably on account of its many digreſſions from the ſubject, all which are in a lyric meaſure, as this ſong of Fingal. Fingal is celebrated by the Iriſh hiſtorians, for his wiſdom in making laws, his poetical genius, and his fore-knowledge of events. O'Flaherty goes ſo far as to ſay, that Fingal's laws were extant in his own time.

[k] It was a cuſtom among the ancient Scots, to exchange arms with their gueſts, and thoſe arms were preſerved long in the different families, as monuments of the friendſhip which ſubſiſted between their anceſtors.

[m] It appears, from this paſſage, that clanſhip was eſtabliſhed in the days of Fingal, though not on the ſame footing with the preſent tribes in the north of Scotland.

[n] This Connal is very much celebrated, in ancient poetry, for his wiſdom and valour: there is a ſmall tribe ſtill ſubſiſting, in the North, who pretend they are deſcended from him.

[o] Fingal did not then know that Carthon was the ſon of Cleſſammor.

[p] To tell one's name to an enemy was reckoned, in thoſe days of heroiſm, a manifeſt evaſion of fighting him; for, if it was once known, that friendſhip ſubſiſted, of old, between the

the anceſtors of the combatants, the battle immediately ceaſed; and the ancient amity of their forefathers was renewed. A man who tells his name to his enemy, was of old an ignominious term for a coward.

[q] This expreſſion admits of a double meaning, either that Carthon hoped to acquire glory by killing Fingal, or to be rendered famous by falling by his hand; the laſt is the moſt probable, as Carthon is already wounded.

[r] In the north of Scotland, till very lately, they burnt a large trunk of an oak at their feſtivals; it was called the trunk of the feaſt. Time had ſo much conſecrated the cuſtom, that the vulgar thought it a kind of ſacrilege to diſuſe it.

A POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

Arth, the ſon of Cairbre, ſupreme king of Ireland, dying, was ſucceeded by his ſon Cormac, a minor. Cuchullin, the ſon of Semo, who had rendered himſelf famous by his great actions, and who reſided, at the time, with Connal, the ſon of Caithbat, in Ulſter, was elected regent. In the twenty-ſeventh year of Cuchullin's age, and the third of his adminiſtration, Torlath, the ſon of Cantela, one of the chiefs of that colony of Belgæ, who were in poſſeſſion of the ſouth of Ireland, rebelled in Connaught, and advanced towards Temora, in order to dethrone Cormac, who, excepting Feradath, afterwards king of Ireland, was the only one of the Scottiſh race of kings exiſting in that country. Cuchullin marched againſt him, came up with him at the lake of Lego, and totally defeated his forces. Torlath fell in the battle by Cuchullin's hand; but as he himſelf preſſed too eagerly on the flying enemy, he was mortally wounded by an arrow, and died the ſecond day after. The good fortune of Cormac fell with Cuchullin: many ſet up for themſelves, and anarchy and confuſion reigned. At laſt Cormac was taken off; and Cairbar, lord of Atha, one of the competitors for the throne, having defeated all his rivals, became ſole monarch of Ireland. The family of Fingal, who were in the intereſt of Cormac's family, were reſolved to deprive Cairbar of the throne he had uſurped. Fingal arrived from Scotland with an army, defeated the friends of Cairbar, and re-eſtabliſhed the family of Cormac in the poſſeſſion of the kingdom. The preſent poem concerns the death of Cuchullin. It is, in the original, called Duan loch Leigo, i. e. The Poem of Lego's Lake, and is an epiſode introduced in a great poem, which celebrated the laſt expedition of Fingal into Ireland. The greateſt part of the poem is loſt, and nothing remains but ſome epiſodes, which a few old people in the north of Scotland retain on memory.

IS the wind on Fingal's ſhield? Or is the voice of paſt times in my hall? Sing on, ſweet voice, for thou art pleaſant, and carrieſt away my night with joy. Sing on, O Bragela, daughter of car-borne Songlan?

"It is the white wave of the rock, and not Cuchullin's ſails. Often do the miſts deceive me for the ſhip of my love! when they riſe round ſome ghoſt, and ſpread their gray ſkirts on the wind. Why doſt thou delay thy coming, ſon of the generous Semo? Four times has autumn returned with its winds, and raiſed the ſeas of Togorma,[a] ſince thou haſt been in the roar of battles, and Bragela diſtant far. Hills of the iſle of miſt! when will ye anſwer to his hounds? But ye are dark in your clouds, and ſad Bragela calls in vain. Night comes rolling down: the face of ocean fails. The heath-cock's head is beneath his wing: the hind ſleeps with the hart of the deſart. They ſhall riſe with the morning's light, and feed on the moſſy ſtream. But my tears return with the ſun, my ſighs come on with the night. When wilt thou come in thine arms, O chief of moſſy Tura?"

Pleaſant is thy voice in Oſſian's ear, daughter of car-borne Sorglan? But retire to the hall of ſhells; to the beam of the burning oak. Attend to the murmur of the ſea: it rolls at Dunſcaich's walls: let ſleep deſcend on thy blue eyes, and the hero come to thy dreams.

Cuchullin ſits at Lego's lake, at the dark rolling of waters. Night is around the hero; and his thouſands ſpread on the heath: a hundred oaks burn in the midſt, the feaſt of ſhells is ſmoking wide. Carril ſtrikes the harp, beneath a tree; his gray locks glitter in the beam; the ruſtling blaſt of night is near, and lifts his aged hair. His ſong is of the Blue Togorma, and of its chief, Cuchullin's friend. "Why art thou abſent, Connal, in the day of the gloomy ſtorm? The chiefs of the ſouth have convened againſt the car-borne Cormac: the winds detain thy ſails, and thy blue waters roll around thee. But Cormac is not alone: the ſon of Semo fights his battles. Semo's ſon his battles fights! the terror of the ſtranger! he that is like the vapour of death, ſlowly borne by ſultry winds. The ſun reddens in its preſence, the people fall around."

Such was the ſong of Carril, when a ſon of the foe appeared; he threw down his pointleſs ſpear, and ſpoke the words of Torlath, Torlath the chief of heroes, from Lego's ſable ſurge: he that led his thouſands to battle, againſt car-borne Cormac, Cormac, who was diſtant far, in Temora's [b] echoing halls: he learned to bend the bow of his fathers; and to lift the ſpear. Nor long didſt thou lift the ſpear, mildly-ſhining beam of youth! death ſtands dim behind thee, like the darkened half of the moon behind its growing light. Cuchullin roſe before the bard, [c] that came from generous Torlath; he offered him the ſhell of joy, and honoured the ſon of ſongs. "Sweet voice of Lego!" he ſaid, "what are the words of Torlath? Comes he to our feaſt or battle, the car-borne ſon of Cantela?" [d]

"He comes to thy battle," replied the bard, "to the ſounding ſtrife of ſpears. When morning is gray on Lego, Torlath will fight on the plain: and wilt thou meet him, in thine arms, king of the iſle of miſt? Terrible is the ſpear of Torlath! it is a meteor of night. He lifts it, and the people fall: death ſits in the lightning of his ſword. "Do I fear," fear," replied Cuchullin, "the ſpear of car-borne Torlath? He is brave as a thouſand heroes; but my ſoul delights in war. The ſword reſts not by the ſide of Cuchullin, bard of the times of old! Morning ſhall meet me on the plain, and gleam on the blue arms of Semo's ſon. But ſit thou, on the heath, O bard! and let us hear thy voice: partake of the joyful ſhell: and hear the ſongs of Temora."

"This is no time," replied the bard, "to hear the ſong of joy; when the mighty are to meet in battle like the ſtrength of the waves of Lego. Why art thou ſo dark, Slimora![e] with all thy ſilent woods? No green ſtar trembles on thy top; no moon-beam on thy ſide. But the meteors of death are there, and the gray watry forms of ghoſts. Why art thou dark, Slimora! with thy ſilent woods?" He retired, in the ſound of his ſong; Carril accompanied his voice. The muſic was like the memory of joys that are paſt, pleaſant and mournful to the ſoul. The ghoſts of departed bards heard it from Slimora's ſide. Soft ſounds ſpread along the wood, and the ſilent valleys of night rejoice. So, when he ſits in the ſilence of noon, in the valley of his breeze, the humming of the mountain bee comes to Oſſian's ear: the gale drowns it often in its courſe; but the pleaſant ſound returns again.

"Raiſe," ſaid Cuchullin, to his hundred bards, "the ſong of the noble Fingal: that ſong which he hears at night, when the dreams of his reſt deſcend: when the bards ſtrike the diſtant harp, and the faint light gleams on Selma's walls. Or let the grief of Lara riſe, and the ſighs of the mother of Calmar,[f] when he was ſought, in vain, on his hills; and ſhe beheld his bow in the hall. Carril, place the ſhield of Caithbat on that branch; and let the ſpear of Cuchullin be near; that the ſound of my battle may riſe with the gray beam of the eaſt." The hero leaned on his father's ſhield: the ſong of Lara roſe. The hundred bards were diſtant far: Carril alone is near the chief. The words of the ſong were his; and the ſound of his harp was mournful.

"Alcletha[g] with the aged locks! mother of car-borne Calmar! why doſt thou look towards the deſart, to behold the return of thy ſon? Theſe are not his heroes, dark on the heath: nor is that the voice of Calmar: it is but the diſtant grove, Alcletha! but the roar of the mountain wind!" Who[h] bounds over Lara's ſtream, ſiſter of the noble Calmar? Does not Alcletha behold his ſpear?

But

But her eyes are dim! Is it not the ſon of Matha, daughter of my love?"

"It is but an aged oak, Alcletha!" replied the lovely weeping Alona.[i] "It is but an oak, Alcletha, bent over Lara's ſtream. But who comes along the plain? ſorrow is in his ſpeed. He lifts high the ſpear of Calmar. Alcletha, it is covered with blood!" "But it is covered with the blood of foes,[k] ſiſter of car-borne Calmar! his ſpear never returned unſtained with blood, nor his bow from the ſtrife of the mighty. The battle is conſumed in his preſence: he is a flame of death, Alona! Youth[l] of the mournful ſpeed! where is the ſon of Alcletha? Does he return with his fame? in the midſt of his echoing ſhields? Thou art dark and ſilent! Calmar is then no more. Tell me not, warrior, how he fell, for I cannot hear of his wound.

Why doſt thou look towards the deſart, mother of car-borne Calmar?

Such was the ſong of Carril, when Cuchullin lay on his ſhield: the bards reſted on their harps, and ſleep fell ſoftly around. The ſon of Semo was awake alone; his ſoul was fixed on the war. The burning oaks began to decay; faint red light is ſpread around. A feeble voice is heard: the ghoſt of Calmar came. He ſtalked in the beam. Dark

is

is the wound in his ſide. His hair is diſordered and looſe. Joy ſits darkly on his face: and he ſeems to invite Cuchullin to his cave.

"Son of the cloudy night!" ſaid the riſing chief of Errin; "Why doſt thou bend thy dark eyes on me, ghoſt of the car-borne Calmar? Wouldeſt thou frighten me, O Matha's ſon! from the battles of Cormac? Thy hand was not feeble in war; neither was thy voice [m] for peace. How art thou changed, chief of Lara! if thou now doſt adviſe to fly! But, Calmar, I never fled. I never feared [n] the ghoſts of the deſart. Small is their knowledge, and weak their hands; their dwelling is in the wind. But my ſoul grows in danger, and rejoices in the noiſe of ſteel. Retire thou to thy cave; thou art not Calmar's ghoſt; he delighted in battle, and his arm was like the thunder of heaven."

He retired in his blaſt with joy, for he had heard the voice of his praiſe. The faint beam of the morning roſe, and the ſound of Caithbat's buckler ſpread. Gree Ullin's warriors convened, like the roar of many ſtreams. The horn of war is heard over Lego; the mighty Torlath came.

"Why doſt thou come with thy thouſands, Cuchullin," ſaid the chief of Lego. "I know the ſtrength of thy arm, and thy ſoul is an unextinguiſhed guiſhed fire. Why fight we not on the plain, and let our hoſts behold our deeds? Let them behold us like roaring waves, that tumble round a rock: the mariners haſten away, and look on their ſtrife with fear."

"Thou riſeſt, like the ſun, on my ſoul," replied the ſon of Semo. "Thine arm is mighty, O Torlath; and worthy of my wrath. Retire, ye men of Ullin, to Slimora's ſhady ſide; behold the chief of Erin, in the day of his fame. Carril; tell to mighty Connal, if Cuchullin muſt fall, tell him I accuſed the winds which roar on Togorma's waves. Never was he abſent in battle, when the ſtrife of my fame aroſe. Let this ſword be before Cormac, like the beam of heaven: let his counſel ſound in Temora in the day of danger."

He ruſhed, in the ſound of his arms, like the terrible ſpirit of Loda,° when he comes in the roar of a thouſand ſtorms, and ſcatters battles from his eyes. He ſits on a cloud over Lochlin's ſeas: his mighty hand is on his ſword, and the winds lift his flaming locks. So terrible was Cuchullin in the day of his fame. Torlath fell by his hand, and Lego's heroes mourned. They gather around the chief like the clouds of the deſart. A thouſand ſwords roſe at one; a thouſand arrows flew; but he ſtood like a rock in the midſt of a roaring ſea.

They fell around; he ſtrode in blood: dark Slimora echoed wide. The ſons of Ullin came, and the battle ſpread over Lego. The chief of Erin overcame; he returned over the field with his fame. But pale he returned! The joy of his face was dark. He rolled his eyes in ſilence. The ſword hung, unſheathed, in his hand, and his ſpear bent at every ſtep.

"Carrill," ſaid the king in ſecret, "the ſtrength of Cuchullin fails. My days are with the years that are paſt: and no mourning of mine ſhall ariſe. They ſhall ſeek me at Temora, but I ſhall not be found. Cormac will weep in his hall, and ſay "Where is Tura's chief?" But my name is renowned! my fame in the ſong of bards. The youth will ſay in ſecret, "O let me die as Cuchullin died; renown clothed him like a robe; and the light of his fame is great." Draw the arrow from my ſide; and lay Cuchullin beneath that oak. Place the ſhield of Caithbat near, that they may behold me amidſt the arms of my fathers."

"And is the ſon of Semo fallen?" ſaid Carril with a ſigh. "Mournful are Tura's walls; and ſorrow dwells at Dunſcaich. Thy ſpouſe is left alone in her youth, the ſon [P] of thy love is alone. He ſhall come to Bragela, and aſk her why ſhe weeps. He ſhall lift his eyes to the wall, and ſee his his father's ſword. "Whoſe ſword is that?" he will ſay: and the ſoul of his mother is ſad. Who is that like the hart of the deſart, in the murmur of his courſe: His eyes look wildly round in ſearch of his friend. Connal, ſon of Colgar, where haſt thou been, when the mighty fell? Did the ſeas of Togorma roll round thee? Was the wind of the ſouth in thy ſails? The mighty have fallen in battle, and thou waſt not there. Let none tell it in Selma, nor in Morven's woody land; Fingal will be ſad, and the ſons of the deſart mourn."

By the dark rolling waves of Lego they raiſed the hero's tomb. Luath,[q] at a diſtance, lies, the companion of Cuchullin, at the chaſe.

Bleſt[r] be thy ſoul, ſon of Semo; thou wert mighty in battle. Thy ſtrength was like the ſtrength of a ſtream: thy ſpeed like the eagle's wing. Thy path in the battle was terrible: the ſteps of death were behind thy ſword. Bleſt be thy ſoul, ſon of Semo; car-borne chief of Dunſcaich! Thou haſt not fallen by the ſword of the mighty, neither was thy blood on the ſpear of the valiant. The arrow came, like the ſting of death in a blaſt: nor did the feeble hand, which drew the bow, perceive it. Peace to thy ſoul, in thy cave, chief of the iſle of miſt!

" The mighty are diſperſed at Temora: there is none in Cormac's hall. The king mourns in his youth, for he does not behold thy coming. The ſound of thy ſhield is ceaſed: his foes are gathering round. Soft be thy reſt in thy cave, chief of Erin's wars! Bragela will not hope thy return, or ſee thy ſails in ocean's foam. Her ſteps are not on the ſhore: nor her ear open to the voice of thy rowers. She ſits in the hall of ſhells, and ſees the arms of him that is no more. Thine eyes are full of tears, daughter of car-borne Sorglan! Bleſt be thy ſoul in death, O chief of ſhady Cromla!"

THE DEATH OF CUCHULLIN.

[a] Togorma, i. e. the iſland of blue waves, one of the Hebrides, was ſubject to Connal, the ſon of Caithbat, Cuchullin's friend. He is ſometimes called the ſon of Colgar, from one of that name who was the founder of the family. Connal, a few days before the news of Torlath's revolt came to Temora, had ſailed to Togorma, his native iſle; where he was detained by contrary winds during the war in which Cuchullin was killed.

[b] The royal palace of the Iriſh kings; Teamhrath according to ſome of the bards.

[c] The bards were the heralds of ancient times; and their perſons were ſacred on account of their office. In later times

times they abuſed that privilege; and as their perſons were inviolable, they ſatyriſed and lampooned ſo freely thoſe who were not liked by their patrons, that they became a public nuiſance. Screened under the character of heralds, they groſsly abuſed the enemy when he would not accept the terms they offered.

[f] Calmar the ſon of Matha. His death is related at large, in the third book of Fingal. He was the only ſon of Matha: and the family was extinct in him. The ſeat of the family was on the banks of the river Lara, in the neighbourhood of Lego, and probably near the place where Cuchullin lay; which circumſtance ſuggeſted to him, the lamentation of Alcletha over her ſon.

[g] Ald-cla'tha, decaying beauty; probably a poetical name given the mother of Calmar, by the bard himſelf.

[h] Alcletha ſpeaks. Calmar had promiſed to return, by a certain day, and his mother and his ſiſter Alona are repreſented by the bard as looking, with impatience, towards that quarter where they expected Calmar would make his firſt appearance.

[k] Alcletha ſpeaks.

[l] She addreſſes herſelf to Larnir, Calmar's friend, who had returned with the news of his death.

[m] See Calmar's ſpeech, in the firſt book of Fingal.

[n] See Cuchullin's reply to Connal, concerning Crugal's ghoſt. Fing. B. II.

[o] Loda, in the third book of Fingal, is mentioned as a place of worſhip in Scandinavia; by the ſpirit of Loda, the poet poet probably means Odin, the great deity of the northern nations.

[p] Conloch, who was afterwards very famous for his great exploits in Ireland. He was ſo remarkable for his dexterity in handling the javelin, that when a good markſman is deſcribed, it has paſſed into a proverb, in the north of Scotland, He is unerring as the arm of Conloch.

[q] It was of old, the cuſtom to bury the favourite dog near the maſter. This was not peculiar to the ancient Scots, for we find it practiſed by many other nations in their ages of heroiſm. There is a ſtone ſhewn ſtill at Dunſcaich, in the iſle of Sky, to which Cuchullin commonly bound his dog Luath. The ſtone goes by his name to this day.

[r] This is the ſong of the bards over Cuchullin's tomb. Every ſtanza cloſes with ſome remarkable title of the hero, which was always the cuſtom in funeral elegies. The verſe of the ſong is a lyric meaſure, and it was of old ſung to the harp.

DAR-THULA:

DAR-THULA:

A POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

It may not be improper here, to give the ſtory which is the foundation of this poem, as it is handed down by tradition. Uſnoth, lord of Etha, which is probably that part of Argyleſhire which is near Loch Eta, an arm of the ſea in Lorn, had three ſons, Nathos, Althos, and Ardan, by Sliſſama, the daughter of Semo, and ſiſter to the celebrated Cuchullin. The three brothers, when very young, were ſent over to Ireland, by their father, to learn the uſe of arms, under their uncle Cuchullin, who made a great figure in that kingdom. They were juſt landed in Ulſter when the news of Cuchullin's death arrived. Nathos, though very young, took the command of Cuchullin's army, made head againſt Cairbar the uſurper, and defeated him in ſeveral battles. Cairbar at laſt having found means to murder Cormac the lawful king, the army of Nathos ſhifted ſides, and he himſelf was obliged to return into Ulſter, in order to paſs over into Scotland. Dar-thula, the daughter of Colla, with whom Cairbar was in love, reſided, at that time, in Selama, a caſtle in Ulſter; ſhe ſaw, fell in love, and fled with Nathos; but a ſtorm riſing at ſea, they were unfortunately driven back on that part of the coaſt of Ulſter, where Cairbar was encamped with his army, waiting for Fingal, who meditated an expedition into Ireland, to re-eſtabliſh the Scottiſh race of kings on the throne of that kingdom. The three three brothers, after having defended themſelves, for ſome time, with great bravery, were overpowered and ſlain, and the unfortunate Dar-thula killed herſelf upon the body of her beloved Nathos.

Oſſian opens the poem, on the night preceding the death of the ſons of Uſnoth, and brings in, by way of epiſode, what paſſed before. He relates the death of Dar-thula differently from the common tradition; his account is the moſt probable, as ſuicide ſeems to have been unknown in thoſe early times: for no traces of it are found in the old poetry.

DAUGHTER of heaven,[a] fair art thou! the ſilence of thy face is pleaſant. Thou comeſt forth in lovelineſs: the ſtars attend thy blue ſteps in the eaſt. The clouds rejoice in thy preſence, O moon, and brighten their dark-brown ſides. Who is like thee in heaven, daughter of the night? The ſtars are aſhamed in thy preſence, and turn aſide their green, ſparkling eyes. Whither doſt thou retire from thy courſe, when the darkneſs[b] of thy countenance grows? Haſt thou thy hall like Oſſian? Dwelleſt thou in the ſhadow of grief? Have thy ſiſters fallen from heaven? Are they who rejoiced with thee, at night, no more? Yes! they have fallen, fair light! and thou doſt often retire to mourn. But thou thyſelf ſhalt fail, one night; and leave thy blue path in heaven. The ſtars will then lift their green heads: they who were aſhamed in thy preſence, will rejoice. Thou art now cloth-ed with thy brightneſs: look from thy gates in the ſky. Burſt the cloud, O wind, that the daughter of night may look forth, that the ſhaggy moun-tains may brighten, and the ocean roll its blue waves in light.

Nathos [c] is on the deep, and Althos that beam of youth, Arden is near his brothers; they move in the gloom of their courſe. The ſons of Uſnoth move in darkneſs, from the wrath of car-borne Cairbar [d]. Who is that dim, by their ſide? the night has covered her beauty. Her hair ſighs on the ocean's wind; her robe ſtreams in duſky wreaths. She is like the fair ſpirit of heaven, in the midſt of his ſhadowy miſt. Who is it but Dar-thula [e], the firſt of Erin's maids? She has fled from the love of Cairbar, with the car-borne Nathos. But the winds deceive thee, O Dar-thula; and deny the woody Etha to thy ſails. Theſe are not thy mountains, Nathos, nor is that the roar of thy climbing waves. The halls of Cairbar are near; and the towers of the foe lift their heads. Ullin ſtretches its green head into the ſea; and Tura's bay receives the ſhip. Where have ye been, ye ſouthern winds! when the ſons of my love were deceived? But ye have been ſporting on plains, and purſuing the thiſtle's beard. O that ye had been ruſtling in the ſails of Nathos, till the hills of Etha roſe! till they roſe in their clouds, and ſaw their coming chief! Long haſt thou been abſent, Nathos! and the day of thy return is paſt.

But the land of ſtrangers ſaw thee, lovely: thou wait lovely in the eyes of Dar-thula. Thy face was like the light of the morning, thy hair like the raven's wing. Thy ſoul was generous and mild, like the hour of the ſetting ſun. Thy words were the gale of the reeds, or the gliding ſtream of Lora. But, when the rage of battle roſe, thou waſt like a ſea in a ſtorm; the clang of arms was terrible: the hoſt vaniſhed at the ſound of thy courſe. It was then Dar-thula beheld thee, from the top of her moſſy tower: from the tower of Selama [f], where her fathers dwelt.

"Lovely art thou, O ſtranger!" ſhe ſaid, for her trembling ſoul aroſe. "Fair art thou in thy battles, friend of the fallen Cormac! [g] Why doſt thou ruſh on, in thy valour, youth of the ruddy look? Few are thy hands, in battle, againſt the car-borne Cairbar! O that I might be freed of his love! [h] that I might rejoice in the preſence of Nathos! Bleſt are the rocks of Etha; they will behold his ſteps at the chaſe! they will ſee his white boſom, when the winds lift his raven hair!"

Such

Such were thy words, Dar-thula, in Selama's moſſy towers. But, now, the night is round thee: and the winds have deceived thy ſails. The winds have deceived thy ſails, Dar-thula: their bluſtering ſound is high. Ceaſe a little while, O north wind, and let me hear the voice of the lovely. Thy voice is lovely, Dar-thula, between the ruſtling blaſts.

" Are theſe the rocks of Nathos, and the roar of his mountain ſtreams? Comes that beam of light from Uſnoth's nightly hall? The miſt rolls around, and the beam is feeble: but the light of Dar-thula's ſoul is the car-borne chief of Etha! Son of the generous Uſnoth, why that broken ſigh? Are we not in the land of ſtrangers, chief of echoing Etha?"

" Theſe are not the rocks of Nathos," he replied, " nor the roar of his ſtreams. No light comes from Etha's halls, for they are diſtant far. We are in the land of ſtrangers, in the land of car-borne Cairbar. The winds have deceived us, Dar-thula. Ullin here lifts her green hills. Go towards the north, Althos; be thy ſteps, Ardan, along the coaſt; that the foe may not come in darkneſs, and our hopes of Etha fail. I will go towards that moſſy tower, and ſee who dwells about the beam. Reſt, Dar-thula, on the ſhore! reſt in peace, thou beam of light! the ſword of Nathos is around thee, like the lightning of heaven."

He went. She ſat alone and heard the rolling of the wave. The big tear is in her eye; and ſhe looks for the car-borne Nathos. Her ſoul trembles at the blaſt. And ſhe turns her ear towards the tread of his feet. The tread of his feet is not heard. "Where art thou, ſon of my love! The roar of the blaſt is around me. Dark is the cloudy night. But Nathos does not return. What detains thee, chief of Etha? Have the foes met the hero in the ſtrife of the night!"

He returned, but his face was dark: he had ſeen his departed friend. It was the wall of Tura, and the ghoſt of Cuchullin ſtalked there. The ſighing of his breaſt was frequent; and the decayed flame of his eyes terrible. His ſpear was a column of miſt: the ſtars looked dim through his form. His voice was like hollow wind in a cave: and he told the tale of grief. The ſoul of Nathos was ſad, like the ſun in the day of miſt, when his face is watry and dim.

Why art thou ſad, O Nathos?" ſaid the lovely daughter of Colla. "Thou art a pillar of light to Dar-thula: the joy of her eyes is in Etha's chief. Where is my friend, but Nathos? My father reſts in the tomb. Silence dwells on Selama: ſadneſs ſpreads on the blue ſtreams of my land. My friends have fallen, with Cormac. The mighty were ſlain in the battle of Ullin.

" Evening darkened on the plain. The blue ſtreams failed before mine eyes. The unfrequent blaſt came ruſtling in the tops of Selama's groves. My ſeat was beneath a tree on the walls of my fathers. Truthil paſt before my ſoul; the brother of my love; he that was abſent [i] in the battle againſt the car-borne Cairbar. Bending on his ſpear, the gray-haired Colla came: his downcaſt face is dark, and ſorrow dwells in his ſoul. His ſword is on the ſide of the hero: the helmet of his fathers on his head. The battle grows in his breaſt. He ſtrives to hide the tear.

" Dar-thula," he ſighing ſaid, " thou art the laſt of Colla's race. Truthil is fallen in battle. The king [k] of Selama is no more. Cairbar comes, with his thouſands, towards Selama's walls. Cola will meet his pride, and revenge his ſon. But where ſhall I find thy ſafety, Dar-thula with the dark-brown hair! thou art lovely as the ſun-beam of heaven, and thy friends are low! " And is the ſun of battle fallen?" I ſaid with a burſting ſigh. " Ceaſed the generous ſoul of Truthil to lighten through the field? My ſafety, Colla, is in that bow; I have learned to pierce the deer. Is not Cairbar Cairbar like the hart of the defart, father of fallen Truthil?"

The face of age brightened with joy: and the crowded tears of his eyes poured down. The lips of Colla trembled. His gray beard whiſtled in the blaſt. "Thou art the ſiſter of Truthil," he ſaid; "thou burneſt in the fire of his ſoul. Take Dar-thula, take that ſpear, that brazen ſhield, that burniſhed helmet: they are the ſpoils of a warrior: a ſon of early youth. When the light riſes on Selama, we go to meet the car-borne Cairbar. But keep thou near the arm of Colla; beneath the ſhadow of my ſhield. Thy father, Dar-thula, could once defend thee, but age is trembling on his hand. The ſtrength of his arm has failed, and his ſoul is darkened with grief."

"We paſſed the night in ſorrow. The light of morning roſe. I ſhone in the arms of battle. The gray haired hero moved before. The ſons of Selama convened around the ſounding ſhield of Colla. But few were they in the plain, and their locks were gray. The youths had fallen with Truthil, in the battle of car-borne Cormac.

"Companions of my youth!" ſaid Colla, "it was not thus you have ſeen me in arms. It was not thus I ſtrode to battle, when the great Confadan fell. But ye are laden with grief. The darkneſs of age comes like the miſt of the deſart. My ſhield is worn with years; my ſword is fixed [m] in its place. I ſaid to my ſoul, thy evening ſhall be calm, and thy departure like a fading light. But the ſtorm has returned; I bend like an aged oak. My boughs are fallen on Selama, and I tremble in my place. Where art thou, with thy fallen heroes, O my beloved Truthil! Thou anſwereſt not from thy ruſhing blaſt; and the ſoul of thy father is ſad. But I will be ſad no more, Cairbar or Colla muſt fall. I feel the returning ſtrength of my arm. My heart leaps at the ſound of battle."

"The hero drew his ſword. The gleaming blades of his people roſe. They moved along the plain. Their gray hair ſtreamed in the wind. Cairbar ſat, at the feaſt, in the ſilent plain of Lona [n]. He ſaw the coming of the heroes, and he called his chiefs to battle. Why [o] ſhould I tell to Nathos, how the ſtrife of battle grew! I have ſeen thee, in the midſt of thouſands, like the beam of heaven's fire: it is beautiful, but terrible; the people fall in its red courſe. The ſpear of Colla flew, for he remembered the battles of his youth. An arrow came with its ſound, and pierced the hero's ſide. He fell on his echoing ſhield. My ſoul ſtarted with fear; I ſtretched my buckler over him; but my heaving breaſt was ſeen. Cairbar came, with with his ſpear, and he beheld Selama's maid: joy roſe on his dark-brown face: he ſtayed the lifted ſteel. He raiſed the tomb of Colla; and brought me weeping to Selama. He ſpoke the words of love, but my ſoul was ſad. I ſaw the ſhields of my fathers, and the ſword of car-borne Truthil. I ſaw the arms of the dead, and the tear was on my cheek.

Then thou didſt come, O Nathos: and gloomy Cairbar fled. He fled like the ghoſt of the defart before the morning's beam. His hoſts were not near: and feeble was his arm againſt thy ſteel. "Why art thou ſad, O Nathos?" ſaid the lovely maid of Colla.

"I have met," replied the hero, "the battle in my youth. My arm could not lift the ſpear, when firſt the danger roſe; but my ſoul brightened before the war, as the green narrow vale, when the ſun pours his ſtreamy beams, before he hides his head in a ſtorm. My ſoul brightened in danger before I ſaw Selama's fair; before I ſaw thee, like a ſtar, that ſhines on the hill, at night; the cloud ſlowly comes, and threatens the lovely light. We are in the land of the foe, and the winds have deceived us, Dar-thula! the ſtrength of our friends is not near, nor the mountains of Etha. Where ſhall I find thy peace, daughter of mighty Colla!

The brothers of Nathos are brave: and his own ſword has ſhone in war. But what are the ſons of Uſnoth to the hoſt of car-borne Cairbar! O that the winds had brought thy ſails, Oſcar[q] king of men! thou didſt promiſe to come to the battles of fallen Cormac. Then would my hand be ſtrong as the flaming arm of death. Cairbar would tremble in his halls, and peace dwell round the lovely Dar-thula. But why doſt thou fall, my ſoul? The ſons of Uſnoth may prevail."

"And they will prevail, O Nathos," ſaid the riſing ſoul of the maid: "never ſhall Dar-thula behold the halls of gloomy Cairbar. Give me thoſe arms of braſs, that glitter to that paſſing meteor; I ſee them in the dark-boſomed ſhip. Dar-thula will enter the battle of ſteel. Ghoſt of the noble Colla! do I behold thee on that cloud? who is that dim beſide thee? It is the car-borne Truthil. Shall I behold the halls of him that ſlew Selama's chief! No: I will not behold them, ſpirits of my love!"

Joy roſe in the face of Nathos when he heard the white-boſomed maid. "Daughter of Selama! thou ſhineſt on my ſoul. Come, with thy thouſands, Cairbar! the ſtrength of Nathos is returned. And thou, O aged Uſnoth, ſhalt not hear that thy ſon has fled. I remember thy words on Etha; when my ſails begun to riſe: when I ſpread them towards Ullin, towards the moſſy walls of Tura. "Thou goeſt," he ſaid, "O Nathos, to the king of ſhields; to Cuchullin chief of men who never fled from danger. Let not thine arm be feeble: neither be thy thoughts of flight; leſt the ſon of Semo ſay that Etha's race are weak. His words may come to Uſnoth, and ſadden his ſoul in the hall." The tear was on his cheek. He gave this ſhining ſword.

"I came to Tura's bay: but the halls of Tura were ſilent. I looked round, and there was none to tell of the chief of Dunſcaich. I went to the hall of his ſhells, where the arms of his fathers hung. But the arms were gone, and aged Lamhor [r] ſat in tears. "Whence are the arms of ſteel," ſaid the riſing Lamhor? "The light of the ſpear has long been abſent from Tura's duſky walls. Come ye from the rolling ſea? Or from the mournful halls of Temora?" [s]

"We come from the ſea," I ſaid, "from Uſnoth's riſing towers. We are the ſons of Sliſſama, [t] the daughter of car-borne Semo. Where is Tura's chief, ſon of the ſilent hall? But why ſhould Nathos aſk? for I behold thy tears. How did the mighty fall, ſon of the lonely Tura?"

"He fell not," Lamhor replied, "like the ſilent ſtar of night, when it ſhoots through darkneſs and

is

is no more. But he was like a meteor that falls in a diſtant land; death attends its red courſe, and itſelf is the ſign of wars. Mournful are the banks of Lego, and the roar of ſtreamy Lara! There the hero fell, ſon of the noble Uſnoth."

"The hero fell in the midſt of ſlaughter," I ſaid with a burſting ſigh. "His hand was ſtrong in battle; and death was behind his ſword."

"We came to Lego's mournful banks. We found his riſing tomb. His companions in battle are there? his bards of many ſongs. Three days we mourned over the hero: on the fourth, I ſtruck the ſhield of Caithbat. The heroes gathered around with joy, and ſhook their beamy ſpears. Corlath was near with his hoſt, the friend of carborne Cairbar. We came like a ſtream by night, and his heroes fell. When the people of the valley roſe, they ſaw their blood with morning's light. But we rolled away, like wreaths of miſt, to Cormac's echoing hall. Our ſwords roſe to defend the king. But Temora's halls were empty. Cormac had fallen in his youth. The king of Erin was no more.

"Sadneſs ſeized the ſons of Ullin, they ſlowly, gloomily retired: like clouds that, long having threatened rain, retire behind the hills. The ſons of Uſnoth moved, in their grief, towards Tura's ſounding bay. We paſſed by Selama, and Cairbar retired like Lano's miſt, when it is driven by the winds of the deſart.

" It was then I beheld thee, O maid, like the light of Etha's ſun. Lovely is that beam, I ſaid, and the crowded ſigh of my boſom roſe. Thou cameſt in thy beauty, Dar-thula, to Etha's mournful chief. But the winds have deceived us, daughter of Colla, and the foe is near."

" Yes! the foe is near," ſaid the ruſtling ſtrength of Althos. [u] " I heard their clanging arms on the coaſt, and ſaw the dark wreaths of Erin's ſtandard. Diſtinct is the voice of Cairbar, [x] and loud as Cromla's falling ſtream. He had ſeen the dark ſhip on the ſea, before the duſky night came down. His people watch on Lena's plain, and lift ten thouſand ſwords." " And let them lift ten thouſand ſwords," ſaid Nathos with a ſmile. " The ſons of car-borne Uſnoth will never tremble in danger. Why doſt thou roll with all thy foam, thou roaring ſea of Ullin! Why do ye ruſtle, on your dark wings, ye whiſtling tempeſts of the ſky? Do ye think, ye ſtorms, that ye keep Nathos on the coaſt? No: his ſoul detains him, children of the night! Althos! bring my father's arms: thou ſeeſt them beaming to the ſtars. Bring the ſpear of Semo, [y] it ſtands in the dark-boſomed ſhip."

He

He brought the arms. Nathos clothed his limbs in all their ſhining ſteel. The ſtride of the chief is lovely: the joy of his eyes terrible. He looks towards the coming of Cairbar. The wind is ruſtling in his hair. Dar-thula is ſilent at his ſide: her look is fixed on the chief. She ſtrives to hide the riſing ſigh, and two tears ſwell in her eyes.

"Althos!" ſaid the chief of Etha, "I ſee a cave in that rock. Place Dar-thula there: and let thy arm be ſtrong. Ardan! we meet the foe, and call to battle gloomy Cairbar. O that he came in his ſounding ſteel, to meet the ſon of Uſnoth! Dar-thula! if thou ſhalt eſcape, look not on the falling Nathos. Lift thy ſails, O Althos, towards the echoing groves of Etha.

"Tell to the chief,[z] that his ſon fell with fame; that my ſword did not ſhun the battle. Tell him I fell in the midſt of thouſands, and let the joy of his grief be great. Daughter of Colla! call the maids to Etha's echoing hall. Let their ſongs ariſe from Nathos, when ſhadowy autumn returns. O that the voice of Cona[a] might be heard in my praiſe! then would my ſpirit rejoice in the midſt of my mountain winds." And my voice ſhall praiſe thee, Nathos chief of the woody Etha! The voice of Oſſian ſhall riſe in thy praiſe, ſon of the generous Uſnoth! Why was I not on Lena, when the battle battle roſe? Then would the ſword of Oſſian have defended thee, or himſelf have fallen low.

We ſat, that night, in Selma round the ſtrength of the ſhell. The wind was abroad, in the oaks; the ſpirit of the mountain [b] ſhrieked. The blaſt came ruſtling through the hall, and gently touched my harp. The ſound was mournful and low, like the ſong of the tomb. Fingal heard it firſt, and the crowded ſighs of his boſom roſe. "Some of my heroes are low," ſaid the gray haired king of Morven. "I hear the ſound of death on the harp of my ſon. Oſſian, touch the ſounding ſtring; bid the ſorrow riſe; that their ſpirits may fly with joy to Morven's woody hills." I touched the harp before the king, the ſound was mournful and low. "Bend forward from your clouds," I ſaid, "ghoſts of my fathers! bend; lay by the red terror of your courſe, and receive the falling chief; whether he comes from a diſtant land or riſes from the rolling ſea. Let his robe of miſt be near; his ſpear that is formed of a cloud. Place an half-extinguiſhed meteor by his ſide, in the form of the hero's ſword. And, oh! let his countenance be lovely, that his friends may delight in his preſence. Bend from your clouds," I ſaid, "ghoſts of my fathers! bend."

Such was my ſong, in Selma, to the lightly-trembling harp. But Nathos was on Ullin's ſhore, ſurrounded ſurrounded by the night; he heard the voice of the foe amidſt the roar of tumbling waves. Silent he heard their voice, and reſted on his ſpear. Morning roſe, with its beams: the ſons of Erin appear; like gray rocks, with all their trees, they ſpread along the coaſt. Cairbar ſtood, in the midſt, and grimly ſmiled when he ſaw the foe. Nathos ruſhed forward, in his ſtrength; nor could Dar-thula ſtay behind. She came with the hero, lifting her ſhining ſpear. And who are theſe, in their armour, in the pride of youth? Who but the ſons of Uſnoth, Althos, and dark haired Ardan.

"Come," ſaid Nathos, "come! chief of the high Temora! Let our battle be on the coaſt for the white-boſomed maid. His people are not with Nathos; they are behind that rolling ſea. Why doſt thou bring thy thouſands againſt the chief of Etha? Thou didſt fly[c] from him, in battle, when his friends were around him." "Youth of the heart of pride, ſhall Erin's king fight with thee? Thy fathers were not among the renowned, nor of the kings of men. Are the arms of foes in their halls? Or the ſhields of other times? Cairbar is renowned in Temora, nor does he fight with little men."

The tear ſtarts from car-borne Nathos; he turned his eyes to his brothers. Their ſpears flew, at once, once, and three heroes lay on earth. Then the light of their ſwords gleamed on high: the ranks of Erin yield; as a ridge of dark clouds before a blaſt of wind. Then Cairbar ordered his people; and they drew a thouſand bows. A thouſand arrows flew; the ſons of Uſnoth fell. They fell like three young oaks which ſtood alone on the hill; the traveller ſaw the lovely trees, and wondered how they grew ſo lonely: the blaſt of the deſart came, by night, and laid their green heads low; next day he returned, but they were withered, and the heath was bare.

Dar-thula ſtood in ſilent grief, and beheld their fall; no tear is in her eye: but her look is wildly ſad. Pale was her cheek; her trembling lips broke ſhort an half-formed word. Her dark hair flew on the wind. But gloomy Cairbar came. "Where is thy lover now? the car-borne chief of Etha? Haſt thou beheld the halls of Uſnoth? Or the dark-brown hills of Fingal? My battle had roared on Morven, did not the winds meet Dar-thula. Fingal himſelf would have been low, and ſorrow dwelling in Selma." Her ſhield fell from Dar-thula's arm, her breaſt of ſnow appeared. It appeared, but it was ſtained with blood, for an arrow was fixed in her ſide. She fell on the fallen

Nathos,

Nathos, like a wreath of ſnow. Her dark hair ſpreads on his face, and their blood is mixing round.

"Daughter of Colla thou art low!" ſaid Cairbar's hundred bards; "ſilence is at the blue ſtreams of Selama, for Truthil's [d] race have failed. When wilt thou riſe in thy beauty, firſt of Erin's maids? Thy ſleep is long in the tomb, and the morning diſtant far. The ſun ſhall not come to thy bed, and ſay, "Awake Dar-thula! awake, thou firſt of women! the wind of ſpring is abroad. The flowers ſhake their heads on the green hills, the woods wave their growing leaves." Retire, O ſun, the daughter of Colla is aſleep. She will not come forth in her beauty: ſhe will not move, in the ſteps of her lovelineſs."

Such was the ſong of the bards, when they raiſed the tomb. I ſung, afterwards, over the grave, when the king of Morven came; when he came to green Ullin to fight with car-borne Cairbar.

NOTES ON

DAR-THULA:

[a] The addreſs to the moon is very beautiful in the original. It is in a lyric meaſure, and appears to have been ſung to the harp.

[b] The poet means the moon in her wane.

[d] Cairbar, who murdered Cormac king of Ireland, and uſurped the throne. He was afterwards killed by Oſcar the ſon of Oſſian in a ſingle combat. The poet, upon other occaſions, gives him the epithet of red-haired.

[e] Dar-thula, or Dart-'huile, a woman with fine eyes. She was the moſt famous beauty of antiquity. To this day, when a woman is praiſed for her beauty, the common phraſe is, that ſhe is as lovely as Dar-thula.

[f] The poet does not mean that Selama, which is mentioned as the ſeat of Toſcar in Ulſter, in the poem of Conlath and Cuthona. The word in the original ſignifies either beautiful to behold, or a place with a pleaſant or wide proſpect. In thoſe times, they built their houſes upon eminences, to command a view of the country, and to prevent their being ſurpriſed; many of them on that account, were called Selama. The famous Selma of Fingal is derived from the ſame root.

[g] Cormac the young king of Ireland, who was murdered by Cairbar.

[h] That is, of the love of Cairbar.

[i] The family of Colla preſerved their loyalty to Cormac long after the death of Cuchullin.

[k] It is very common, in Oſſian's poetry, to give the title of king to every chief that was remarkable for his valour.

[l] The poet, to make the ſtory of Dar-thula's arming herſelf for battle, more probable, makes her armour to be that of a very young man, otherwiſe it would ſhock all belief, lief, that ſhe, who was very young, ſhould be able to carry it.

[m] It was the cuſtom of thoſe times, that every warrior at a certain age, or when he became unfit for the field, fixed his arms in the great hall, where the tribe feaſted upon joyful occaſions. He was afterwards never to appear in battle; and this ſtage of life was called the time of fixing of the arms.

[n] Lona, a marſhy plain. It was the cuſtom, in the days of Oſſian, to feaſt after a victory. Cairbar had juſt provided an entertainment for his army, upon the defeat of Truthil the ſon of Colla, and the reſt of the party of Cormac, when Colla and his aged warriors arrived to give him battle.

[o] The poet avoids the deſcription of the battle of Lona, as it would be improper in the mouth of a woman, and could have nothing new, after the numerous deſcriptions, of that kind, in his other poems. He, at the ſame time, gives an opportunity to Dar-thula to paſs a fine compliment on her lover.

[p] It is uſual with Oſſian, to repeat, at the end of the epiſodes, the ſentence which introduced them. It brings back the mind of the reader to the main ſtory of the poem.

[q] Oſcar, the ſon of Oſſian, had long reſolved on the expedition, into Ireland, againſt Cairbar, who had aſſaſſinated his friend Cathol, the ſon of Moran, an Iriſhman of noble extraction, and in the intereſt of the family of Cormac.

[s] Temora was the royal palace of the ſupreme kings of Ireland. It is here called mournful, on account of the death of Cormac, who was murdered there by Cairbar who uſurped his throne.

[t] Slis-ſeamha, ſoft boſom. She was the wife of Uſnoth, and daughter of Semo, the chief of the iſle of miſt.

[u] Althos had juſt returned from viewing the coaſt of Lena, whither he had been ſent by Nathos, the beginning of the night.

[x] Cairbar had gathered an army, to the coaſt of Ulſter, in order to oppoſe Fingal, who prepared for an expedition into Ireland, to re-eſtabliſh the houſe of Cormac on the throne, which Cairbar had uſurped. Between the wings of Cairbar's army was the bay of Tura, into which the ſhip of the ſons of Uſnoth was driven; ſo that there was no poſſibility of their eſcaping.

[y] Semo was grandfather to Nathos by the mother's ſide. The ſpear mentioned here was given to Uſnoth on his marriage, it being the cuſtom then for the father of the lady to give his arms to his ſon-in-law. The ceremony uſed upon theſe occaſions is mentioned in other poems.

[a] Oſſian, the ſon of Fingal, is, often, poetically called the voice of Cona.

[b] By the ſpirit of the mountain is meant that deep and melancholy ſound which precedes a ſtorm; well known to thoſe who live in a high country.

[c] He alludes to the flight of Cairbar from Selama.

[d] Truthil was the founder of Dar-thula's family.

CARRIC-THURA;

A POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

Fingal returning from an expedition which he had made into the Roman province, reſolved to viſit Cathulla king of Iniſtore, and brother to Comala, whoſe ſtory is related, at large, in the dramatic poem publiſhed in this collection. Upon his coming in ſight of Carric-thura, the palace of Cathulla, he obſerved a flame on its top, which, in thoſe days, was a ſignal of diſtreſs. The wind drove him into a bay, at ſome diſtance from Carric-thura, and he was obliged to paſs the night on the ſhore. Next day he attacked the army of Frothal king of Sora, who had beſieged Cathulla in his palace of Carric-thura, and took Frothal himſelf priſoner, after he had engaged him in a ſingle combat. The deliverance of Carric-thura is the ſubject of the poem, but ſeveral other epiſodes are interwoven with it. It appears from tradition, that this poem was addreſſed to a Culdee, or one of the firſt Chriſtian miſſionaries, and that the ſtory of the Spirit of Loda, ſuppoſed to be the ancient Odin of Scandinavia, was introduced by Oſſian in oppoſition to the Culdee's doctrine. Be this as it will, it lets us into Oſſian's notions of a ſuperior being; and ſhews that he was not addicted to the ſuperſtition which prevailed all the world over, before the introduction of Chriſtianity.

HAST [a] thou left thy blue courſe in heaven, golden-haired ſon of the ſky! The weſt has opened opened its gates; the bed of thy repoſe is there. The waves come to behold thy beauty: they lift their trembling heads: they ſee thee lovely in thy ſleep; but they ſhrink away with fear. Reſt, in thy ſhadowy cave, O ſun! and let thy return be in joy. But let a thouſand lights ariſe to the ſound of the harps of Selma: let the beam ſpread in the hall, the king of ſhells is returned! The ſtrife of Crona [b] is paſt, like ſounds that are no more: raiſe the ſong, O bards, the king is returned with his fame.

Such was the ſong of Ullin, when Fingal returned from battle: when he returned in the fair bluſhing of youth; with all his heavy locks. His blue arms were on the hero; like a gray cloud on the ſun, when he moves in his robes of miſt, and ſhews but half his beams. His heroes follow the king: the feaſt of ſhells is ſpread. Fingal turns to his bards, and bids the ſong to riſe.

Voices of echoing Cona! he ſaid, O bards of other times! Ye, on whoſe ſouls the blue hoſts of our fathers riſe! ſtrike the harp in my hall; and let Fingal hear the ſong. Pleaſant is the joy of grief! it is like the ſhower of ſpring, when it ſoftens the branch of the oak, and the young leaf lifts its green head. Sing on, O bards, to-morrow we lift the ſail. My blue courſe is through the ocean, to

Carric-

Carric-thura's walls; the moſſy walls of Sarno, where Comala dwelt. There the noble Cathulla ſpreads the feaſt of ſhells. The boars of his woods are many, and the ſound of the chaſe ſhall ariſe.

Cronnan [c], ſon of ſong! ſaid Ullin, Minona, graceful at the harp: raiſe the ſong of Shilric, to pleaſe the king of Morven. Let Vinvela come in her beauty, like the ſhowery bow, when it ſhews its lovely head on the lake, and the ſetting ſun is bright. And ſhe comes, O Fingal! her voice is ſoft but ſad.

Vinvela. My love is a ſon of the hill. He purſues the flying deer. His gray dogs are panting around him; his bow-ſtring ſounds in the wind. Doſt thou reſt by the fount of the rock, or by the noiſe of the mountain ſtream? the ruſhes are nodding with the wind, the miſt is flying over the hill. I will approach my love unperceived, and ſee him from the rock. Lovely I ſaw thee firſt by the aged oak of Branno [d]; thou wert returning tall from the chaſe; the faireſt among thy friends.

Shilric. What voice is that I hear? that voice like the ſummer wind. I ſit not by the nodding ruſhes; I hear not the fount of the rock. Afar, Vinvela [e], afar I go to the wars of Fingal. My dogs attend me no more. No more I tread the hill. No more from on high I ſee thee, fair-moving ving by the ſtream of the plain; bright as the bow of heaven; as the moon on the weſtern wave.

Vinvela. Then thou art gone, O Shilric! and I am alone on the hill. The deer are ſeen on the brow; void of fear they graze along. No more they dread the wind: no more the ruſtling tree. The hunter is far removed; he is in the field of graves. Strangers, ſons of the waves! ſpare my lovely Shilric.

Shilric. If fall I muſt in the field, raiſe high my grave, Vinvela. Gray ſtones and heaped-up earth, ſhall mark me to future times. When the hunter ſhall ſit by the mound, and produce his food at noon, "Some warrior reſts here," he will ſay; and my fame ſhall live in his praiſe. Remember me, Vinvela, when low on earth I lie!

Vinvela. Yes! I will remember thee; indeed my Shilric will fall. What ſhall I do, my love! when thou art gone for ever? Through theſe hills I will go at noon: I will go through the ſilent heath. There I will ſee the place of thy reſt, returning from the chaſe. Indeed my Shilric will fall; but I will remember him.

And I remember the chief, ſaid the king of woody Morven; he conſumed the battle in his rage. But now my eyes behold him not. I met him, one day, on the hill; his cheek was pale; his his brow was dark. The ſigh was frequent in his breaſt: his ſteps were towards the deſart. But now he is not in the crowd of my chiefs, when the ſounds of my ſhields ariſe. Dwells he in the narrow houſe, [f] the chief of high Carmora? [g]

Cronnan! ſaid Ullin of other times, raiſe the ſong of Shilric; when he returned to his hills, and Vinvela was no more. He leaned on her gray moſſy ſtone; he thought Vinvela lived. He ſaw her fair-moving [h] on the plain: but the bright form laſted not: the ſun-beam fled from the field, and ſhe was ſeen no more. Hear the ſong of Shilric, it is ſoft but ſad.

I ſit by the moſſy fountain; on the top of the hill of winds. One tree is ruſtling above me. Dark waves roll over the heath. The lake is troubled below. The deer deſcend from the hill. No hunter at a diſtance is ſeen; no whiſtling cow-herd is nigh. It is mid-day: but all is ſilent. Sad are my thoughts alone. Didſt thou but appear, O my love, a wanderer on the heath! thy hair floating on the wind behind thee; thy boſom heaving on the ſight; thine eyes full of tears for thy friends, whom the miſt of the hill had concealed! Thee I would comfort, my love, and bring thee to thy father's houſe.

But it is ſhe that there appears, like a beam of light on the heath? bright as the moon in autumn, as the ſun in a ſummer-ſtorm, comeſt thou, lovely maid, over rocks, over mountains to me? She ſpeaks: but how weak her voice, like the breeze in the reeds of the pool.

"Returneſt thou ſafe from the war? Where are thy friends, my love? I heard of thy death on the hill; I heard and mourned thee, Shilric!" Yes, my fair, I return; but I alone of my race. Thou ſhalt ſee them no more: their graves I raiſed on the plain. But why art thou on the deſart hill? Why on the heath, alone?

"Alone I am, O Shilric! alone in the winter-houſe. With grief for thee I expired. Shilric, I am pale in the tomb."

She fleets, ſhe fails away; as gray miſt before the wind! and, wilt thou not ſtay, my love? Stay and behold my tears? fair thou appeareſt, Vinvela! fair thou waſt, when alive!

By the moſſy fountain I will ſit; on the top of the hill of winds. When mid-day is ſilent around, converſe, O my love, with me! come on the wings of the gale! on the blaſt, of the mountain, come! Let me hear thy voice, as thou paſſeſt, when mid-day is ſilent around.

Such

Such was the ſong of Cronnan, on the night of Selma's joy. But morning roſe in the eaſt; the blue waters rolled in light. Fingal bade his ſails to riſe, and the winds came ruſtling from their hills. Iniſtore roſe to fight, and Carric-thura's moſſy towers. But the ſign of diſtreſs was on their top: the green flame edged with ſmoke. The king of Morven ſtruck his breaſt: he aſſumed, at once, his ſpear. His darkened brow bends forward to the coaſt: he looks back to the lagging winds. His hair is diſordered on his back. The ſilence of the king is terrible.

Night came down on the ſea: Rotha's bay received the ſhip. A rock bends along the coaſt with all its echoing wood. On the top is the circle of Loda, and the moſſy ſtone of power. A narrow plain ſpreads beneath, covered with graſs and aged trees, which the midnight winds, in their wrath, had torn from the ſhaggy rock. The blue courſe of a ſtream is there: and the lonely blaſt of ocean purſues the thiſtle's beard. The flame of three oaks aroſe: the feaſt is ſpread around: but the ſoul of the king is ſad, for Carric-thura's battling chief.

The wan, cold moon roſe, in the eaſt. Sleep deſcended on the youths: Their blue helmets glitter to the beam; the fading fire decays. But ſleep did not reſt on the king: he roſe in the midſt of his arms, and ſlowly aſcended the hill to behold the flame of Sarno's tower.

The flame was dim and diſtant; the moon hid her red face in the eaſt. A blaſt came from the mountain, and bore, on its wings, the ſpirit of Loda. He came to his place in his terrors, [k] and he ſhook his duſky ſpear. His eyes appear like flames in his dark face; and his voice is like diſtant thunder. Fingal advanced with the ſpear of his ſtrength, and raiſed his voice on high.

Son of night, retire: call thy winds and fly: Why doſt thou come to my preſence, with thy ſhadowy arms? Do I fear thy gloomy form, diſmal ſpirit of Loda? Weak is thy ſhield of clouds: feeble is that meteor, thy ſword. The blaſt rolls them together; and thou thyſelf doſt vaniſh. Fly from my preſence ſon of night! call thy winds and fly!

Doſt thou force me from my place, replied the hollow voice? The people bend before me. I turn the battle in the field of the valiant. I look on the nations and they vaniſh: my noſtrils pour the blaſt of death. I come abroad on the winds: the tempeſts are before my face. But my dwelling is calm, above the clouds, the fields of my reſt are pleaſant.

Dwell then in my calm field, ſaid Fingal, and let Comhal's ſon be forgot. Do my ſteps aſcend, from my hills, into thy peaceful plains? Do I meet thee, thee, with a ſpear, on thy cloud, ſpirit of diſmal Loda? Why then doſt thou frown on Fingal? or ſhake thine airy ſpear? But thou frowneſt in vain: I never fled from mighty men. And ſhall the ſons of the wind frighten the king of Morven! No: he knows the weakneſs of their arms.

Fly to thy land, replied the form: receive the wind and fly. The blaſts are in the hollow of my hand: the courſe of the ſtorm is mine. The king of Sora is my ſon, he bends at the ſtone of my power. His battle is around Carric-thura; and he will prevail. Fly to thy land, ſon of Comhal, or feel my flaming wrath.

He lifted high his ſhadowy ſpear; and bent forward his terrible height. But the king, advancing, drew his ſword; the blade of dark brown Luno. [1] The gleaming path of the ſteel winds through the gloomy ghoſt. The form fell ſhapeleſs into air, like a column of ſmoke, which the ſtaff of the boy diſturbs, as it riſes from the half-extinguiſhed furnace.

The ſpirit of Loda ſhrieked, as, rolled into himſelf, he roſe on the wind. Iniſtore ſhook at the ſound. The waves heard it on the deep: they ſtopped, in their courſe with fear: the companions of Fingal ſtarted, at once; and took their heavy

ſpears. They miſſed the king: they roſe with rage; all their arms reſound.

The moon came forth in the eaſt. The king returned in the gleam of his arms. The joy of his youths was great; their ſouls ſettled, as a ſea from a ſtorm. Ullin raiſed the ſong of gladneſs. The hills of Iniſtore rejoiced. The flame of the oak aroſe; and the tales of heroes are told.

But Frothal, Sora's battling king, ſits in ſadneſs beneath a tree. The hoſt ſpreads around Carric-thura. He looks towards the walls with rage. He longs for the blood of Cathulla, who, once, overcame the king in war. When Annir reigned [m] in Sora, the father of car-borne Frothal, a blaſt roſe on the ſea, and carried Frothal to Iniſtore. Three days he feaſted in Sarno's halls, and ſaw the ſlow rolling eyes of Comala. He loved her, in the rage of youth, and ruſhed to ſeize the white-armed maid. Cathulla met the chief. The gloomy battle roſe. Frothal is bound in the hall: three days he piñed alone. On the fourth, Sarno ſent him to his ſhip, and he returned to his land. But wrath darkened in his ſoul againſt the noble Cathulla. When Annir's ſtone [n] of fame aroſe, Frothal came in his ſtrength. The battle burned round Carric-thura, and Sarno's moſſy walls.

Morning

Morning roſe on Iniſtore. Frothal ſtruck his dark-brown ſhield. His chiefs ſtarted at the ſound; they ſtood, but their eyes were turned to the ſea. They ſaw Fingal coming in his ſtrength; and firſt the noble Thubar ſpoke.

"Who comes like the ſtag of the mountain, with all his herd behind him? Frothal, it is a foe; I ſee his forward ſpear. Perhaps it is the king of Morven, Fingal the firſt of men. His actions are well known on Gormal; the blood of his foes is in Sarno's halls. Shall I aſk the peace° of kings? He is like the thunder of heaven."

Son of the feeble hand, ſaid Frothal, ſhall my days begin in darkneſs? Shall I yield before I have conquered in battle, chief of ſtreamy Tora? The people would ſay in Sora, Frothal flew forth like a meteor; but the dark cloud met it, and it is no more. No: Thubar, I will never yield; my fame ſhall ſurround me like light. No: I will never yield, king of ſtreamy Tora.

He went forth with the ſtream of his people, but they met a rock: Fingal ſtood unmoved, broken they rolled back from his ſide. Nor did they roll in ſafety; the ſpear of the king purſued their flight. The field is covered with heroes. A riſing hill preſerved the flying hoſt.

Frothal

Frothal ſaw their flight. The rage of his boſom roſe. He bent his eyes to the ground, and called the noble Thubar. "Thubar! my people fled. My fame has ceaſed to riſe. I will fight the king; I feel my burning ſoul. Send a bard to demand the combat. Speak not againſt Frothal's words. But, Thubar! I love a maid; ſhe dwells by Thano's ſtream, the white-boſomed daughter of Herman, Utha with the ſoftly-rolling eyes. She feared the daughter [p] of Iniſtore, and her ſoft ſighs roſe, at my departure. Tell to Utha that I am low; but that my ſoul delighted in her."

Such were his words, reſolved to fight. But the ſoft ſigh of Utha was near. She had followed her hero over the ſea, in the armour of a man. She rolled her eye on the youth, in ſecret, from beneath a glittering helmet. But now ſhe ſaw the bard as he went, and the ſpear fell thrice from her hand. Her looſe hair flew on the wind. Her white breaſt roſe, with ſighs. She lifted up her eyes to the king; ſhe would ſpeak, but thrice ſhe failed.

Fingal heard the words of the bard; he came in the ſtrength of ſteel. They mixed their deathful ſpears, and raiſed the gleam of their ſwords. But the ſteel of Fingal deſcended and cut Frothal's ſhield in twain. His fair ſide is expoſed; half bent he foreſees his death.

Darkneſs

Darkneſs gathered on Utha's ſoul. The tear rolled down her cheek. She ruſhed to cover the chief with her ſhield; but a fallen oak met her ſteps. She fell on her arm of ſnow; her ſhield, her helmet flew wide. Her white boſom heaved to the ſight; her dark-brown hair is ſpread on earth.

Fingal pitied the white-armed maid: he ſtayed the uplifted ſword. The tear was in the eye of the king, as, bending forward he ſpoke. "King of ſtreamy Sora! fear not the ſword of Fingal. It was never ſtained with the blood of the vanquiſhed; it never pierced a fallen foe. Let thy people rejoice along the blue waters of Tora: let the maids of thy love be glad. Why ſhouldeſt thou fall in thy youth, king of ſtreamy Sora?"

Frothal heard the words of Fingal, and ſaw the riſing maid: they [q] ſtood in ſilence, in their beauty: like two young trees of the plain, when the ſhower of ſpring is on their leaves, and the loud winds are laid.

"Daughter of Herman," ſaid Frothal, "didſt thou come from Tora's ſtreams; didſt thou come, in thy beauty, to behold thy warrior low? But he was low before the mighty, maid of the ſlow-rolling eye! The feeble did not overcome the ſon of car-borne Annir. Terrible art thou, O king of Morven! in battles of the ſpear. But, in peace, thou art like the ſun, when he looks through a ſilent ſhower: the flowers lift their fair heads before him; and the gales ſhake their wings. O that thou wert in Sora! that my feaſt were ſpread! The future kings of Sora would ſee thy arms and rejoice. They would rejoice at the fame of their fathers, who beheld the mighty Fingal.

"Son of Annir," replied the king, "the fame of Sora's race ſhall be heard. When chiefs are ſtrong in battle, then does the ſong ariſe! But if their ſwords are ſtretched over the feeble: if the blood of the weak has ſtained their arms; the bard ſhall forget them in the ſong, and their tombs ſhall not be known. The ſtranger ſhall come and build there, and remove the heaped-up earth. An half-worn ſword ſhall riſe before him; and bending above it, he will ſay, "Theſe are the arms of chiefs of old, but their names are not in ſong. Come thou, O Frothal, to the feaſt of Iniſtore; let the maid of thy love be there: and our faces will brighten with joy."

Fingal took his ſpear, moving in the ſteps of his might. The gates of Carric-thura are opened. The feaſt of ſhells is ſpread. The voice of muſic aroſe. Gladneſs brightened in the hall. The voice of Ullin was heard: the harp of Selma was ſtrung.

Utha

Utha rejoiced in his preſence, and demanded the ſong of grief; the big tear hung in her eye, when the ſoft [r] Crimora ſpoke. Crimora the daughter of Rinval, who dwelt at Lotha's [s] mighty ſtream. The tale was long, but lovely; and pleaſed the bluſhing maid of Tora.

Crimora. [t] Who cometh from the hill, like a cloud tinged with the beam of the weſt? Whoſe voice is that, loud as the wind, but pleaſant as the harp of Carril! [u] It is my love in the light of ſteel; but ſad is his darkened brow. Live the mighty race of Fingal? or what diſturbs my Connal? [x]

Connal. They live. I ſaw them return from the chaſe, like a ſtream of light. The ſun was on their ſhields. Like a ridge of fire they deſcended the hill. Loud is the voice of the youth; the war, my love, is near. To-morrow the terrible Dargo comes to try the force of our race. The race of Fingal he defies; the race of battle and wounds.

Crimora. Connal, I ſaw his ſails like gray miſt on the ſable wave. They ſlowly came to land. Connal, many are the warriors of Dargo!

Connal. Bring me thy father's ſhield; the boſſy, iron ſhield of Rinval; that ſhield like the full moon when it moves darkened through heaven.

Crimora. That ſhield I bring, O Connal; but it did not defend my father. By the ſpear of Gormar he fell. Thou may'ſt fall, O Connal!

Connal. Fall indeed I may: But raiſe my tomb, Crimora. Gray ſtones, a mound of earth, ſhall keep my memory. Bend thy red eye over my tomb, and beat thy mournful heaving breaſt. Though fair thou art, my love, as the light; more pleaſant than the gale of the hill; yet I will not ſtay. Raiſe my tomb, Crimora.

Crimora. Then give me thoſe arms of light; that ſword, and that ſpear of ſteel. I ſhall meet Dargo with thee, and aid my lovely Connal. Farewell, ye rocks of Ardven! ye deer! and ye ſtreams of the hill! We ſhall return no more. Our tombs are diſtant far.

"And did they return no more?" ſaid Utha's burſting ſigh. "Fell the mighty in battle, and did Crimora live? Her ſteps were lonely, and her ſoul was ſad for Connal. Was he not young and lovely; like the beam of the ſetting ſun?" Ullin ſaw the virgin's tear, and took the ſoftly-trembling harp: the ſong was lovely, but ſad, and ſilence was in Carric-thura.

Autumn is dark on the mountains; gray miſt reſts on the hills. The whirlwind is heard on the heath. Dark rolls the river through the narrow plain. A tree ſtands alone on the hill, and marks the ſlumbering Connal. The leaves whirl round with the wind, and ſtrew the grave of the dead.

At

At times are ſeen here the ghoſts of the deceaſed, when the muſing hunter alone ſtalks ſlowly over the heath.

Who can reach the ſource of thy race, O Connal? and who recount thy fathers? Thy family grew like an oak on the mountain, which meeteth the wind with its lofty head. But now it is torn from the earth. Who ſhall ſupply the place of Connal? Here was the din of arms? and here the groans of the dying. Bloody are the wars of Fingal! O Connal! it was here thou didſt fall. Thine arm was like a ſtorm; thy ſword a beam of the ſky; thy height, a rock on the plain; thine eyes, a furnace of fire. Louder than a ſtorm was thy voice, in the battles of thy ſteel. Warriors fell by thy ſword, as the thiſtle by the ſtaff of a boy. Dargo the mighty came on, like a cloud of thunder. His brows were contracted and dark. His eyes like two caves in a rock. Bright roſe their ſwords on each ſide; dire was the clang of their ſteel.

The daughter of Rinval was near; Crimora bright in the armour of man; her yellow hair is looſe behind, her bow is in her hand. She followed the youth to the war, Connal her much-beloved. She drew the ſtring on Dargo; but erring pierced her Connal. He falls like an oak on the plain plain; like a rock from the ſhaggy hill. What ſhall ſhe do, hapleſs maid? He bleeds; her Connal dies. All the night long ſhe cries, and all the day, "O Connal, my love, and my friend?" With grief the ſad mourner dies. Earth here incloſes the lovelieſt pair on the hill. The graſs grows between the ſtones of the tomb; I often ſit in the mournful ſhade. The winds ſigh through the graſs; their memory ruſhes on my mind. Undiſturbed you now ſleep together; in the tomb of the mountain you reſt alone.

"And ſoft be your reſt," ſaid Utha, "children of ſtreamy Lotha. I will remember you with tears, and my ſecret ſong ſhall riſe; when the wind is in the groves of Tora, and the ſtream is roaring near. Then ſhall ye come on my ſoul, with all your lovely grief."

Three days feaſted the kings: on the fourth their white ſails aroſe. The winds of the north carry the ſhip of Fingal to Morven's woody land. But the ſpirit of Loda ſat, in his cloud, behind the ſhips of Frothal. He hung forward with all his blaſts, and ſpread the white-boſomed ſails. The wounds of his form were not forgot; he ſtill feared [y] the hand of the king.

NOTES

CARRIC-THURA.

[a] The ſong of Ullin, with which the poem opens, is in a lyric meaſure. It was uſual with Fingal, when he returned from his expeditions, to ſend his bards ſinging before him. This ſpecies of triumph is called, by Oſſian, the ſong of victory.

[b] Oſſian has celebrated the ſtrife of Crona, in a particular poem. This poem is connected with it, but it was impoſſible for the tranſlator to procure that part which relates to Crona, with any degree of purity.

[c] One ſhould think that the parts of Shilric and Vinvela were repreſented by Cronnan and Minona, whoſe very names denote that they were ſingers, who performed in public. Cronnan ſignifies a mournful ſound; Minona, or Min-onn, ſoft air. All the dramatic poems of Oſſian appear to have been preſented before Fingal, upon ſolemn occaſions.

[d] Bran, or Branno, ſignifies a mountain ſtream; it is here ſome river known by that name, in the days of Oſſian. There are ſeveral ſmall rivers in the north of Scotland, ſtill retaining the name of Bran; in particular one which falls into the Tay, at Dunkeld.

[e] Bhin-bheul, a woman with a melodious voice. Bh in the Gallic Language has the ſame ſound with the v in Engliſh.

[h] The

[h] The diſtinction, which the ancient Scots made between good and bad ſpirits, was, that the former appeared ſometimes in the day time in lonely unfrequented places, but the latter ſeldom but by night, and always in a diſmal gloomy ſcene.

[i] The circle of Loda is ſuppoſed to be a place of worſhip among the Scandinavians, as the ſpirit of Loda is thought to be the ſame with their god Odin.

[k] He is deſcribed, in a ſimile, in the poem concerning the death of Cuchullin.

[l] The famous ſword of Fingal, made by Lun, or Luno, a ſmith of Lochlin.

[m] Annir was alſo the father of Erragon, who was killed after the death of his brother Frothal. The death of Erragon is the ſubject of the battle of Lora, a poem in this collection.

[n] That is, after the death of Annir. To erect the ſtone of one's fame, was, in other words, to ſay that the perſon was dead.

[o] Honourable terms of peace.

[p] By the daughter of Iniſtore, Frothal means Comala, of whoſe death Utha probably had not heard; conſequently ſhe feared that the former paſſion of Frothal for Comala might return.

[q] Frothal and Utha.

[r] There is a propriety in introducing this epiſode, as the ſituation of Crimora and Utha were ſo ſimilar.

[s] Lotha was the ancient name of one of the great rivers in the north of Scotland. The only one of them that ſtill retains a name of a like ſound is Lochy, in Inverneſsſhire; but whether it is the river mentioned here, the tranſlator will not pretend to ſay.

[t] Cri-

[u] Perhaps the Carril mentioned here is the ſame with Carril the ſon of Kinſena, Cuchullin's bard. The name itſelf is proper to any bard, as it ſignifies a ſprightly and harmonious ſound.

[x] Connal, the ſon of Diaran, was one of the moſt famous heroes of Fingal; he was ſlain in a battle againſt Dargo, a Briton; but whether by the hand of the enemy, or that of his miſtreſs, tradition does not determine.

[y] The ſtory of Fingal, and the ſpirit of Loda, ſuppoſed to be the famous Odin, is the moſt extravagant fiction in all Oſſian's poems. It is not, however, without precedents in the beſt poets; and it muſt be ſaid for Oſſian, that he ſays nothing but what perfectly agreed with the notions of the times, concerning ghoſts. They thought the ſouls of the dead were material, and conſequently ſuſceptible of pain. Whether a proof could be drawn from this paſſage, that Oſſian had no notion of a divinity, I ſhall leave to others to determine: it appears, however, that he was of opinion, that ſuperior beings ought to take no notice of what paſſed among men.

SONGS OF SELMA.

THE ARGUMENT.

This poem fixes the antiquity of a cuſtom, which is well known to have prevailed afterwards, in the north of Scotland, and in Ireland. The bards, at an annual feaſt, provided by the king or chief, repeated their poems, and ſuch of them as were thought, by him, worthy of being preſerved, were carefully taught to their children, in order to have them tranſmitted to poſterity. It was one of thoſe occaſions that afforded the ſubject of the preſent poem to Oſſian. It is called in the original, The Songs of Selma, which title it was thought proper to adopt in the tranſlation.

The poem is entirely lyric, and has great variety of verſification. The addreſs to the evening ſtar, with which it opens, has, in the original, all the harmony that numbers could give it; flowing down with all that tranquillity and ſoftneſs, which the ſcene deſcribed naturally inſpires.

STAR of the deſcending night! fair is thy light in the weſt! thou lifteſt thy unſhorn head from thy cloud: thy ſteps are ſtately on thy hill. What doſt thou behold in the plain? The ſtormy winds are laid. The murmur of the torrent comes from afar. Roaring waves climb the diſtant rock. The flies of evening are on their feeble wings, and the the hum of their courſe is on the field. What doſt thou behold, fair light? But thou doſt ſmile and depart. The waves come with joy around thee, and bathe thy lovely hair. Farewel, thou ſilent beam! Let the light of Oſſian's ſoul ariſe.

And it does ariſe in its ſtrength! I behold my departed friends. Their gathering is on Lora, as in the days that are paſt. Fingal comes like a watry column of miſt: his heroes are around. And ſee the bards of the ſong, gray-haired Ullin; ſtately Ryno; Alpin,[a] with the tuneful voice, and the ſoft complaint of Minona! How are ye changed, my friends, ſince the days of Selma's feaſt! when we contended, like the gales of the ſpring, that, flying over the hill, by turns bend the feebly whiſtling graſs.

Minona then came forth in her beauty; with down-caſt look and tearful eye; her hair flew ſlowly on the blaſt that ruſhed unfrequent from the hill. The ſouls of the heroes were ſad when ſhe raiſed the tuneful voice; for often had they ſeen the grave of Salgar,[b] and the dark dwelling of white-boſomed Colma.[c] Colma left alone on the hill, with all her voice of muſic! Salgar promiſed to come: but the night deſcended round. Hear the voice of Colma, when ſhe ſat alone on the hill!

Colma. It is night; I am alone, forlorn on the hill of ſtorms. The wind is heard in the mountain. The torrent ſhrieks down the rock. No hut receives me from the rain; forlorn on the hill of winds.

Riſe, moon! from behind thy clouds; ſtars of the night appear! Lead me, ſome light, to the place where my love reſts from the toil of the chaſe! his bow near him, unſtrung; his dogs panting around him. But here I muſt ſit alone, by the rock of the moſſy ſtream. The ſtream and the wind roar; nor can I hear the voice of my love. Why delays my Salgar, why the ſon of the hill, his promiſe? Here is the rock, and the tree; and here the roaring ſtream. Thou didſt promiſe with night to be here. Ah! whither is my Salgar gone? With thee would I fly, my father; with thee, my brother of pride. Our race have long been foes; but we are not foes, O Salgar!

Ceaſe a little while, O wind! ſtream, be thou ſilent a while! let my voice be heard over the heath; let my wanderer hear me. Salgar! it is I who call. Here is the tree, and the rock. Salgar, my love! I am here. Why delayeſt thou thy coming? Lo! the moon appeareth. The flood is bright in the vale. The rocks are gray on the face of the hill. But I ſee him not on the brow; his his dogs before him tell not that he is coming. Here I muſt ſit alone.

But who are theſe that lie beyond me on the heath? Are they my love and my brother? Speak to me, O my friends! they anſwer not. My ſoul is tormented with fears. Ah! they are dead. Their ſwords are red from the fight. O my brother! my brother! why haſt thou ſlain my Salgar? why, O Salgar! haſt thou ſlain my brother? Dear were ye both to me! what ſhall I ſay in your praiſe? Thou wert fair on the hill among thouſands; he was terrible in fight. Speak to me; hear my voice, ſons of my love! But alas! they are ſilent; ſilent forever! Cold are their breaſts of clay! Oh! from the rock of the hill: from the top of the windy mountain, ſpeak ye ghoſts of the dead! ſpeak, I will not be afraid. Whither are ye gone to reſt? In what cave of the hill ſhall I find you? No feeble voice is on the wind: no anſwer half-drowned in the ſtorms of the hill.

I ſit in my grief. I wait for morning in my tears. Rear the tomb, ye friends of the dead; but cloſe it not till Colma come. My life flies away like a dream: why ſhould I ſtay behind? Here ſhall I reſt with my friends, by the ſtream of the ſounding rock. When night comes on the hill; when the wind is on the heath; my ghoſt ſhall ſtand in the the wind, and mourn the death of my friends. The hunter ſhall hear from his booth. He ſhall fear but love my voice. For ſweet ſhall my voice be for my friends; for pleaſant were they both to me.

Such was thy ſong, Minona ſoftly-bluſhing maid of Torman. Our tears deſcended for Colma, and our ſouls were ſad. Ullin came with the harp, and gave the ſong of Alpin. The voice of Alpin was pleaſant: the ſoul of Ryno was a beam of fire. But they had reſted in the narrow houſe: and their voice was not heard in Selma. Ullin had returned one day from the chaſe, before the heroes fell. He heard their ſtrife on the hill; their ſong was ſoft but ſad. They mourned the fall of Morar, firſt of mortal men. His ſoul was like the ſoul of Fingal; his ſword like the ſword of Oſcar. But he fell, and his father mourned: his ſiſter's eyes were full of tears. Minona's eyes were full of tears, the ſiſter of car-borne Morar. She retired from the ſong of Ullin, like the moon in the weſt, when ſhe foreſees the ſhower, and hides her fair head in a cloud. I touched the harp, with Ullin; the ſong of mourning roſe.

Ryno. The wind and the rain are over: calm is the noon of day. The clouds are divided in heaven. Over the green hills flies the inconſtant ſun. Red through the ſtony vale comes down the ſtream of of the hill. Sweet are thy murmurs, O ſtream! but more ſweet is the voice I hear. It is the voice of Alpin, the ſon of ſong, mourning for the dead. Bent is the head of age, and red his tearful eye. Alpin, thou ſon of ſong, why alone on the ſilent hill? why complaineſt thou, as a blaſt in the wood; as a wave on the lonely ſhore!

Alpin. My tears, O Ryno! are for the dead; my voice, for the inhabitants of the grave. Tall thou art on the hill; fair among the ſons of the plain. But thou ſhalt fall like Morar;[d] and the mourner ſhall ſit on thy tomb. The hills ſhall know thee no more; thy bow ſhall lie in the hall, unſtrung.

Thou wert ſwift, O Morar! as a roe on the hill; terrible as a meteor of fire. Thy wrath was as the ſtorm. Thy ſword in battle, as lightning in the field. Thy voice was like a ſtream after rain; like thunder on diſtant hills. Many fell by thy arm; they were conſumed in the flames of thy wrath. But when thou didſt return from war, how peaceful was thy brow? Thy face was like the ſun after rain; like the moon in the ſilence of night; calm as the breaſt of the lake when the loud wind is laid.

Narrow is thy dwelling now; dark the place of thine abode. With three ſteps I compaſs thy grave, O thou who waſt ſo great before! Four ſtones, with with their heads of moſs, are the only memorial of thee. A tree with ſcarce a leaf, long graſs which whiſtles in the wind, mark to the hunter's eye the grave of the mighty Morar. Morar! thou art low indeed. Thou haſt no mother to mourn thee; no maid with her tears of love. Dead is ſhe that brought thee forth. Fallen is the daughter of Morglan.

Who on his ſtaff is this? who is this, whoſe head is white with age, whoſe eyes are red with tears, who quakes at every ſtep. It is thy father, O Morar! the father of no ſon but thee. He heard of thy fame in battle; he heard of foes diſperſed. He heard of Morar's fame; why did he not hear of his wound? Weep, thou father of Morar; weep; but thy ſon heareth thee not. Deep is the ſleep of the dead; low their pillow of duſt. No more ſhall he hear thy voice; no more ſhall he awake at thy call. When ſhall it be morn in the grave, to bid the ſlumberer awake? Farewel, thou braveſt of men! thou conqueror in the field! but the field ſhall ſee thee no more: nor the dark wood be lightened with the ſplendor of thy ſteel. Thou haſt left no ſon. But the ſong ſhall preſerve thy name. Future times ſhall hear of thee; they ſhall hear of the fallen Morar.

The

The grief of all aroſe, but moſt the burſting ſigh of Armin.[f] He remembers the death of his ſon, who fell in the days of his youth. Carmor[g] was near the hero, the chief of the echoing Galmal. Why burſts the ſigh of Armin, he ſaid? Is there a cauſe to mourn? The ſong comes, with its muſic, to melt and pleaſe the ſoul. It is like ſoft miſt, that, riſing from a lake, pours on the ſilent vale; the green flowers are filled with dew, but the ſun returns in his ſtrength, and the miſt is gone. Why art thou ſad, O Armin, chief of ſea-ſurrounded Gorma?

Sad! I am indeed: nor ſmall my cauſe of woe! Carmor, thou haſt loſt no ſon; thou haſt loſt no daughter of beauty. Colgar the valiant lives; and Annira faireſt maid. The boughs of thy family flouriſh, O Carmor! but Armin is the laſt of his race. Dark is thy bed, O Daura! and deep thy ſleep in the tomb. When ſhalt thou awake with thy ſongs? with all thy voice of muſic?

Ariſe, winds of autumn, ariſe; blow upon the dark heath! ſtreams of the mountains, roar! howl, ye tempeſts, in the top of the oak! walk through broken clouds, O moon! ſhow by intervals thy pale face! bring to my mind that ſad night, when all my children fell; when Arindal the mighty fell; when Daura the lovely failed. Daura, my daughter!

thou wert fair; fair as the moon on the hills of Fura;[h] white as the driven ſnow; ſweet as the breathing gale. Arindal, thy bow was ſtrong, thy ſpear was ſwift in the field: thy look was like miſt on the wave; thy ſhield, a red cloud in a ſtorm. Armar, renowned in war, came, and ſought Daura's love; he was not long denied; fair was the hope of their friends.

Erath, ſon of Odgal, repined; for his brother was ſlain by Armar. He came diſguiſed like a ſon of the ſea: fair was his ſkiff on the wave; white his locks of age; calm his ſerious brow. Faireſt of women, he ſaid, lovely daughter of Armin! a rock not diſtant in the ſea, bears a tree on its ſide; red ſhines the fruit afar. There Armar waits for Daura. I came to carry his love along the rolling ſea. She went; and ſhe called on Armar. Nought anſwered, but the ſon[i] of the rock. Armar, my love! my love! why tormenteſt thou me with fear? hear, ſon of Ardnart, hear: it is Daura who calleth thee! Erath the traitor fled laughing to the land. She lifted up her voice, and cried for her brother and her father. Arindal! Armin! none to relieve your Daura.

Her voice came over the ſea. Arindal my ſon deſcended from the hill: rough in the ſpoils of the chaſe. His arrows rattled by his ſide; his bow was in his hand: five dark gray dogs attended his ſteps. He ſaw fierce Erath on the ſhore: he ſeized and bound him to an oak. Thick bend the thongs [k] of the hide around his limbs; he loads the wind with his groans. Arindal aſcends the wave in his boat, to bring Daura to land. Armar came in his wrath, and let fly the gray-feathered ſhaft. It ſunk; it ſunk in thy heart. O Arindal my ſon! for Erath the traitor thou diedſt. The oar is ſtopped at once; he panted on the rock and expired. What is thy grief, O Daura, when round thy feet is poured thy brother's blood. The boat is broken in twain by the waves. Armar plunges into the ſea, to reſcue his Daura, or die. Sudden a blaſt from the hill comes over the waves. He ſunk, and he roſe no more.

Alone, on the ſea-beat rock, my daughter was heard to complain. Frequent and loud were her cries; nor could her father relieve her. All night I ſtood on the ſhore. I ſaw her by the faint beam of the moon. All night I heard her cries. Loud was the wind; and the rain beat hard on the ſide of the mountain. Before morning appeared, her voice was weak. It died away, like the evening-breeze among the graſs of the rocks. Spent with grief ſhe expired. And left thee Armin alone, gone is my ſtrength in the war, and fallen my pride among women. When the ſtorms of the mountain come; when the north lifts the waves on high; I ſit by the ſounding ſhore, and look on the fatal rock. Often by the ſetting moon I ſee the ghoſts of my children. Half-viewleſs, they walk in mournful conference together. Will none of you ſpeak in pity? They do not regard their father. I am ſad, O Carmor, nor ſmall is my cauſe of woe!

Such were the words of the bards in the days of ſong; when the king heard the muſic of harps, and the tales of other times. The chiefs gathered from all their hills, and heard the lovely ſound. They praiſed the voice[1] of Cona! the firſt among a thouſand bards. But age is now on my tongue; and my ſoul has failed. I hear, ſometimes, the ghoſts of bards, and learn their pleaſant ſong. But memory fails in my mind; I hear the call of years. They ſay, as they paſs along, why does Oſſian ſing? Soon ſhall he lie in the narrow houſe, and no bard ſhall raiſe his fame. Roll on, ye dark-brown years, for you bring no joy on your courſe. Let the tomb open to Oſſian, for his ſtrength has failed. The ſons of ſong are gone to reſt: my voice remains, like a blaſt, that roars, lonely, on a ſea-ſurrounded rock, after the winds are laid. The dark moſs whiſtles there, and the diſtant mariner ſees the waving trees.

THE SONGS OF SELMA.

[a] Alpin is from the ſame root with Albion, or rather Albin, the ancient name of Britain; Alp, high in land, or country. The preſent name of our iſland has its origin in the Celtic tongue; ſo that thoſe who derived it from any other, betrayed their ignorance of the ancient language of our country. Britain comes from Breac't in, variegated iſland, ſo called from the face of the country, from the natives painting themſelves, or from their party-coloured clothes.

[c] Cul-math, a woman with fine hair.

[f] Armin, a hero. He was chief, or petty king of Gorma, i. e. the blue iſland; ſuppoſed to be one of the Hebrides.

[h] Fuar-a, cold iſland.

[i] By the ſon of the rock, the poet means the echoing back of the human voice from a rock. The vulgar were of opinion, that this repetition of ſound was made by a ſpirit within the rock; and they, on that account, called it mac-talla; the ſon who dwells in the rock.

[k] The poet here only means that Erath was bound with leathern thongs.

CALTHON AND COLMAL:

A POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

This piece, as many more of Oſſian's compoſitions, is addreſſed to one of the firſt Chriſtian miſſionaries. The ſtory of the poem is handed down, by tradition, thus: In the country of the Britons between the walls, two chiefs lived in the days of Fingal, Dunthalmo, lord of Teutha, ſuppoſed to be the Tweed; and Rathmor, who dwelt at Clutha, well known to be the river Clyde. Rathmor was not more renowned for his generoſity and hoſpitality, than Dunthalmo was infamous for his cruelty and ambition. Dunthalmo, through envy, or on account of ſome private feuds, which ſubſiſted between the families, murdered Rathmor at a feaſt; but being afterwards touched with remorſe, he educated the two ſons of Rathmor, Calthon and Colmar, in his own houſe. They growing up to man's eſtate, dropped ſome hints that they intended to revenge the death of their father, upon which Dunthalmo ſhut them up in two caves on the banks of Teutha, intending to take them off privately. Colmal, the daughter of Dunthalmo, who was ſecretly in love with Calthon, helped him to make his eſcape from priſon, and fled with him to Fingal, diſguiſed in the habit of a young warrior, and implored his aid againſt Dunthalmo. Fingal ſent Oſſian with three hundred men, to Colmar's relief. Dunthalmo having previouſly murdered Colmar, came to a battle with Oſſian; but he was killed by that hero, and his army totally defeated.

Calthon

Calthon married Colmal, his deliverer; and Oſſian returned to Morven.

PLEASANT is the voice of thy ſong, thou lonely dweller of the rock. It comes on the ſound of the ſtream, along the narrow vale. My ſoul awakes, O ſtranger! in the midſt of my hall. I ſtretch my hand to the ſpear, as in the days of other years. I ſtretch my hand, but it is feeble; and the ſigh of my boſom grows. Wilt thou not liſten, ſon of the rock, to the ſong of Oſſian? My ſoul is full of other times; the joy of my youth returns. Thus the ſun appears in the weſt, after the ſteps of his brightneſs have moved behind a ſtorm; the green hills lift their dewy heads: the blue ſtreams rejoice in the vale. The aged hero comes forth on his ſtaff, and his gray hair glitters in the beam. Doſt thou not behold, ſon of the rock, a ſhield in Oſſian's hall? It is marked with the ſtrokes of battle; and the brightneſs of its boſſes has failed. That ſhield the great Dunthalmo bore, the chief of ſtreamy Teutha. Dunthalmo bore it in battle, before he fell by Oſſian's ſpear. Liſten ſon of the rock, to the tale of other years.

Rathmor was a chief of Clutha. The feeble dwelt in his hall. The gates of Rathmor were never cloſed; his feaſt was always ſpread. The ſons of the ſtranger came, and bleſſed the generous chief of of Clutha. Bards raiſed the ſong, and touched the harp: and joy brightened on the face of the mournful. Dunthalmo came, in his pride, and ruſhed into the combat of Rathmor. The chief of Clutha overcame; the rage of Dunthalmo roſe. He came, by night, with his warriors; and the mighty Rathmor fell. He fell in his halls, where his feaſt was often ſpread for ſtrangers.

Colmar and Calthon were young, the ſons of car-borne Rathmor. They came, in the joy of youth, into their father's hall. They behold him in his blood, and their burſting tears deſcend. The ſoul of Dunthalmo melted, when he ſaw the children of youth; he brought them to Alteutha's [a] walls; they grew in the houſe of their foe. They bent the bow in his preſence; and came forth to his battles. They ſaw the fallen walls of their fathers; they ſaw the green thorn in the hall. Their tears deſcended in ſecret; and, at times, their faces were mournful. Dunthalmo beheld their grief: his darkening ſoul deſigned their death. He cloſed them in two caves, on the echoing banks of Teutha. The ſun did not come there with his beams; nor the moon of heaven by night. The ſons of Rathmor remained in darkneſs, and foreſaw their death.

The daughter of Dunthalmo wept in ſilence, the fair-haired, blue-eyed Colmal. [b] Her eye had rolled in ſecret on Calthon; his lovelineſs ſwelled in her ſoul. She trembled for her warrior; but what could Colmal do? Her arm could not lift the ſpear; nor was the ſword formed for her ſide. Her white breaſt never roſe beneath a mail. Neither was her eye the terror of heroes. What canſt thou do, O Colmal! for the falling chief? Her ſteps are unequal; her hair is looſe: her eye looks wildly through her tears. She came, by night, to the hall [c]; and armed her lovely form in ſteel; the ſteel of a young warrior, who fell in the firſt of his battles. She came to the cave of Calthon, and looſed the thong from his hands.

"Ariſe, ſon of Rathmor," ſhe ſaid, "ariſe, the night is dark. Let us fly to the king of Selma [d], chief of fallen Clutha! I am the ſon of Lamgal, who dwelt in thy father's hall. I heard of thy dark dwelling in the cave, and my ſoul aroſe. Ariſe, ſon of Rathmor, for the night is dark." "Bleſt voice!" replied the chief, "comeſt thou from the darkly-rolling clouds? for often the ghoſts of his fathers deſcended to Calthon's dreams, ſince the ſun has retired from his eyes, and darkneſs has dwelt around him. Or art thou the ſon of Lamgal, the chief I often ſaw in Clutha? But ſhall I fly to Fingal and Colmar my brother low? ſhall I fly to Morven, and the hero cloſed in night?

No: give me that ſpear, ſon of Lamgal, Calthon will defend his brother."

"A thouſand warriors," replied the maid, "ſtretch their ſpears round car-borne Colmar. What can Calthon do againſt a hoſt ſo great? Let us fly to the king of Morven, he will come with battle. His arm is ſtretched forth to the unhappy; the lightning of his ſword is round the weak. Ariſe, thou ſon of Rathmor; the ſhades of night will fly away. Dunthalma will behold thy ſteps on the field, and thou muſt fall in thy youth."

The ſighing hero roſe; his tears deſcend for car-borne Colmar. He came with the maid to Selma's hall; but he knew not that it was Colmal. The helmet covered her lovely face; and her breaſt roſe beneath the ſteel. Fingal returned from the chaſe, and found the lovely ſtrangers. They were like two beams of light, in the midſt of the hall. The king heard the tale of grief; and turned his eyes around. A thouſand heroes half-roſe before him; claiming the war of Teutha. I came with my ſpear from the hill, and the joy of battle roſe in my breaſt: for the king ſpoke to Oſſian in the midſt of the people.

"Son of my ſtrength," he ſaid, "take the ſpear of Fingal; go to Teutha's mighty ſtream, and ſave the car-borne Colmar. Let thy fame return before fore thee like a pleaſant gale; that my ſoul may rejoice over my ſon, who renews the renown of our fathers. Oſſian! be thou a ſtorm in battle; but mild when the foes are low! It was thus my fame aroſe, O my ſon; and be thou like Selma's chief. When the haughty come to my halls, my eyes behold them not. But my arm is ſtretched forth to the unhappy. My ſword defends the weak."

I rejoiced in the words of the king: and took my rattling arms. Diaran [e] roſe at my ſide, and Dargo [f] king of ſpears. Three hundred youths followed our ſteps: the lovely ſtrangers were at my ſide. Dunthalmo heard the ſound of our approach; he gathered the ſtrength of Teutha. He ſtood on a hill with his hoſt; they were like rocks broken with thunder, when their bent trees are ſinged and bare, and the ſtreams of their chinks have failed.

The ſtream of Teutha rolled, in its pride, before the gloomy foe. I ſent a bard to Dunthalmo, to offer the combat on the plain; but he ſmiled in the darkneſs of his pride. His unſettled hoſt moved on the hill; like the mountain cloud, when the blaſt has entered its womb, and ſcatters the curling gloom on every ſide.

They brought Colmar to Teutha's bank, bound with a thouſand thongs. The chief is ſad, but lovely, and his eye is on his friends; for we ſtood, in our arms, on the oppoſite bank of Teutha. Dunthalmo came with his ſpear, and pierced the hero's ſide: he rolled on the bank in his blood, and we heard his broken ſighs.

Calthon ruſhed into the ſtream: I bounded forward on my ſpear. Teutha's race fell before us. Night came rolling down. Dunthalmo reſted on a rock, amidſt an aged wood. The rage of his boſom burned againſt the car-borne Calthon. But Calthon ſtood in his grief; he mourned the fallen Colmar; Colmar ſlain in youth, before his fame aroſe.

I bade the ſong of woe to riſe, to ſoothe the mourn ful chief; but he ſtood beneath a tree, and often threw his ſpear on the earth. The humid eye of Colmal rolled near in a ſecret tear: ſhe foreſaw the fall of Dunthalmo, or of Clutha's battling chief.

Now half the night had paſſed away. Silence and darkneſs were on the field; ſleep reſted on the eyes of the heroes: Calthon's ſettling ſoul was ſtill. His eyes were half-cloſed; but the murmur of Teutha had not yet failed in his ear. Pale, and ſhewing his wounds, the ghoſt of Colmar came: he bended his head over the hero, and raiſed his feeble voice:

"Sleeps

"Sleeps the ſon of Rathmor in his might, and his brother low? Did we not riſe to the chaſe together, and purſue the dark-brown hinds? Colmar was not forgot till he fell; till death had blaſted his youth. I lie pale beneath the rock of Lona. O let Calthon riſe! the morning comes with its beams; and Dunthalmo will diſhonour the fallen." He paſſed away in his blaſt. The riſing Calthon ſaw the ſteps of his departure. He ruſhed in the ſound of his ſteel; and unhappy Colmal roſe. She followed her hero through night, and dragged her ſpear behind. But when Calthon came to Lona's rock, he found his fallen brother. The rage of his boſom roſe, and he ruſhed among the foe. The groans of death aſcend. They cloſe around the chief. He is bound in the midſt, and brought to gloomy Dunthalmo. The ſhout of joy aroſe; and the hills of night replied.

I ſtarted at the ſound: and took my father's ſpear. Duran roſe at my ſide; and the youthful ſtrength of Dargo. We miſſed the chief of Clutha, and our ſouls were ſad. I dreaded the departure of my fame; the pride of my valour roſe. "Sons of Morven," I ſaid, "it is not thus our fathers fought. They reſted not on the field of ſtrangers, when the foe did not fall before them. Their ſtrength was like the eagles of heaven; their renown is in the ſong. But our people fall by degrees, and our fame begins to depart. What ſhall the king of Morven ſay, if Oſſian conquers not at Teutha? Riſe in your ſteel, ye warriors, and follow the ſound of Oſſian's courſe. He will not return, but renowned, to the echoing walls of Selma."

Morning roſe on the blue waters of Teutha; Colmal ſtood before me in tears. She told of the chief of Clutha: and thrice the ſpear fell from her hand. My wrath turned againſt the ſtranger; for my ſoul trembled for Calthon. "Son of the feeble hand," I ſaid, "do Teutha's warriors fight with tears! The battle is not won with grief; nor dwells the ſigh in the ſoul of war. Go to the deer of Carmun, or the lowing herds of Teutha. But leave theſe arms, thou ſon of fear: a warriour may lift them in battle."

I tore the mail from her ſhoulders. Her ſnow breaſt appeared. She bent her red face to the ground. I looked in ſilence to the chiefs. The ſpear fell from my hand; and the ſigh of my boſom roſe. But when I heard the name of the maid, my crowding tears deſcended. I bleſſed the lovely beam of youth, and bade the battle move.

Why, ſon of the rock, ſhould Oſſian tell how Teutha's warriors died? They are now forgot in their their land; and their tombs are now found on the heath. Years came on with their tempeſts; and the green mounds mouldered away. Scarce is the grave of Dunthalmo ſeen, or the place where he fell by the ſpear of Oſſian. Some gray warrior, half blind with age, ſitting by night at the flaming oak of the hall, tells now my actions to his ſons, and the fall of the dark Dunthalmo. The faces of youth bend ſidelong towards his voice; ſurpriſe and joy burn in their eyes.

I found the ſon [g] of Rathmor bound to an oak; my ſword cut the thongs from his hands. And I gave him the white-boſomed Colmal. They dwelt in the halls of Teutha; and Oſſian returned to Selma.

CALTHON AND COLMAL.

[a] Al-teutha, or rather Balteutha, the town of Tweed, the name of Dunthalmo's ſeat. It is obſervable, that all the names in this poem, are derived from the Gallic language; which, as I have remarked in a preceding note, is a proof that it was once the univerſal language of the whole iſland.

[b] Coal-

[b] Caol-mhai, a woman with ſmall eye-brows; ſmall eye-brows were a diſtinguiſhing part of beauty in Oſſian's time: and he ſeldom fails to give them to the fine women of his poems.

[c] That is, the hall where the arms taken from enemies were hung up as trophies. Oſſian is very careful to make his ſtories probable; for he makes Colmal put on the arms of a youth killed in his firſt battle, as more proper for a young woman, who cannot be ſuppoſed ſtrong enough to carry the armour of a full grown warrior.

[e] Diaran, father of that Connal who was unfortunately killed by Crimora, his miſtreſs.

[f] Dargo, the ſon of Collath, is celebrated in other poems by Oſſian. He is ſaid to have been killed by a boar at a hunting party. The lamentation of his miſtreſs, or wife, Mingala, over his body, is extant; but whether it is of Oſſian's compoſition, I cannot determine. It is generally aſcribed to him, and has much of his manner; but ſome traditions mention it as an imitation by ſome later bard. As it has ſome poetical merit, I have ſubjoined it.

"THE ſpouſe of Dargo came in tears: for Dargo was no more! The heroes ſigh over Lartho's chief: and what ſhall ſad Mingala do? The dark ſoul vaniſhed like morning miſt, before the king of ſpears: but the generous glowed in his preſence like the morning ſtar.

Who was the faireſt and moſt lovely? who but Collath's ſtately ſon? Who ſat in the midſt of the wiſe, but Dargo of the mighty deeds?

Thy hand touched the trembling harp: Thy voice was ſoft as ſummer winds. Ah me! what ſhall the heroes ſay? for for Dargo fell before a boar Pale is the lovely cheek; the look of which was firm in danger! Why haſt thou failed on our hills, thou fairer than the beams of the ſun?

The daughter of Adonſion was lovely in the eyes of the valiant; ſhe was lovely in their eyes, but ſhe choſe to be the ſpouſe of Dargo.

But thou art alone, Mingala! the night is coming with its clouds; where is the bed of thy repoſe? Where but in the tomb of Dargo?

Why doſt thou lift the ſtone, O bard! why doſt thou ſhut the narrow houſe? Mingala's eyes are heavy, bard! She muſt ſleep with Dargo.

Laſt night I heard the ſong of joy in Lartho's lofty hall. But ſilence now dwells around my bed. Mingala reſts with Dargo.

[g] Calthon.

LATHMON:

A POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

Lathmon, a Britiſh prince, taking advantage of Fingal's abſence in Ireland, made a deſcent on Morven, and advanced within ſight of Selma the royal palace. Fingal arrived in the mean time, and Lathmor retreated to a hill, where his army was ſurpriſed by night, and himſelf taken priſoner by Oſſian and Gaul the ſon of Morni. This exploit of Gaul and Oſſian bears a near reſemblance to the beautiful epiſode of Niſus and Euryalus in Virgil's ninth Æneid. The poem opens, with the firſt appearance of Fingal on the coaſt of Morven, and ends, it may be ſuppoſed, about noon the next day.

SELMA, thy halls are ſilent. There is no ſound in the woods of Morven. The wave tumbles alone on the coaſt. The ſilent beam of the ſun is on the field. The daughters of Morven come forth, like the bow of the ſhower; they look towards green Ullin for the white ſails of the king. He had promiſed to return, but the winds of the north aroſe.

Who pours from the eaſtern hill, like a ſtream of darkneſs? It is the hoſt of Lathmon. He has heard of the abſence of Fingal. He truſts in the wir wind of the north. His ſoul brightens with joy. Why doſt thou come, Lathmon? The mighty are not in Selma. Why comeſt thou with thy forward ſpear? Will the daughters of Morven fight? But ſtop, O mighty ſtream, in thy courſe! Does not Lathmon behold theſe ſails? Why doſt thou vaniſh, Lathmon, like the miſt of the lake? But the ſqually ſtorm is behind thee; Fingal purſues thy ſteps!

The king of Morven ſtarted from ſleep, as we rolled on the dark-blue wave. He ſtretched his hand to his ſpear, and his heroes roſe around. We knew that he had ſeen his fathers, for they often deſcended to his dreams, when the ſword of the foe roſe over the land; and the battle darkened before us. "Whither haſt thou fled, O wind," ſaid the king of Morven? "Doſt thou ruſtle in the chambers of the ſouth, and purſue the ſhower in other lands? Why doſt thou not come to my ſails? to the blue face of my ſeas? The foe is in the land of Morven, and the king is abſent. But let each bind on his mail, and each aſſume his ſhield. Stretch every ſpear over the wave; let every ſword be unſheathed. Lathmon [a] is before us with his hoſt: he that fled [b] from Fingal on the plains of Lona. But he returns, like a collected ſtream, and his roar is between our hills."

Such were the words of Fingal. We ruſhed into Carmona's bay. Oſſian aſcended the hill; and thrice ſtruck his boſſy ſhield. The rock of Morven replied; and the bounding roes came forth. The foes were troubled in my preſence: and collected their darkened hoſt; for I ſtood, like a cloud on the hill, rejoicing in the arms of my youth.

Morni [c] ſat beneath a tree, at the roaring waters of Strumon: [d] his locks of age are gray: he leans forward on his ſtaff; young Gaul is near the hero, hearing the battles of his youth. Often did he riſe, in the fire of his ſoul, at the mighty deeds of Morni. The aged heard the ſound of Oſſian's ſhield: he knew the ſign of battle. He ſtarted at once from his place. His gray hair parted on his back. He remembers the actions of other years."

"My ſon," he ſaid to fair-haired Gaul, "I hear the ſound of battle. The king of Morven is returned, the ſign of war is heard. Go to the halls of Strumon, and bring his arms to Morni. Bring the arms which my father wore in his age, for my arm begins to fail. Take thou thy armour, O Gaul; and ruſh to the firſt of thy battles. Let thine arm reach to the renown of thy fathers. Be thy courſe in the field, like the eagle's wing. Why ſhouldſt thou fear death, my ſon! the valiant fall with fame; their ſhields turn the dark ſtream of danger danger away, and renown dwells on their gray hairs. Doſt thou not ſee, O Gaul, how the ſteps of my age are honoured? Morni moves forth, and the young meet him, with reverence, and turn their eyes, with ſilent joy, on his courſe. But I never fled from danger, my ſon! my ſword lightened through the darkneſs of battle. The ſtranger melted before me; the mighty were blaſted in my preſence."

Gaul brought the arms to Morni: the aged warrior covered himſelf with ſteel. He took the ſpear in his hand, which was often ſtained with the blood of the valiant. He came towards Fingal, his ſon attended his ſteps. The ſon of Comhal rejoiced over the warrior, when he came in the locks of his age.

"King of the roaring Strumon!" ſaid the riſing joy of Fingal; "do I behold thee in arms, after thy ſtrength has failed? Often has Morni ſhone in battles, like the beam of the riſing ſun; when he diſperſes the ſtorms of the hill, and brings peace to the glittering fields. But why didſt thou not reſt in thine age? Thy renown is in the ſong. The people behold thee, and bleſs the departure of mighty Morni. Why didſt thou not reſt in thine age? For the foe will vaniſh before Fingal."

"Son

"Son of Comhal," replied the chief, "the ſtrength of Morni's arm has failed. I attempt to draw the ſword of my youth, but it remains in its place. I throw the ſpear, but it falls ſhort of the mark; and I feel the weight of my ſhield. We decay like the graſs of the mountain, and our ſtrength returns no more. I have a ſon, O Fingal, his ſoul has delighted in the actions of Morni's youth; but his ſword has not been lifted againſt the foe, neither has his fame begun. I come with him to battle; to direct his arm. His renown will be a ſun to my ſoul, in the dark hour of my departure. O that the name of Morni were forgot among the people! that the heroes would only ſay, Behold the father of Gaul."

"King of Strumon," Fingal replied, "Gaul ſhall lift the ſword in battle. But he ſhall lift it before Fingal; my arm ſhall defend his youth. But reſt thou in the halls of Selma; and hear of our renown. Bid the harp be ſtrung; and the voice of the bard ariſe, that thoſe who fall may rejoice in their fame; and the ſoul of Morni brighten with gladneſs. Oſſian! thou haſt fought in battles: the blood of ſtrangers is on thy ſpear: let thy courſe be with Gaul in the ſtrife; but depart not from the ſide of Fingal; leſt the foe find you alone; and your fame fail at once."

I ſaw

I saw[e] Gaul in his arms, and my soul was mixed with his: for the fire of the battle was in his eyes! he looked to the foe with joy. We spoke the words of friendship in secret; and the lightning of our swords poured together; for we drew them behind the wood, and tried the strength of our arms on the empty air.

Night came down on Morven. Fingal sat at the beam of the oak. Morni sat by his side with all his gray waving locks. Their discourse is of other times, and the actions of their fathers. Three bards, at times, touched the harp; and Ullin was near with his song. He sung of the mighty Comhal; but darkness gathered[f] on Morni's brow. He rolled his red eye on Ullin; and the song of the bard ceased. Fingal observed the aged hero, and he mildly spoke.

"Chief of Strumon, why that darkness? Let the days of other years be forgot. Our father's contended in battle; but we meet together, at the feast. Our swords are turned on the foes, and they melt before us on the field. Let the days of our fathers be forgot, king of mossy Strumon."

"King of Morven," replied the chief, I remember thy father with joy He was terrible in battle; the rage of the chief was deadly. My eyes were full of tears, when the king of heroes fell. The valiant valiant fall, O Fingal, and the feeble remain on the hills. How many heroes have paſſed away, in the days of Morni! And I did not ſhun the battle; neither did I fly from the ſtrife of the valiant. Now let the friends of Fingal reſt; for night is around; that they may riſe, with ſtrength, to battle againſt car-borne Lathmon. I hear the ſound of his hoſt, like thunder heard on a diſtant heath. Oſſian! and fair-haired Gaul! ye are ſwift in the race. Obſerve the foes of Fingal from that woody hill. But approach them not, your fathers are not near to ſhield you. Let not your fame fall at once. The valour of youth may fail."

We heard the words of the chief with joy, and moved in the clang of our arms. Our ſteps are on the woody hill. Heaven burns with all its ſtars. The meteors of death fly over the field. The diſtant noiſe of the foe reached our ears. It was then Gaul ſpoke, in his valour; his hand half-unſheathed the ſword.

"Son of Fingal," he ſaid, "why burns the ſoul of Gaul? my heart beats high. My ſteps are diſordered; and my hand trembles on my ſword. When I look towards the foe, my ſoul lightens before me, and I ſee their ſleeping hoſt. Tremble thus the ſouls of the valiant in battles of the ſpear? How would the ſoul of Morni riſe if we ſhould ruſh on the foe! Our renown would grow in the ſong; and our ſteps be ſtately in the eyes of the brave."

"Son of Morni," I replied, "my ſoul delights in battle. I delight to ſhine in battle alone, and to give my name to the bards. But what if the foe ſhould prevail; ſhall I behold the eyes of the king? They are terrible in his diſpleaſure, and like the flames of death. But I will not behold them in his wrath. Oſſian ſhall prevail or fall. But ſhall the fame of the vanquiſhed riſe? They paſs away like a ſhadow. But the fame of Oſſian ſhall riſe. His deeds ſhall be like his fathers. Let us ruſh in our arms; ſon of Morni, let us ruſh to battle. Gaul! if thou ſhalt return, go to Selma's lofty wall. Tell to Everallin that I fell with fame; carry this ſword to Branno's daughter. Let her give it to Oſcar, when the years of his youth ſhall ariſe."

"Son of Fingal," Gaul replied with a ſigh; "ſhall I return after Oſſian is low! What would my father ſay, and Fingal king of men? The feeble would turn their eyes and ſay, Behold the mighty Gaul who left his friend in his blood!" Ye ſhall not behold me, ye feeble, but in the midſt of my renown. Oſſian! I have heard from my father the mighty deeds of heroes; their mighty deeds when alone; for the ſoul increaſes in danger."

"Son of Morni," I replied and ſtrode before him on the heath, "our fathers ſhall praiſe our valour, when they mourn our fall. A beam of gladneſs ſhall riſe on their ſouls, when their eyes are full of tears. They will ſay, Our ſons have not fallen like the graſs of the field, for they ſpread death around them. But why ſhould we think of the narrow houſe? The ſword defends the valiant. But death purſues the flight of the feeble; and their renown is not heard."

We ruſhed forward through night; and came to the roar of a ſtream which bent its blue courſe round the foe, through trees that echoed to its noiſe; we came to the bank of the ſtream, and ſaw the ſleeping hoſt. Their fires were decayed on the plain: and the lonely ſteps of their ſcouts were diſtant far. I ſtretched my ſpear before me to ſupport my ſteps over the ſtream. But Gaul took my hand, and ſpoke the words of the valiant.

"Shall the ſon of Fingal ruſh on a ſleeping foe? Shall he come like a blaſt by night when it overturns the young trees in ſecret? Fingal did not thus receive his fame, nor dwells renown on the gray hairs of Morni, for actions like theſe. Strike Oſſian, ſtrike the ſhield of battle, and let thei thouſands riſe. Let them meet Gaul in his firſt battle, that he may try the ſtrength of his arm."

M

My ſoul rejoiced over the warrior, and my burſting tears deſcended. "And the foe ſhall meet Gaul," I ſaid: "the fame of Morni's ſon ſhall ariſe. But ruſh not too far, my hero: let the gleam of thy ſteel be near to Oſſian. Let our hands join in ſlaughter. Gaul! doſt thou not behold that rock? Its gray ſide dimly gleams to the ſtars. If the foe ſhall prevail, let our back be towards the rock. Then ſhall they fear to approach our ſpears; for death is in our hands."

I ſtruck thrice my echoing ſhield. The ſtarting foe aroſe. We ruſhed on in the ſound of our arms. Their crowded ſteps fly over the heath; for they thought that the mighty Fingal came; and the ſtrength of their arms withered away. The ſound of their flight was like that of flame, when it ruſhes through the blaſted groves. It was then the ſpear of Gaul flew in his ſtrength: it was then his ſword aroſe. Cremor fell; and mighty Leth. Dunthormo ſtruggled in his blood. The ſteel ruſhed through Crotha's ſide, as bent, he roſe on his ſpear; the black ſtream poured from the wound, and hiſſed on the half extinguiſhed oak. Cathmin ſaw the ſteps of the hero behind him, and aſcended a blaſted tree; but the ſpear pierced him from behind. Shrieking, panting, he fell; moſs and withered branches purſue his fall, and ſtrew the blue arms of Gaul.

Such were thy deeds, ſon of Morni, in the firſt day of thy battles. Nor ſlept the ſword by thy ſide, thou laſt of Fingal's race! Oſſian ruſhed forward in his ſtrength, and the people fell before him; as the graſs by the ſtaff of the boy, when he whiſtles along the field, and the gray beard of the thiſtle falls. But careleſs the youth moves on; his ſteps are towards the defart.

Gray morning roſe before us, the winding ſtreams are bright along the heath. The foe gathered on a hill; and the rage of Lathmon roſe. He bent the red eye of his wrath: he is ſilent in his riſing grief. He often ſtruck his boſſy ſhield; and his ſteps are unequal on the heath. I ſaw the diſtant darkneſs of the hero, and I ſpoke to Morni's ſon.

"Car-borne [g] chief of Strumon, doſt thou behold the foe? They gather on the hill in their wrath. Let our ſteps be towards the king [h]. He ſhall riſe in his ſtrength, and the hoſt of Lathmon vaniſh. Our fame is around us, warrior, the eyes of the aged [i] will rejoice. But let us fly, ſon of Morni, Lathmon deſcends the hill." "Then let our ſteps be ſlow," replied the fair-haired Gaul; "let the foe ſay with a ſmile, Behold the warriors of night, they are, like ghoſts, terrible in darkneſs, but they melt away before the beam of the eaſt. Oſſian, take the ſhield of Gormar who fell beneath thy ſpear, that the aged heroes may rejoice, when they ſhall behold the actions of their ſons."

Such were our words on the plain, when Sulmath [k] came to car-borne Lathmon: Sulmath chief of Dutha at the dark-rolling ſtream of Duvranna [l]. "Why doſt thou not ruſh, ſon of Nuath, with a thouſand of thy heroes? Why doſt thou not deſcend with thy hoſt, before the warriors fly? their blue arms are beaming to the riſing light, and their ſteps are before us on the heath."

"Son of the feeble hand," ſaid Lathmon, "ſhall my hoſt deſcend! They are but two, ſon of Dutha, and ſhall a thouſand lift their ſteel? Nuath would mourn, in his hall, for the departure of his fame. His eyes would turn from Lathmon, when the tread of his feet approached. Go thou to the heroes, chief of Dutha, for I behold the ſtately ſteps of Oſſian. His fame is worthy of my ſteel; let him fight with Lathmon."

The noble Sulmath came. I rejoiced in the words of the king. I raiſed the ſhield on my arm; and Gaul placed in my hand the ſword of Morni. We returned to the murmuring ſtream; Lathmon came in his ſtrength. His dark hoſt rolled, like the clouds, behind him: but the ſon of Nuath was bright in his ſteel.

"Son of Fingal," ſaid the hero, "thy fame has grown on our fall. How many lie there of my people by thy hand, thou king of men! Lift now thy ſpear againſt Lathmon; and lay the ſon of Nuath low. Lay him low among his people, or thou thyſelf muſt fall. It ſhall never be told in my halls that my warriors fell in my preſence; that they fell in the preſence of Lathmon when his ſword reſted by his ſide: the blue eyes of Cutha [m] would roll in tears, and her ſteps be lonely in the vales of Dunlathmon.

"Neither ſhall it be told," I replied, "that the ſon of Fingal fled. Were his ſteps covered with darkneſs, yet would not Oſſian fly; his ſoul would meet him and ſay, Does the bard of Selma fear the foe? No: he does not fear the foe. His joy is in the midſt of battle."

Lathmon came on with his ſpear, and pierced the ſhield of Oſſian. I felt the cold ſteel at my ſide; and drew the ſword of Morni: I cut the ſpear in twain; the bright point fell glittering on the ground. The ſon of Nuath burnt in his wrath, and lifted high his ſounding ſhield. His dark eyes rolled above it, as bending forward, it ſhone like a gate of braſs. But Oſſian's ſpear pierced the brightneſs brightneſs of its boſſes, and ſunk in a tree that roſe behind. The ſhield hung on the quivering lance! but Lathmon ſtill advanced. Gaul foreſaw the fall of the chief, and ſtretched his buckler before my ſword; when it deſcended, in a ſtream of light over the king of Dunlathmon.

Lathmon beheld the ſon of Morni, and the tear ſtarted from his eye. He threw the ſword of his fathers on the ground, and ſpoke the words of the valiant. "Why ſhould Lathmon fight againſt the firſt of mortal men? Your ſouls are beams from heaven; your ſwords the flames of death. Who can equal the renown of the heroes, whoſe actions are ſo great in youth? O that ye were in the halls of Nuath, in the green dwelling of Lathmon! then would my father ſay, that his ſon did not yield to the feeble. But who comes, a mighty ſtream, along the echoing heath? the little hills are troubled before him, and a thouſand ſpirits are on the beams of his ſteel; the ſpirits [n] of thoſe who are to fall by the arm of the king of reſounding Morven. Happy art thou, O Fingal, thy ſons ſhall fight thy battles; they go forth before thee; and they return with the ſteps of renown."

Fingal came, in his mildneſs, rejoicing in ſecret over the actions of his ſon. Morni's face brightened with gladneſs, and his aged eyes looked faintly through through the tears of joy. We came to the halls of Selma, and ſat round the feaſt of ſhells. The maids of the ſong came into our preſence, and the mildly bluſhing Everallin. Her dark hair ſpread on her neck of ſnow, her eye rolled in ſecret on Oſſian; ſhe touched the harp of muſic, and we bleſſed the daughter of Branno.

Fingal roſe in his place, and ſpoke to Dunlathmon's battling king. The ſword of Trenmor trembled by his ſide, as he lifted up his mighty arm. "Son of Nuath," he ſaid, "why doſt thou ſearch for fame in Morven? We are not of the race of the feeble; nor do our ſwords gleam over the weak. When did we come to Dunlathmon, with the ſound of war? Fingal does not delight in battle, though his arm is ſtrong. My renown grows on the fall of the haughty. The lightning of my ſteel pours on the proud in arms. The battle comes; and the tombs of the valiant riſe; the tombs of my people riſe, O my fathers! and I at laſt muſt remain alone. But I will remain renowned, and the departure of my ſoul ſhall be one ſtream of light. Lathmon! retire to thy place. Turn thy battles to other lands. The race of Morven are renowned, and their foes are the ſons of the unhappy."

NOTES ON LATHMON.

[a] It is ſaid, by tradition, that it was the intelligence of Lathmon's invaſion, that occaſioned Fingal's return from Ireland; though Oſſian more poetically, aſcribes the cauſe of Fingal's knowledge to his dream.

[b] He alludes to a battle wherein Fingal had defeated Lathmon. The occaſion of this firſt war, between thoſe heroes, is told by Oſſian in another poem, which the tranſlator has ſeen.

[c] Morni was chief of a numerous tribe, in the days of Fingal, and his father Komhal. The laſt mentioned hero was killed in battle againſt Morni's tribe; but the valour and conduct of Fingal reduced them, at laſt, to obedience. We find the two heroes perfectly reconciled in this poem.

[d] Stru'mone, ſtream of the hill. Here the proper name of a rivulet in the neighbourhood of Slema.

[e] Oſſian ſpeaks. The contraſt between the old and young heroes is ſtrongly marked. The circumſtance of the latter's drawing their ſwords is well imagined, and agrees with the impatience of young ſoldiers, juſt entered upon action.

[f] Ullin had choſen ill the ſubject of his ſong. The darkneſs which gathered on Morni's brow, did not proceed from any diſlike he had to Comhal's name, though they were foes, but from his fear that the ſong would awaken Fingal to remembrance of the feuds which had ſubſiſted of old between the families. Fingal's ſpeech on this occaſion abounds with generoſity and good ſenſe.

[g] Car-borne is a title of honour beſtowed, by Oſſian, indiſcriminately on every hero; as every chief, in his time, kept a chariot or litter by way of ſtate.

[l] Dubh-bhranna, dark mountain-ſtream. What river went by this name, in the days of Oſſian, is not eaſily aſcertained, at this diſtance of time. A river in Scotland, which falls into the ſea at Banff, ſtill retains the name of Duvran. If that is meant, by Oſſian, in this paſſage, Lathmon muſt have been a prince of the Pictiſh nation, or thoſe Caledonians who inhabited of old the eaſtern coaſt of Scotland.

[m] Cutha appears to have been Lathmon's wife or miſtreſs.

OITHONA:

A POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

Gaul, the ſon of Morni, attended Lathmon into his own country, after his being defeated in Morven, as related in the preceding poem. He was kindly entertained by Nuath the father of Lathmon, and fell in love with his daughter Oithona. The lady was no leſs enamoured of Gaul, and a day was fixed for their marriage. In the mean time Fingal, preparing for an expedition into the country of the Britons, ſent for Gaul. He obeyed, and went; but not without promiſing to Oithona to return, if he ſurvived the war, by a certain day. Lathmon too was obliged to attend his father Nuath in his wars, and Oithona was left alone at Dunlathmon, the ſeat of the family. Dunrommath, lord of Uthal, ſuppoſed to be one of the Orkneys, taking advantage of the abſence of her friends, came and carried off, by force, Oithona, who had formerly rejected his love, into Tromathon, a deſart iſland, where he concealed her in a cave.

Gaul on the day appointed; heard of the rape, and ſailed to Tromathon, to revenge himſelf on Dunrommath. When he landed, he found Oithona diſconſolate, and reſolved not to ſurvive the loſs of her honour. She told him the ſtory of her misfortunes, and ſhe ſcarce ended, when Dunrommath with his followers appeared at the further end of the iſland. Gaul prepared to attack him, recommending to Oithona to retire, till the battle was over. She ſeemingly obeyed; but ſhe ſecretly armed herſelf, ruſhed into the thickeſt of the battle, and was mortally wounded. Gaul purſuing the flying enemy, found her juſt expiring on the field; he mourned over her, raiſed her tomb, and returned to Morven. Thus is the ſtory handed down by tradition; nor is it given with any material difference in the poem, which opens with Gaul's return to Dunlathmon, after the rape of Oithona.

DARKNESS dwells around Dunlathmon, though the moon ſhews half her face on the hill. The daughter of night turns her eyes away; for ſhe beholds the grief that is coming. The ſon of Morni is on the plain; but there is no ſound in the hall. No long-ſtreaming beam of light comes trembling through the gloom. The voice of Oithona[a] is not heard amidſt the noiſe of the ſtreams of Duvranna "Whither art thou gone in thy beauty, dark-haired daughter of Nuath? Lathmon is in the field of the valiant, but thou didſt promiſe to remain in the hall; thou didſt promiſe to remain in the hall till the ſon of Morni returned. Till he returned from Strumon, to the maid of his love. The tear was on thy cheek at his departure; the ſigh roſe in ſecret in thy breaſt. But thou doſt not come to meet him, with ſongs, with the lightly-trembling ſound of the harp."

Such

Such were the words of Gaul, when he came to Dunlathmon's towers. The gates were open and dark. The winds were bluſtering in the hall. The trees ſtrowed the threſhold with leaves; and the murmur of night was abroad. Sad and ſilent, at a rock, the ſon of Morni ſat: his ſoul trembled for the maid; but he knew not whither to turn his courſe. The ſon [b] of Leth ſtood at a diſtance, and heard the winds in his buſhy hair. But he did not raiſe his voice, for he ſaw the ſorrow of Gaul.

Sleep deſcended on the heroes. The viſions of night aroſe. Oithona ſtood in a dream, before the eyes of Morni's ſon. Her dark hair was looſe and diſordered: her lovely eye rolled in tears. Blood ſtained her ſnowy arm. The robe half hid the wound of her breaſt. She ſtood over the chief, and her voice was heard.

"Sleeps the ſon of Morni, he that was lovely in the eyes of Oithona? Sleeps Gaul at the diſtant rock, and the daughter of Nuath low? The ſea rolls round the dark iſle of Tromathon; I ſit in my tears in the cave. Nor do I ſit alone, O Gaul, the dark chief of Cuthal is there. He is there in the rage of his love. And what can Oithona do?"

A rougher blaſt ruſhed through the oak. The dream of night departed. Gaul took his aſpen ſpear;

ſpear; he ſtood in the rage of wrath. Often did his eyes turn to the eaſt, and accuſe the lagging light. At length the morning came forth. The hero lifted up the ſail. The winds came ruſtling from the hill; and he bounded on the waves of the deep. On the third day aroſe Tromathon [c], like a blue ſhield in the midſt of the ſea. The white wave roared againſt its rocks; ſad Oithona ſat on the coaſt. She looked on the rolling waters, and her tears deſcend. But when ſhe ſaw Gaul in his arms, ſhe ſtarted and turned her eyes away. Her lovely cheek is bent and red; her white arm trembles by her ſide. Thrice ſhe ſtrove to fly from his preſence; but her ſteps failed her as ſhe went.

"Daughter of Nuath," ſaid the hero, "why doſt thou fly from Gaul? Do my eyes ſend forth the flame of death? Or darkens hatred in my ſoul? Thou art to me the beam of the eaſt riſing in a land unknown. But thou covereſt thy face with ſadneſs, daughter of high Dunlathmon? Is the foe of Oithona near? My ſoul burns to meet him in battle. The ſword trembles on the ſide of Gaul, and longs to glitter in his hand. Speak, daughter of Nuath, doſt thou not behold my tears?"

"Car-borne chief of Strumon," replied the ſighing maid, "why comeſt thou over the dark-blue wave wave to Nuath's mournful daughter? Why did I not paſs away in ſecret, like the flower of the rock, that lifts its fair head unſeen, and ſtrows its withered leaves on the blaſt? Why didſt thou come, O Gaul, to hear my departing ſigh? I paſs away in my youth; and my name ſhall not be heard. Or it will be heard with ſorrow, and the tears of Nuath will fall. Thou wilt be ſad, ſon of Morni, for the fallen fame of Oithona. But ſhe ſhall ſleep in the narrow tomb, far from the voice of the mourner. Why didſt thou come, chief of Strumon, to the ſea-beat rocks of Tromathon?"

"I came to meet thy foes, daughter of car-borne Nuath! the death of Cuthal's chief darkens before me; or Morni's ſon ſhall fall. Oithona! when Gaul is low, raiſe my tomb on that oozy rock; and when the dark-bounding ſhip ſhall paſs, call the ſons of the ſea; call them, and give this ſword that they may carry it to Morni's hall; that the gray-haired hero may ceaſe to look towards the deſart for the return of his ſon."

"And ſhall the daughter of Nuath live," ſhe replied with a burſting ſigh? "Shall I live in Tromathon, and the ſon of Morni low? My heart is not of that rock; nor my ſoul careleſs as that ſea, which lifts its blue waves to every wind, and rolls beneath the ſtorm. The blaſt which ſhall lay thee low, low, ſhall ſpread the branches of Oithona on earth. We ſhall wither together, ſon of car-borne Morni! The narrow houſe is pleaſant to me, and the gray ſtone of the dead: for never more will I leave thy rocks, ſea-ſurrounded Cromathon! Night [d] came on with her clouds, after the departure of Lathmon, when he went to the wars of his fathers, to the moſs-covered rock of Duthormoth; night came on, and I ſat in the hall, at the beam of the oak. The wind was abroad in the trees. I heard the ſound of arms. Joy roſe in my face; for I thought of thy return. It was the chief of Cuthal, the red-haired ſtrength of Dunrommath. His eyes rolled in fire: the blood of my people was on his ſword. They who defended Oithona fell by the gloomy chief. What could I do? My arm was weak; it could not lift the ſpear. He took me in my grief, amidſt my tears he raiſed the ſail. He feared the returning ſtrength of Lathmon, the brother of unhappy Oithona. But behold, he comes with his people! the dark wave is divided before him! Whither wilt thou turn thy ſteps, ſon of Morni? Many are the warriors of Dunrommath!"

"My ſteps never turned from battle," replied the hero as he unſheathed his ſword; "and ſhall I begin to fear, Oithona, when thy foes are near? Go to thy cave, daughter of Nuath, till our battle ceaſe.

ceaſe. Son of Leth, bring the bow of our fathers; and the ſounding quiver of Morni. Let our three warriors bend the yew. Ourſelves will lift the ſpear. They are an hoſt on the rock; but our ſouls are ſtrong."

The daughter of Nuath went to the cave: a troubled joy roſe on her mind, like the red path of the lightening on a ſtormy cloud. Her ſoul was reſolved, and the tear was dried from her wildly-looking eye. Dunrommath ſlowly approached; for he ſaw the ſon of Morni. Contempt contracted his face, a ſmile is on his dark-brown cheek; his red eye rolled, half-concealed, beneath his ſhaggy brows.

"Whence are the ſons of the ſea," begun the gloomy chief? "Have the winds driven you to the rocks of Tromathon? Or come you in ſearch of the white-handed daughter of Nuath? The ſons of the unhappy, ye feeble men, come to the hand of Dunrommath. His eyes ſpares not the weak, and he delights in the blood of ſtrangers. Oithona is a beam of light, and the chief of Cuthal enjoys it in ſecret; would thou come on its lovelineſs like a cloud, ſon of the feeble hand! Thou mayeſt come, but ſhalt thou return to the halls of thy fathers?"

"Doſt thou not know me," ſaid Gaul, "red-haired chief of Cuthal? Thy feet were ſwift on the heath, in the battle of car-borne Lathmon; when the ſword of Morni's ſon purſued his hoſt, in Morven's woody land. Dunrommath! thy words are mighty, for thy warriors gather behind thee. But do I fear them, ſon of pride? I am not of the race of the feeble."

Gaul advanced in his arms; Dunrommath ſhrunk behind his people. But the ſpear of Gaul pierced the gloomy chief, and his ſword lopped off his head, as it bended in death. The ſon of Morni ſhook it thrice by the lock; the warriors of Dunrommath fled. The arrows of Morven purſued them: ten fell on the moſſy rocks. The reſt lift the ſounding ſail, and bound on the echoing deep. Gaul advanced towards the cave of Oithona. He beheld a youth leaning againſt a rock. An arrow had pierced his ſide: and his eye rolled faintly beneath his helmet. The ſoul of Morni's ſon is ſad, he came and ſpoke the words of peace.

"Can the hand of Gaul heal thee, youth of the mournful brow? I have ſearched for the herbs of the mountains; I have gathered them on the ſecret banks of their ſtreams. My hand has cloſed the wound of the valiant, and their eyes have bleſſed the ſon of Morni. Where dwelt thy fathers, warrior? Were they of the ſons of the mighty?

Sadneſs ſhall come, like night, on thy native ſtreams; for thou art fallen in thy youth."

"My fathers," replied the ſtranger, "were of the race of the mighty; but they ſhall not be ſad; for my fame is departed like morning miſt. High walls riſe on the banks of Duvranna; and ſee their moſſy towers in the ſtream; a rock aſcends behind them with its bending firs. Thou mayeſt behold it far diſtant. There my brother dwells. He is renowned in battle: give him this glittering helmet."

The helmet fell from the hand of Gaul; for it was the wounded Oithona. She had armed herſelf in the cave, and came in ſearch of death. Her heavy eyes are half-cloſed; the blood pours from her ſide. "Son of Morni," ſhe ſaid, "prepare the narrow tomb. Sleep comes, like a cloud, on my ſoul. The eyes of Oithona are dim. O had I dwelt at Duvranna, in the bright beam of my fame! then had my years come on with joy; and the virgins would bleſs my ſteps. But I fall in youth, ſon of Morni, and my father ſhall bluſh in his hall."

She fell pale on the rock of Tromathon. The mournful hero raiſed her tomb. He came to Morven; but we ſaw the darkneſs of his ſoul. Oſſian took the harp in the praiſe of Oithona. The brightneſs of the face of Gaul returned. But his ſigh roſe, at times, in the midſt of his friends, like blaſts that ſhake their unfrequent wings, after the ſtormy winds are laid.

CROMA:

A POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

Malvina the daughter of Toſcar is overheard by Oſſian lamenting the death of Oſcar her lover. Oſſian, to divert her grief, relates his own actions in an expedition which he undertook, at Fingal's command, to aid Crothar the petty king of Croma, a country in Ireland; againſt Rothmar who invaded his dominions. The ſtory is delivered down thus, in tradition. Crothar king of Croma being blind with age, and his ſon too young for the field, Rothmar the chief of Tromlo reſolved to avail himſelf of the opportunity offered of annexing the dominions of Crothar to his own. He accordingly marched into the country ſubject to Crothar, but which he held of Arth or Artho, who was at the time, ſupreme king of Ireland.

Crothar being, on account of his age and blindneſs, unfit for action, ſent for aid to Fingal king of Scotland; who ordered his ſon Oſſian to the relief of Crothar. But before his arrival, Fovar-gormo, the ſon of Crothar, attacking Rothmar, was ſlain himſelf, and his forces totally defeated. Oſſian renewed the war; came to battle, killed Rothmar, and routed his army. Croma being thus delivered of its enemies, Oſſian returned to Scotland.

"IT was the voice of my love! few are his viſits to the dreams of Malvina! Open your airy halls, ye fathers of mighty Toſcar. Unfold the gates gates of your clouds; the ſteps of Malvina's departure are near. I have heard a voice in my dream. I feel the fluttering of my ſoul. Why didſt thou come, O blaſt, from the dark-rolling of the lake? Thy ruſtling wing was in the trees, the dream of Malvina departed. But ſhe beheld her love, when his robe of miſt flew on the wind; the beam of the ſun was on his ſkirts, they glittered like the gold of the ſtranger. It was the voice of my love! few are his viſits to my dreams!

"But thou dwelleſt in the ſoul of Malvina, ſon of mighty Oſſian. My ſighs ariſe with the beam of the eaſt; my tears deſcend with the drops of night. I was a lovely tree, in thy preſence, Oſcar, with all my branches round me; but thy death came like a blaſt from the deſart, and laid my green head low; the ſpring returned with its ſhowers, but no leaf of mine aroſe. The virgins ſaw me ſilent in the hall, and they touched the harp of joy. The tear was on the cheek of Malvina: the virgins beheld me in my grief. Why art thou ſad, they ſaid; thou firſt of the maids of Lutha? Was he lovely as the beam of the morning, and ſtately in thy ſight?"

Pleaſant is thy ſong in Oſſian's ear, daughter of ſtreamy Lutha! Thou haſt heard the muſic of departed bards in the dream of thy reſt, when ſleep fell on thine eyes, at the murmur of Moruth. [a] When thou didſt return from the chaſe, in the day of the ſun, thou haſt heard the muſic of the bards, and thy ſong is lovely. It is lovely, O Malvina, but it melts the ſoul. There is a joy in grief when peace dwells in the breaſt of the ſad. But ſorrow waſtes the mournful, O daughter of Toſcar, and their days are few. They fall away, like the flower on which the ſun looks in his ſtrength after the mildew has paſſed over it, and its head is heavy with the drops of night. Attend to the tale of Oſſian, O maid; he remembers the days of his youth.

The king commanded; I raiſed my ſails, and ruſhed into the bay of Croma: into Croma's ſounding bay in lovely Innis-fail. [b] High on the coaſt aroſe the towers of Crothar king of ſpears; Crothar renowned in the battles of his youth; but age dwelt then around the chief. Rothmar raiſed the ſword againſt the hero; and the wrath of Fingal burned. He ſent Oſſian to meet Rothmar in battle, for the chief of Croma was the companion of his youth. I ſent the bard before me with ſongs; I came into the hall of Crothar. There ſat the hero amidſt the arms of his fathers, but his eyes had failed. His gray locks waved around a ſtaff, on which the warrior leaned. He hummed the ſong of other times, when the ſound of our arms reached his ears. Crothar roſe, ſtretched his aged hand, and bleſſed the ſon of Fingal.

" Oſſian," ſaid the hero, " the ſtrength of Crothar's arm has failed. O could I lift the ſword, as on the day that Fingal fought at Strutha! He was the firſt of mortal men; but Crothar had alſo his fame. The king of Morven praiſed me, and he placed on my arm the boſſy ſhield of Calthar, whom the hero had ſlain in war. Doſt thou not behold it on the wall, for Crothar's eyes have failed? Is thy ſtrength, like thy father's, Oſſian? let the aged feel thine arm."

I gave my arm to the king; he feels it with his aged hands. The ſigh roſe in his breaſt, and his tears deſcended. " Thou art ſtrong, my ſon," he ſaid, " but not like the king of Morven. But who is like that hero among the mighty in war? Let the feaſt of my halls be ſpread; and let my bards raiſe the ſong. Great is he that is within my walls, ſons of echoing Croma!" The feaſt is ſpread. The harp is heard; and joy is in the hall. But it was joy covering a ſigh, that darkly dwelt in every breaſt. It was like the faint beam of the moon ſpread on a cloud in heaven. At length the muſic ceaſed, and the aged king of Croma ſpoke; ſpoke; he ſpoke without a tear, but the ſigh ſwelled in the midſt of his voice.

"Son of Fingal! doſt thou not behold the darkneſs of Crothar's hall of ſhells? My ſoul was not dark at the feaſt, when my people lived. I rejoiced in the preſence of ſtrangers, when my ſon ſhone in the hall. But, Oſſian, he is a beam that is departed, and left no ſtreak of light behind. He is fallen, ſon of Fingal, in the battles of his father. Rothmar the chief of graſſy Tromlo heard that my eyes had failed; he heard that my arms were fixed in the hall, and the pride of his ſoul aroſe. He came towards Croma; my people fell before him. I took my arms in the hall, but what could ſightleſs Crothar do? My ſteps were unequal; my grief was great. I wiſhed for the days that were paſt. Days! wherein I fought; and conquered in the field of blood. My ſon returned from the chaſe; the fair-haired Fovar-gormo [c]. He had not lifted his ſword in battle, for his arm was young. But the ſoul of the youth was great; the fire of valour burnt in his eyes. He ſaw the diſordered ſteps of his father, and his ſigh aroſe. "King of Croma," he ſaid, "is it becauſe thou haſt no ſon; is it for the weakneſs of Fovar-gormo's arm that thy ſighs ariſe? I begin, my father, to feel the ſtrength of my arm; I have drawn the ſword of my youth; and I have bent the bow. Let me meet this Rothmar, with the youths of Croma; let me meet him, O my father; for I feel my burning ſoul."

"And thou ſhalt meet him," I ſaid, "ſon of ſightleſs Crothar! But let others advance before thee, that I may hear the tread of thy feet at thy return; for my eyes behold thee not, fair-haired Fovar-gormo! He went, he met the foe; he fell. The foe advances towards Croma. He who ſlew my ſon is near, with all his pointed ſpears."

It is not time to fill the ſhell, I replied, and took my ſpear. My people ſaw the fire of my eyes, and they roſe around. All night we ſtrode along the heath. Gray morning roſe in the eaſt. A green narrow vale appeared before us; nor did it want its blue ſtream. The dark hoſt of Rathmor are on its banks, with all their glittering arms. We fought along the vale; they fled; Rothmar ſunk beneath my ſword. Day had not deſcended in the weſt when I brought his arms to Crothar. The aged hero felt them with his hands; and joy brightened in his ſoul.

The people gather to the hall; the ſound of the ſhells is heard. Ten harps are ſtrung; five bards advance, and ſing, by turns[d], the praiſe of Oſſian; they poured forth their burning ſouls, and the harp harp anſwered to their voice. The joy of Croma was great; for peace returned to the land. The night came on with ſilence, and the morning returned with joy. No foe came in darkneſs, with his glittering ſpear. The joy of Croma was great; for the gloomy Rothmar was fallen.

I raiſed my voice for Fovar-gormo, when they laid the chief in earth. The aged Crothar was there, but his ſigh was not heard. He ſearched for the wound of his ſon, and found it in his breaſt. Joy roſe in the face of the aged. He came and ſpoke to Oſſian.

"King of ſpears!" he ſaid, "my ſon has not fallen without his fame. The young warrior did not fly; but met death as he went forward in his ſtrength. Happy are they who die in youth, when their renown is heard! The feeble will not behold them in the hall; or ſmile at their trembling hands. Their memory ſhall be honoured in the ſong; the young tear of the virgin falls. But the aged wither away, by degrees, and the fame of their youth begins to be forgot. They fall in ſecret; the ſigh of their ſon is not heard. Joy is around their tomb; and the ſtone of their fame is placed without a tear. Happy are they who die in youth, when their renown is around them!"

[d] Thoſe extempore compoſitions were in great repute among ſucceeding bards. The pieces extant of that kind ſhew more of the good ear, than of the poetical genius of their authors. The tranſlator has only met with one poem of this ſort, which he thinks worthy of being preſerved. It is a thouſand years later than Oſſian, but the authors ſeem to have obſerved his manner, and adopted ſome of his expreſſions. The ſtory of it is this. Five bards, paſſing the night in the houſe of a chief, who was a poet himſelf, went ſeverally to make their obſervations on, and returned with an extempore deſcription of, night. The night happened to be one in October, as appears from the poem; and in the north of Scotland, it has all that variety which the bards aſcribe to it, in their deſcriptions.

FIRST BARD.

NIGHT is dull and dark. The clouds reſt on the hills. No ſtar with green trembling beam; no moon looks from the ſky. I hear the blaſt in the wood; but I hear it diſtant far. The ſtream of the valley murmurs; but its murmur is ſullen and ſad. From the tree at the grave of the dead the long-howling owl is heard. I ſee a dim form on the plain! It is a ghoſt! it fades—it flies. Some funeral ſhall paſs this way: the meteor marks the path.

The

The diſtant dog is howling from the hut of the hill. The ſtag lies on the mountain moſs: the hind is at his ſide. She hears the wind in his branchy horns. She ſtarts, but lies again.

The roe is in the cleft of the rock; the heath-cock's head is beneath his wing. No beaſt, no bird is abroad, but the owl and the howling fox. She on a leafleſs tree: he in a cloud on the hill.

Dark, panting, trembling, ſad, the traveller has loſt his way. Through ſhrubs, through thorns, he goes, along the gurgling rill. He fears the rock and the fen. He fears the ghoſt of night. The old tree groans to the blaſt; the falling branch reſounds. The wind drives the withered burs, clung together, along the graſs. It is the light tread of a ghoſt? He trembles amidſt the night.

Dark, duſky, howling is night, cloudy, windy, and full of ghoſts! The dead are abroad! my friends, receive me from the night.

SECOND BARD.

The wind is up. The ſhower deſcends. The ſpirit of the mountain ſhrieks. Woods fall from high. Windows flap. The growing river roars. The traveller attempts the ford. Hark that ſhriek! he dies:—The ſtorm drives the horſe from the hill, the goat, the lowing cow. They tremble as drives the ſhower, beſide the mouldering bank.

The hunter ſtarts from ſleep, in his lonely hut; he wakes the fire decayed. His wet dogs ſmoke around him. He fills the chinks with heath. Loud roar two mountain ſtreams which meet beſide his booth.

Sad on the ſide of a hill the wandering ſhepherd ſits. The tree reſounds above him. The ſtream roars down the rock.

rock. He waits for the riſing moon to guide him to his home.

Ghoſts ride on the ſtorm to-night. Sweet is their voice between the ſqualls of wind. Their ſongs are of other worlds.

The rain is paſt. The dry wind blows. Streams roar; and windows flap. Cold drops fall from the roof. I ſee the ſtarry ſky. But the ſhower gathers again. The weſt is gloomy and dark. Night is ſtormy and diſmal; receive me, my friends, from night.

THIRD BARD.

The wind ſtill ſounds between the hills; and whiſtles through the graſs of the rock. The firs fall from their place. The turfy hut is torn. The clouds, divided, fly over the ſky, and ſhew the burning ſtars. The meteor, token of death! flies ſparkling through the gloom. It reſts on the hill. I ſee the withered fern, the dark-browed rock, the fallen oak. Who is that in his ſhroud beneath the tree, by the ſtream?

The waves dark-tumble on the lake, and laſh its rocky ſides. The boat is brimful in the cove; the oars on the rocking tide. A maid ſits ſad beſide the rock, and eyes the rolling ſtream. Her lover promiſed to come. She ſaw his boat, when yet it was light, on the lake. Is this his broken boat on the ſhore? Are theſe his groans on the wind?

Hark! the hail rattles around. The flaky ſnow deſcends. The tops of the hills are white. The ſtormy winds abate. Various is the night and cold; receive me, my Friends, from night.

FOURTH

FOURTH BARD.

NIGHT is calm and fair; blue, ſtarry, ſettled is night. The winds, with the clouds, are gone. They ſink behind the hill. The moon is up on the mountain. Trees glitter: ſtreams ſhine on the rock. Bright rolls the ſettled lake; bright the ſtream of the vale.

I ſee trees overturned; the ſhocks of corn on the plain. The wakeful hind rebuilds the ſhocks, and whiſtles on the diſtant field.

Calm, ſettled, fair is night! Who comes from the place of the dead? That form with the robe of ſnow; white arms and dark-brown hair! It is the daughter of the chief of the people; ſhe that lately fell! Come let us view thee, O maid! thou that haſt been the delight of heroes! The blaſt drives the phantom away, white, without form, it aſcends the hill.

The breezes drive the blue miſt, ſlowly over the narrow vale. It riſes on the hill, and joins its head to heaven. Night is ſettled, calm, blue, ſtarry, bright with the moon. Receive me not, my friends, for lovely is the night.

FIFTH BARD.

NIGHT is calm, but dreary. The moon is in a cloud in the weſt. Slow moves that pale beam along the ſhaded hill. The diſtant wave is heard. The torrent murmurs on the rock. The cock is heard from the booth. More than half the night is paſt. The houſe-wife, groping in the gloom, rekindles the ſettled fire. The hunter thinks that day approaches, and calls his bounding dogs. He aſcends the hill and whiſtles on his way. A blaſt removes the cloud. He ſees the ſtarry plough of the north. Much of the night is to paſs. He nods by the moſſy rock.

Hark!

Hark! the whirlwind is in the wood! A low murmur in the vale! It is the mighty army of the dead returning from the air.

The moon refts behind the hill. The beam is ftill on that lofty rock. Long are the fhadows of the trees. Now it is dark over all. Night is dreary, filent, and dark; receive me, my friends, from night.

THE CHIEF.

Let clouds reft on the hills: fpirits fly and travellers fear. Let the winds of the woods arife, the founding ftorms defcend. Roar ftreams and windows flap, and green winged meteors fly; rife the pale moon from behind her hills, or incloſe her head in clouds; night is alike to me, blue, ſtormy, or gloomy the ſky. Night flies before the beam, when it is poured on the hill. The young day returns from his clouds, but we return no more.

Where are our chiefs of old? Where our kings of mighty name? The fields of their battles are filent. Scarce their moſſy tombs remain. We ſhall alſo be forgot. This lofty houſe ſhall fall. Our ſons ſhall not behold the ruins in graſs. They ſhall aſk of the aged, "Where ſtood the walls of our fathers?"

Raiſe the ſong, and ſtrike the harp; ſend round the ſhells of joy. Suſpend a hundred tapers on high. Youths and maids begin the dance. Let ſome gray bard be near me to tell the deeds of other times; of kings renowned in our land, of chiefs we behold no more. Thus let the night paſs until morning ſhall appear in our halls. Then let the bow be at hand, the dogs, the youths of the chaſe. We ſhall aſcend the hill with day; and awake the deer.

BERRATHON.

BERRATHON:

A POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

Fingal, in his voyage to Lochlin, whither he had been invited by Starno, the father of Agandecca, touched at Berrathon, an iſland of Scandinavia, where he was kindly entertained by Larthmor the petty king of the place, who was a vaſſal of the ſupreme kings of Lochlin. The hoſpitality of Larthmor gained him Fingal's friendſhip, which that hero manifeſted, after the impriſonment of Larthmor by his own ſon; by ſending Oſſian and Toſcar, the father of Malvina, ſo often mentioned, to reſcue Larthmor, and to puniſh the unnatural behaviour of Uthal. Uthal was handſome and much admired by the ladies. Nina-thoma the beautiful daughter of Torthoma, a neighbouring prince, fell in love and fled with him. He proved unconſtant; for another lady, whoſe name is not mentioned, gaining his affections, he confined Nina-thoma to a deſart iſland near the coaſt of Berrathon. She was relieved by Oſſian, who, in company with Toſcar, landing on Berrathon, defeated the forces of Uthal, and killed him in a ſingle combat. Nina-thoma, whoſe love not all the bad behaviour of Uthal could eraſe, hearing of his death, died of grief. In the mean time Larthmor is reſtored, and Oſſian and Toſcar returned in triumph to Fingal. The preſent poem opens with an elegy on the death of Malvina, the daughter of Toſcar, and cloſes with the preſages of the poet's death.

BEND thy blue courſe, O ſtream, round the narrow plain of Lutha [a]. Let the green woods hang over it from their mountains: and the ſun look on it at noon. The thiſtle is there on its rock, and ſhakes its beard to the wind. The flower hangs its heavy head, waving, at times, to the gale. "Why doſt thou awake me, O gale," it ſeems to ſay, "I am covered with the drops of heaven? The time of my fading is near, and the blaſt that ſhall ſcatter my leaves. To-morrow ſhall the traveller come, he that ſaw me in my beauty ſhall come; his eyes will ſearch the field, but they will not find me! So ſhall they ſearch in vain, for the voice of Cona, after it has failed in the field. The hunter ſhall come forth in the morning, and the voice of my harp ſhall not be heard. "Where is the ſon of car-borne Fingal?" The tear will be on his cheek. Then come thou, O Malvina [b], with all thy muſic, come; lay Oſſian in the plain of Lutha: let his tomb riſe in the lovely field.

Malvina! where art thou with thy ſongs: with the ſoft ſound of thy ſteps? Son [c] of Alpin art thou near? where is the daughter of Toſcar? "I paſſed, O ſon of Fingal, by Tarlutha's moſſy walls. The ſmoke of the hall was ceaſed: ſilence was among the trees of the hill. The voice of the chaſe was over. I ſaw the daughters of the bow. I aſked about Malvina, but they anſwered not. They turned their faces away: thin darkneſs covered their their beauty. They were like ſtars, on a rainy hill, by night, each looking faintly through her miſt.'

Pleaſant[d] be thy reſt, O lovely beam! ſoon haſt thou ſet on our hills! The ſteps of thy departure were ſtately, like the moon on the blue, trembling wave. But thou haſt left us in darkneſs, firſt of the maids of Lutha! We ſit, at the rock, and there is no voice; no light but the meteor of fire! Soon haſt thou ſet, Malvina, daughter of generous Toſcar! But thou riſeſt like the beam of the eaſt, among the ſpirits of thy friends, where they ſit in their ſtormy halls, the chambers of the thunder. A cloud hovers over Cona: its blue curling ſides are high. The winds are beneath it, with their wings; within it is the dwelling[e] of Fingal. There the hero ſits in darkneſs; his airy ſpear is in his hand. His ſhield half covered with clouds, is like the darkened moon; when one half ſtill remains in the wave, and the other looks ſickly on the field.

His friends ſit around the king, on miſt; and hear the ſongs of Ullin: he ſtrikes the half viewleſs harp; and raiſes the feeble voice. The leſſer heroes, with a thouſand meteors, light the airy hall. Malvina riſes, in the midſt; a bluſh is on her cheek. She beholds the unknown faces of her fathers, and turns aſide her humid eyes. "Art thou come ſo ſoon," ſaid Fingal, "daughter of generous Toſcar?

Sadneſs dwells in the halls of Lutha. My aged ſon[f] is ſad. I hear the breeze of Cona, that was wont to lift thy heavy locks. It comes to the hall, but thou art not there; its voice is mournful among the arms of thy fathers. Go with thy ruſtling wing, O breeze! and ſigh on Malvina's tomb. It riſes yonder beneath the rock, at the blue ſtream of Lutha. The maids[g] are departed to their place; and thou alone, O breeze, mourneſt there."

But who comes from the duſky weſt, ſupported on a cloud? A ſmile is on his gray, watery face; locks of miſt fly on the wind: he bends forward on his airy ſpear: it is thy father, Malvina! "Why ſhineſt thou, ſo ſoon, on our clouds," he ſays, "O lovely light of Lutha? But thou wert ſad, my daughter, for thy friends were paſſed away. The ſons of little men[h] were in the hall; and none remained of the heroes, but Oſſian king of ſpears."

And doſt thou remember Oſſian, car-borne Toſcar[i] ſon of Conloch? The battles of our youth were many; our ſwords went together to the field. They ſaw us coming like two falling rocks; and the ſons of the ſtranger fled. "There come the warriors of Cona," they ſaid; "their ſteps are in the paths of the vanquiſhed." Draw near, ſon of Alpin, to the ſong of the aged. The actions of other times are in my ſoul: my memory beams on the

the days that are paſt. On the days of the mighty Toſcar, when our path was in the deep. Draw near, ſon of Alpin, to the laſt ſound of the voice of Cona.

The king of Morven commanded, and I raiſed my ſails to the wind. Toſcar chief of Lutha ſtood at my ſide, as I roſe on the dark-blue wave. Our courſe was to ſea-ſurrounded Berrathon,[k] the iſle of many ſtorms. There dwelt, with his locks of age, the ſtately ſtrength of Larthmor. Larthmor who ſpread the feaſt of ſhells to Comhal's mighty ſon, when he went to Starno's halls, in the days of Agandecca. But when the chief was old, the pride of his ſon aroſe, the pride of fair-haired Uthal, the love of a thouſand maids. He bound the aged Larthmor, and dwelt in his ſounding halls.

Long pined the king in his cave, beſide his rolling-ſea. Morning did not come to his dwelling; nor the burning oak by night. But the wind of ocean was there, and the parting beam of the moon. The red ſtar looked on the king, when it trembled on the weſtern wave. Snitho came to Selma's hall: Snitho companion of Larthmor's youth. He told of the king of Berrathon: the wrath of Fingal roſe. Thrice he aſſumed the ſpear, reſolved to ſtretch his hand to Uthal. But the memory[l] of his actions roſe before the king, and he

he ſent his ſon and Toſcar. Our joy was great on the rolling ſea; and we often half unſheathed our ſwords. For never before had we fought alone, in the battles of the ſpear.

Night came down on the ocean; the winds departed on their wings. Cold and pale is the moon. The red ſtars lift their heads. Our courſe is ſlow along the coaſt of Berrathon; the white waves tumble on the rocks. "What voice is that," ſaid Toſcar, "which comes between the ſounds of the waves? It is ſoft but mournful, like the voice of departed bards. But I behold the maid,[m] ſhe ſits on the rock alone. Her head bends on her arm of ſnow: her dark hair is in the wind. Hear, ſon of Fingal, her ſong, it is ſmooth as the gliding waters of Lavath." We came to the ſilent bay, and heard the maid of night.

"How long will ye roll around me, blue-tumbling waters of ocean? My dwelling was not always in caves, nor beneath the whiſtling tree. The feaſt was ſpread in Torthoma's hall; my father delighted in my voice. The youths beheld me in the ſteps of my lovelineſs, and they bleſſed the dark-haired Nina-thoma. It was then thou didſt come, O Uthal! like the ſun of heaven. The ſouls of the virgins are thine, ſon of generous Larthmor! But why doſt thou leave me alone in the midſt of roaring roaring waters? Was my ſoul dark with thy death? Did my white hand lift the ſword? Why then haſt thou left me alone, king of high Finthormo?"[n]

The tear ſtarted from my eye when I heard the voice of the maid. I ſtood before her in my arms, and ſpoke the words of peace. "Lovely dweller of the cave, what ſigh is in that breaſt? Shall Oſſian lift his ſword in thy preſence, the deſtruction of thy foes? Daughter of Torthoma, riſe, I have heard the words of thy grief. The race of Morven are around thee, who never injured the weak. Come to our dark-boſomed ſhip, thou brighter than that ſetting moon. Our courſe is to the rocky Berrathon, to the echoing walls of Finthormo." She came in her beauty, ſhe came with all her lovely ſteps. Silent joy brightened in her face, as when the ſhadows fly from the field of ſpring; the blue ſtream is rolling in brightneſs, and the green buſh bends over its courſe.

The morning roſe with its beams. We came to Rothma's bay. A boar ruſhed from the wood; my ſpear pierced his ſide. I rejoiced over the blood,[o] and foreſaw my growing fame. But now the ſound of Uthal's train came from the high Finthormo; they ſpread over the heath to the chaſe of the boar. Himſelf comes ſlowly on, in the pride of his ſtrength. He lifts his two pointed ſpears. On his ſide is the hero's ſword. Three youths carry his poliſhed bows: the bounding of five dogs is before him. His warriors move on, at a diſtance, admiring the ſteps of the king. Stately was the ſon of Larthmor! but his ſoul was dark. Dark as the troubled face of the moon, when it foretells the ſtorms.

We roſe on the heath before the king; he ſtopt in the midſt of his courſe. His warriors gathered around, and a gray-haired bard advanced. "Whence are the ſons of the ſtrangers?" begun the bard. "The children of the unhappy come to Berrathon; to the ſword of car-borne Uthal. He ſpreads no feaſt in his hall: the blood of ſtrangers is on his ſtreams. If from Selma's walls ye come, from the moſſy walls of Fingal, chuſe three youths to go to your king to tell of the fall of his people. Perhaps the hero may come and pour his blood on Uthal's ſword; ſo ſhall the fame of Finthormo ariſe, like the growing tree of the vale."

"Never will it riſe, O bard," I ſaid in the pride of my wrath. "He would ſhrink in the preſence of Fingal, whoſe eyes are the flames of death. The ſon of Comhal comes, and the kings vaniſh in his preſence; they are rolled together, like miſt, by the breath of his rage. Shall three tell to Fingal, gal, that his people fell? Yes! they may tell it bard? but his people ſhall fall with fame."

I ſtood in the darkneſs of my ſtrength: Toſcar drew his ſword at my ſide. The foe came on like a ſtream: the mingled ſound of death aroſe. Man took man, ſhield met ſhield; ſteel mixed its beams with ſteel. Darts hiſs through air; ſpears ring on mails; and ſwords on broken bucklers bound. As the noiſe of an aged grove beneath the roaring wind, when a thouſand ghoſts break the trees by night, ſuch was the din of arms. But Uthal fell beneath my ſword; and the ſons of Berrathon fled. It was then I ſaw him in his beauty, and the tear hung in my eye. "Thou art fallen, [p] young tree," I ſaid, "with all thy beauty round thee. Thou art fallen on thy plains, and the field is bare The winds come from the deſart, and there is no ſound in thy leaves! Lovely art thou in death, ſon of car-borne Larthmor."

Nina-thoma ſat on the ſhore, and heard the ſound of battle. She turned her red eyes on Lethmal the gray-haired bard of Selma, for he had remained on the coaſt, with the daughter of Torthoma. "Son of the times of old!" ſhe ſaid, "I hear the noiſe of death. Thy friends have met with Uthal, and the chief is low! O that I had remained on the rock, incloſed with the tumbling waves! Then would my ſoul be ſad, but his death would not reach my ear. Art thou fallen on thy heath, O ſon of high Finthormo! thou didſt leave me on a rock, but my ſoul was full of thee. Son of high Finthormo! art thou fallen on thy heath?"

She roſe pale in her tears, and ſaw the bloody ſhield of Uthal; ſhe ſaw it in Oſſian's hand; her ſteps were diſtracted on the heath. She flew; ſhe found him; ſhe fell. Her ſoul came forth in a ſigh. Her hair is ſpread on his face. My burſting tears deſcend. A tomb aroſe on the unhappy; and my ſong was heard. "Reſt, hapleſs children of youth! at the noiſe of that moſſy ſtream. The virgins will ſee your tomb, at the chaſe, and turn away their weeping eyes. Your fame will be in the ſong; the voice of the harp will be heard in your praiſe. The daughters of Selma ſhall hear it; and your renown ſhall be in other lands. Reſt, children of youth, at the noiſe of the moſſy ſtream."

Two days we remained on the coaſt. The heroes of Berrathon convened. We brought Larthmor to his halls; the feaſt of ſhells was ſpread. The joy of the aged was great; he looked to the arms of his fathers; the arms which he left in his hall, when the pride of Uthal aroſe. We were renowned before Larthmor, and he bleſſed the chiefs of Morven; but he knew not that his ſon was low, the ſtately ſtrength of Uthal. They had told that he had retired to the woods, with the tears of grief; they had told it, but he was ſilent in the tomb of Rothma's heath."

On the fourth day we raiſed our ſails to the roar of the northern wind. Larthmor came to the coaſt, and his bards raiſed the ſong. The joy of the king was great, he looked to Rothma's gloomy heath; he ſaw the tomb of his ſon; and the memory of Uthal roſe. "Who of my heroes," he ſaid, "lies there? He ſeems to have been of the kings of ſpears? Was he renowned in my halls, before the pride of Uthal roſe? Ye are ſilent, ſons of Berrathon, is the king of heroes low? My heart melts for thee, O Uthal! though thy hand was againſt thy father! O that I had remained in the cave! that my ſon had dwelt in Finthormo! I might have heard the tread of his feet, when he went to the chaſe of the boar. I might have heard his voice on the blaſt of my cave. Then would my ſoul be glad: but now darkneſs dwells in my halls."

Such were my deeds, ſon of Alpin, when the arm of my youth was ſtrong; ſuch were [q] the actions of Toſcar, the car-borne ſon of Conloch. But Toſcar is on his flying cloud; and I am alone at Lutha: my voice is like the laſt ſound of the wind, when it forſakes the woods. But Oſſian ſhall not be long alone, he ſees the miſt that ſhall receive his ghoſt He beholds the miſt that ſhall form his robe, when he appears on his hills. The ſons of little men ſhall behold me, and admire the ſtature of the chiefs of old. They ſhall creep to their caves, and look to the ſky with fear; for my ſteps ſhall be in the clouds, and darkneſs ſhall roll on my ſide.

Lead, ſon of Alpin, lead the aged to his woods. The winds begin to riſe. The dark wave of the lake reſounds. Bends there not a tree from Mora with its branches bare? It bends, ſon of Alpin, in the ruſtling blaſt. My harp hangs on a blaſted branch. The ſound of its ſtrings is mournful. Does the wind touch thee, O harp, or is it ſome paſſing ghoſt! It is the hand of Malvina! but bring me the harp, ſon of Alpin; another ſong ſhall riſe. My ſoul ſhall depart in the ſound; my fathers ſhall hear it in their airy hall. Their dim faces ſhall hang, with joy, from their clouds; and their hands receive their ſon. The aged oak bends over the ſtream. It ſighs with all its moſs. The withered fern whiſtles near, and mixes, as it waves, with Oſſian's hair.

Strike the harp and raiſe the ſong: be near, with all your wings, ye winds. Bear the mournful ſound away away to Fingal's airy hall. Bear it to Fingal's hall, that he may hear the voice of his ſon; the voice of him that praiſed the mighty.

The blaſt of the north opens thy gates, O king, and I behold thee ſitting on miſt, dimly gleaming in all thine arms. Thy form now is not the terror of the valiant: but like a watery cloud; when we ſee the ſtars behind it with their weeping eyes. Thy ſhield is like the aged moon: thy ſword a vapour half-kindled with fire. Dim and feeble is the chief, who travelled in brightneſs before. But thy ſteps are on the winds of the deſart, and the ſtorms darken in thy hand. Thou takeſt the ſun in thy wrath, and hideſt him in thy clouds. The ſons of little men are afraid; and a thouſand ſhowers deſcend. But when thou comeſt forth in thy mildneſs; the gale of the morning is near thy courſe. The ſun laughs in his blue fields; and the gray ſtream winds in its valley. The buſhes ſhake their green heads in the wind. The roes bound towards the deſart.

But there is a murmur in the heath! the ſtormy winds abate! I hear the voice of Fingal. Long has it been abſent from mine ear! "Come, Oſſian, come away," he ſays: "Fingal has received his fame. We paſſed away, like flames that had ſhone for a ſeaſon, our departure was in renown. Though the plains of our battles are dark and ſilent; our fame is in the four gray ſtones. The voice of Oſſian has been heard; and the harp was ſtrung in Selma. Come Oſſian, come away," he ſays, "and fly with thy fathers on clouds."

And come I will, thou king of men! the life of Oſſian fails. I begin to vaniſh on Cona; and my ſteps are not ſeen in Selma. Beſide the ſtone of Mora I ſhall fall aſleep. The winds whiſtling in my gray hair ſhall not waken me. Depart on thy wings, O wind: thou canſt not diſturb the reſt of the bard. The night is long, but his eyes are heavy; depart thou ruſtling blaſt.

But why art thou ſad, ſon of Fingal? Why grows the cloud of thy ſoul? The chiefs of other times are departed; they have gone without their fame. The ſons of future years ſhall paſs away; and another race ariſe. The people are like the waves of ocean: like the leaves of woody Morven, they paſs away in the ruſtling blaſt, and other leaves lift their green heads. Did thy beauty laſt, O Ryno?[s] Stood the ſtrength of car-borne Oſcar? Fingal himſelf paſſed away; and the halls of his fathers forgot his ſteps. And ſhalt thou remain, aged bard! when the mighty have failed? But my fame ſhall remain, and grow like the oak of Morven; which lifts its broad head to the ſtorm, and rejoices in the courſe of the wind.

NOTES ON BERRATHON:

[a] Lutha, ſwift ſtream.

[b] Mal-mhina, ſoft or lovely brow. Mh in the Gallic language has the ſame ſound with v in Engliſh.

[c] Tradition has not handed down the name of this ſon of Alpin. His father was one of Fingal's principal bards, and he appears himſelf to have had a poetical genius.

[c] Oſſian ſpeaks. He calls Malvina a beam of light, and continues the metaphor throughout the paragraph.

[d] The deſcription of this ideal palace of Fingal is very poetical, and agreeable to the notions of thoſe times, concerning the ſtate of the deceaſed, who were ſuppoſed to purſue, after death, the pleaſures and employments of their former life. The ſituation of Oſſian's heroes, in their ſeparate ſtate, if not entirely happy, is more agreeable, than the notions of the ancient Greeks concerning their departed heroes. See Hom. Odyſſ. l. 11.

[e] Oſſian; who had a great friendſhip for Malvina, both on account of her love for his ſon Oſcar, and her attention to his own poems.

[f] That is, the young virgins who ſung the funeral elegy over her tomb.

[g] Oſſian, by way of diſreſpect, calls thoſe who ſucceeded the heroes whoſe actions he celebrates, the ſons of little men. Tradition is entirely ſilent concerning what paſſed in the north, immediately after the death of Fingal and all his heroes; but it appears from that term of ignominy juſt mentioned, that the actions of their ſucceſſors were not to be compared to thoſe of the renowned Fingalians.

Toſcar

[h] Toſcar was the ſon of that Conloch, who was alſo father to the lady, whoſe unfortunate death is related in the laſt epiſode of the ſecond book of Fingal.

[i] A promontory in the midſt of waves.

[k] The meaning of the poet is, that Fingal remembered his own great actions, and conſequently would not ſully them by engaging in a petty war againſt Uthal, who was ſo far his inferior in valour and power.

[l] Nina-thoma the daughter of Torthoma, who had been confined to a deſart iſland by her lover Uthal.

[k] Finthormo, the palace of Uthal. The names in this epiſode are not of a Celtic original; which makes it probable that Oſſian founds his poem on a true ſtory.

[l] Oſſian thought that his killing the boar, on his firſt landing in Berrathon, was a good omen of his future ſucceſs in that iſland. The preſent highlanders look, with a degree of ſuperſtition, upon the ſucceſs of their firſt action, after they have engaged in any deſperate undertaking.

[m] To mourn over the fall of their enemies was a practice univerſal among Oſſian's heroes. This is more agreeable to humanity, than the ſhameful inſulting of the dead, ſo common in Homer, and after him, ſervilely copied by all his imitators, the humane Virgil not excepted, who have been more ſucceſsful in borrowing the imperfections of that great poet, than in their imitations of his beauties.

[n] Oſſian ſpeaks.

[o] This magnificent deſcription of the power of Fingal over the winds and ſtorms, and the image of his taking the ſun, and hiding him in the clouds, do not correſpond with the preceding paragraph, where he is repreſented as a feeble ghoſt, and no more the terror of the valiant; but it agrees with the notion of the times concerning the ſouls of the deceaſed ceaſed; who, it was ſuppoſed, had the command of the winds and ſtorms, but in combat were not a match for valiant men.

[s] Ryno, the ſon of Fingal, who was killed in Ireland, in the war againſt Swaran, [Fing. B. V.] was remarkable for the beauty of his perſon, his ſwiftneſs and great exploits. Minvane, the daughter of Morni, and ſiſter to Gaul, was in love with Ryno. The following is her lamentation over her lover.

She bluſhing ſad, from Morven's rocks, bends over the darkly-rolling ſea. She ſaw the youths in all their arms. Where, Ryno, where art thou?

Our dark looks told that he was low! That pale the hero flew on clouds! That in the graſs of Morven's hills, his feeble voice was heard in wind!

And is the ſon of Fingal fallen, on Ullin's moſſy plains? Strong was the arm that conquered him! Ah me! I am alone!

Alone I will not be, ye winds! that lift my dark-brown hair. My ſighs will not long mix with your ſtream; for I muſt ſleep with Ryno.

I ſee thee not with beauty's ſteps returning from the chaſe. The night is round Minvane's love; and ſilence dwells with Ryno.

Where are thy dogs, and where thy bow? Thy ſhield that was ſo ſtrong? Thy ſword like heaven's deſcending fire? The bloody ſpear of Ryno.

I ſee them mixed in thy ſhip; I ſee them ſtained with blood. No arms are in thy narrow hall, O darkly-dwelling Ryno!

When will the morning come, and ſay, ariſe, thou king of ſpears! ariſe, the hunters are abroad. The hinds are near thee, Ryno!

Away, thou fair-haired morning, away! the ſlumbering king hears thee not! The hinds bound over his narrow tomb! for death dwells round young Ryno.

But I will tread ſoftly, my king! and ſteal to the bed of thy repoſe. Minvane will lie in ſilence, near her ſlumbering Ryno.

The maids ſhall ſeek me; but they ſhall not find me; they ſhall follow my departure with ſongs. But I will not hear you, O maids; I ſleep with fair-haired Ryno.

TEMORA:

AN EPIC POEM.

IN EIGHT BOOKS.

THE ARGUMENT.

Cairbar, the ſon of Borbar-duthul, lord of Atha in Connaught, the moſt potent chief of the race of the Firbolg, having murdered, at Temora the royal palace, Cormac the ſon of Artho, the young king of Ireland, uſurped the throne. Cormac was lineally deſcended from Conar the ſon of Trenmor, the great-grandfather of Fingal, king of thoſe Caledonians who inhabited the weſtern coaſt of Scotland. Fingal reſented the behaviour of Cairbar, and reſolved to paſs over into Ireland, with an army, to reeſtabliſh the royal family on the Iriſh throne. Early intelligence of his deſigns coming to Cairbar, he aſſembled ſome of his tribes in Ulſter, and at the ſame time ordered his brother Cathmor to follow him ſpeedily with an army, from Temora. Such was the ſituation of affairs when the Caledonian fleet appeared on the coaſt of Ulſter.

The poem opens in the morning. Cairbar is repreſented as retired from the reſt of the army, when one of his ſcouts brought him news of the landing of Fingal. He aſſembles a council of his chiefs. Foldath the chief of Moma haughtily deſpiſes the enemy; and is reprimanded warmly by Malthos. Cairbar, after hearing their debate, orders a feaſt to be prepared, to which, by his bard Olla, he invites Oſcar the ſon of Oſſian; reſolving to pick a quarrel with that hero, and ſo have ſome pretext for killing him. Oſcar came to the feaſt; the quarrel happened; the followers of both fought, and Cairbar and Oſcar fell by mutual wounds. The noiſe of the battle reached Fingal's army. The king came on, to the relief of Oſcar, and the Iriſh fell back to the army of Cathmor, who was advanced to the banks of the river Lubar, on the heath of Moi-lena. Fingal after mourning over his grandſon, ordered Ullin the chief of his bards to carry his body to Morven, to be there interred. Night coming on, Althan, the ſon of Conachar, relates to the king the particulars of the murder of Cormac. Fillan, the ſon of Fingal, is ſent to obſerve the motions of Cathmor by night, which concludes the action of the firſt day. The ſcene of this book is a plain, near the hill of Mora, which roſe on the borders of the heath of Moi-lena, in Ulſter.

BOOK I.

THE blue waves of Ullin roll in light. The green hills are covered with day. Trees ſhake their duſky heads in the breeze. Gray torrents pour their noiſy ſtreams. Two green hills, with aged oaks, ſurround a narrow plain. The blue courſe of a ſtream is there; on its banks ſtood Cairbar[a] of Atha. His ſpear ſupports the king: the red eyes of his fear are ſad. Cormac riſes in his ſoul, with all his ghaſtly wounds. The gray form of his youth appears in darkneſs; blood pours from his airy ſides. Cairbar thrice threw his ſpear on earth; and thrice he ſtroked his beard. His ſteps are ſhort; he often ſtops: and toſſes his ſinewy arms. He is like a cloud in the deſart, that varies its form to every blaſt: the valleys are ſad around, and fear, by turns, the ſhower.

The king, at length, reſumed his ſoul, and took his pointed ſpear. He turned his eyes to Moi-lena. The ſcouts of blue ocean came. They came with ſteps of fear, and often looked behind. Cairbar knew that the mighty were near, and called his gloomy chiefs.

The ſounding ſteps of his warriors came. They drew, at once, their ſwords. There Morlath[b] ſtood with darkened face. Hidalla's long hair ſighs in wind. Red-haired Cormar bends on his ſpear, and rolls his ſide-long-looking eyes. Wild is the look of Malthos from beneath two ſhaggy brows. Foldath ſtands like an oozy rock, that covers its dark ſides with foam. His ſpear is like Slimora's fir, that meets the wind of heaven. His ſhield is marked with the ſtrokes of battle; and his red eye deſpiſes danger. Theſe and a thouſand other chiefs ſurrounded car-borne Cairbar, when the ſcout of ocean came. Mor-annal, from ſtreamy Moi-lena. His eyes hang forward from his face, his lips are trembling, pale.

"Do the chiefs of Erin ſtand," he ſaid, "ſilent as the grove of evening? Stand they, like a ſilent wood, and Fingal on the coaſt? Fingal, the terrible in battle, the king of ſtreamy Morven." "Haſt thou ſeen the warrior?" ſaid Cairbar with a ſigh. "Are his heroes many on the coaſt? Lifts he the ſpear of battle? Or comes the king in peace?" "In peace he comes not, Cairbar. I have ſeen his forward ſpear. [c] It is a meteor of death; the blood of thouſands is on its ſteel. He came firſt to the ſhore, ſtrong in the gray hair of age. Full roſe his ſinewy limbs, as he ſtrode in his might. That ſword is by his ſide which gives no ſecond [d] wound. His ſhield is terrible, like the bloody moon aſcending through a ſtorm. Then came Oſſian king of ſongs; and Morni's ſon, the firſt of men. Connal leaps forward on his ſpear: Dermit ſpreads his dark-brown locks. Fillan bends his bow, the young hunter of ſtreamy Moruth. But who is that before them, like the dreadful courſe of a ſtream? It is the ſon of Oſſian, bright between his locks. His long hair falls on his back. His dark brows are half-incloſed in ſteel. His ſword hangs looſe on his ſide. His ſpear glitters as he moves. I fled from his terrible eyes, king of high Temora."

"Then fly, thou feeble man," ſaid Foldath in gloomy wrath. "Fly to the gray ſtreams of thy land land, ſon of the little ſoul! Have not I ſeen that Oſcar? I beheld the chief in war. He is of the mighty in danger; but there are others who lift the ſpear. Erin has many ſons as brave, king of Temora of Groves! Let Foldath meet him in the ſtrength of his courſe, and ſtop this mighty ſtream. My ſpear is covered with the blood of the valiant; my ſhield is like the wall of Tura."

"Shall Foldath [e] alone meet the foe?" replied the dark-browed Malthos. "Are they not numerous on our coaſt, like the waters of many ſtreams? Are not theſe the chiefs who vanquiſhed Swaran, when the ſons of Erin fled? And ſhall Foldath meet their braveſt heroes? Foldath of the heart of pride! take the ſtrength of the people; and let Malthos come. My ſword is red with ſlaughter, but who has heard my words?" [f]

"Sons of green Erin," ſaid Hidalla, [g] "let not Fingal hear your words. The foe might rejoice, and his arm be ſtrong in the land. Ye are brave, O warriors, and like the ſtorms of the deſart; they meet the rocks without fear, and overturn the woods. But let us move in our ſtrength, ſlow as a gathered cloud. Then ſhall the mighty tremble; the ſpear ſhall fall from the hand of the valiant. We ſee the cloud of death, they will ſay, while ſhadows fly over their face. Fingal will mourn in his his age, and ſee his flying fame. The ſteps of his chiefs will ceaſe in Morven: the moſs of years ſhall grow in Selma."

Cairbar heard their words, in ſilence, like the cloud of a ſhower: it ſtands dark on Cromla, till the lightning burſts its ſides: the valley gleams with red light; the ſpirits of the ſtorm rejoice. So ſtood the ſilent king of Temora; at length his words are heard.

"Spread the feaſt on Moi-lena: let my hundred bards attend. Thou, red-haired Olla, take the harp of the king. Go to Oſcar chief of ſwords, and bid him to our feaſt. To-day we feaſt and hear the ſong; to-morrow break the ſpears. Tell him that I have raiſed the tomb of Cathol;[h] that bards have ſung to his ghoſt. Tell him that Cairbar has heard his fame at the ſtream of reſounding Carun.[i] Cathmor[k] is not here, Borbar-duthul's generous race. He is not here with his thouſands, and our arms are weak. Cathmor is a foe to ſtrife at the feaſt: his ſoul is bright as that ſun. But Cairbar ſhall fight with Oſcar, chiefs of the woody Temora! His words for Cathol were many; the wrath of Cairbar burns. He ſhall fall on Moi-lena: my fame ſhall riſe in blood."

Their faces brightened round with joy. They ſpread over Moi-lena. The feaſt of ſhells is prepared.

pared. The ſongs of bards ariſe. We heard [l] the voice of joy on the coaſt: we thought that mighty Cathmor came. Cathmor the friend of ſtrangers! the brother of red-haired Cairbar. Their ſouls were not the ſame. The light of heaven was in the boſom of Cathmor. His towers roſe on the banks of Atha: ſeven paths led to his halls. Seven chiefs ſtood on the paths, and called the ſtranger to the feaſt! But Cathmor dwelt in the wood to avoid the voice of praiſe.

Olla came with his ſongs. Oſcar went to Cairbar's feaſt. Three hundred warriors ſtrode along Moi-lena of the ſtreams. The gray dogs bounded on the heath, their howling reached afar. Fingal ſaw the departing hero: the ſoul of the king was ſad. He dreaded Cairbar's gloomy thoughts, amidſt the feaſt of ſhells. My ſon raiſed high the ſpear of Cormac: an hundred bards met him with ſongs. Cairbar concealed with ſmiles the death that was dark in his ſoul. The feaſt is ſpread, the ſhells reſound: joy brightens the face of the hoſt. But it was like the parting beam of the ſun, when he is to hide his red head in a ſtorm.

Cairbar roſe in his arms; darkneſs gathered on his brow. The hundred harps ceaſed at once. The clang [m] of his ſhields was heard. Far diſtant on the heath Olla raiſed his ſong of woe. My ſon knew knew the ſign of death; and riſing ſeized his ſpear. "Oſcar!" ſaid the dark-red Cairbar, I behold the ſpear [n] of Innis-fail. The ſpear of Temora [o] glitters in thy hand ſon of woody Morven! It was in the pride of an hundred [p] kings, the death of heroes of old. Yield it, ſon of Oſſian, yield it to car-borne Cairbar."

"Shall I yield," Oſcar replied, "the gift of Erin's injured king: the gift of fair-haired Cormac, when Oſcar ſcattered his foes! I came to Cormac's halls of joy, when Swaran fled from Fingal. Gladneſs roſe in the face of youth: he gave the ſpear of Temora. Nor did he give it to the feeble, O Cairbar, neither to the weak in ſoul. The darkneſs of thy face is no ſtorm to me; nor are thine eyes the flames of death. Do I fear thy clanging ſhield? Tremble I at Olla's ſong? No: Cairbar, frighten the feeble; Oſcar is a rock."

"And wilt thou not yield the ſpear?" replied the riſing pride of Cairbar. "Are thy words ſo mighty becauſe Fingal is near? Fingal with aged locks from Morven's hundred groves! He has fought with little men. But he muſt vaniſh before Cairbar, like a thin pillar of miſt before the winds of Atha [q]." "Were he who fought with little men near Atha's darkening chief: Atha's darkening chief would yield green Erin his rage.

Speak

Speak not of the mighty, O Cairbar! but turn thy ſword on me. Our ſtrength is equal: but Fingal is renowned! the firſt of mortal men!"

Their people ſaw the darkening chiefs. Their crowding ſteps are heard around. Their eyes roll in fire. A thouſand ſwords are half unſheathed. Red-haired Olla raiſed the ſong of battle: the trembling joy of Oſcar's ſoul aroſe: the wonted joy of his ſoul when Fingal's horn was heard. Dark as the ſwelling wave of ocean before the riſing winds, when it bends it head near a coaſt, came on the hoſt of Cairbar.

Daughter of Toſcar[r]! why that tear? He is not fallen yet. Many were the deaths of his arm before my hero fell!

Behold they fall before my ſon like the groves in the deſart, when an angry ghoſt ruſhes through night, and takes their green heads in his hand! Morlath falls: Maronnan dies: Conachar trembles in his blood. Cairbar ſhrinks before Oſcar's ſword; and creeps in darkneſs behind his ſtone. He lifted the ſpear in ſecret, and pierced my Oſcar's ſide. He falls forward on his ſhield: his knee ſuſtains the chief. But ſtill his ſpear in his hand. See gloomy Cairbar[s] falls! The ſteel pierced his forehead, and divided his red hair behind. H· lay, like a ſhattered rock, which Cromla ſhakes from its ſhaggy ſide. But never more ſhall Oſcar riſe! he leans on his boſſy ſhield. His ſpear is in his terrible hand: Erin's ſons ſtood diſtant and dark. Their ſhouts aroſe, like crowded ſtreams; Moi-lena echoed wide.

Fingal heard the ſound; and took his father's ſpear. His ſteps are before us on the heath. He ſpoke the words of woe." I hear the noiſe of war. Young Oſcar is alone. Riſe, ſons of Morven; join the hero's ſword."

Oſſian ruſhed along the heath. Fillan bounded over Moi-lena. Fingal ſtrode in his ſtrength, and the light of his ſhield is terrible. The ſons of Erin ſaw it far diſtant; they trembled in their ſouls. They knew that the wrath of the king aroſe: and they foreſaw their death. We firſt arrived; we fought; and Erin's chiefs withſtood our rage. But when the king came, in the ſound of his courſe, what heart of ſteel could ſtand! Erin fled over Moi lena. Death purſued their flight. We ſaw Oſcar on his ſhield. We ſaw his blood around. Silence darkened every face. Each turned his back and wept. The king ſtrove to hide his tears. His gray beard whiſtled in the wind. He bent his head above his ſon. His words were mixed with ſighs.

"And

"And art thou fallen, Oſcar, in the midſt of thy courſe? the heart of the aged beats over thee! He ſees thy coming wars. The wars which ought to come he ſees, but they are cut off from thy fame. When ſhall joy dwell at Selma? When ſhall grief depart from Morven? My ſons fall by degrees: Fingal ſhall be the laſt of his race. The fame which I have received ſhall paſs away: my age will be without friends. I ſhall ſit a gray cloud in my hall: nor ſhall I hear the return of a ſon, in the midſt of his ſounding arms. Weep, ye heroes of Morven! never more ſhall Oſcar riſe!"

And they did weep, O Fingal; dear was the hero to their ſouls. He went out to battle, and the foes vaniſhed; he returned, in peace, amidſt their joy. No father mourned his ſon ſlain in youth: no brother his brother of love. They fell, without tears, for the chief of the people was low! Bran [1] is howling at his feet: gloomy Luath is ſad, for he had often led them to the chaſe; to the bounding roe of the deſart.

When Oſcar ſaw his friends around, his breaſt aroſe with ſighs. "The groans," he ſaid, "of aged chiefs; the howling of my dogs: the ſudden burſts of ſongs of grief, have melted Oſcar's ſoul. My ſoul, that never melted before; it was like the ſteel of my ſword. Oſſian, carry me to my hills!

Raiſe the ſtones of my renown. Place the horn of the deer, and my ſword within my narrow dwelling. The torrent hereafter may raiſe the earth: the hunter may find the ſteel and ſay, "This has been Oſcar's ſword."

"And falleſt thou, ſon of my fame! And ſhall I never ſee thee, Oſcar! When others hear of their ſons, I ſhall not hear of thee. The moſs is on thy four gray ſtones; the mournful wind is there. The battle ſhall be fought without him: he ſhall not purſue the dark-brown hinds. When the warrior returns from battles, and tells of other lands; I have ſeen a tomb, he will ſay, by the roaring ſtream, the dark dwelling of a chief. He fell by the car-borne Oſcar, the firſt of mortal men. I, perhaps, ſhall hear his voice; and a beam of joy will riſe in my ſoul."

The night would have deſcended in ſorrow, and morning returned in the ſhadow of grief: our chiefs would have ſtood like cold dropping rocks on Moi-lena, and have forgot the war, did not the king diſperſe his grief, and raiſe his mighty voice. The chiefs, as new-wakened from dreams, lift up their heads around.

"How long on Moi-lena ſhall we weep; or pour our tears in Ullin? The mighty will not return. Oſcar ſhall not riſe in his ſtrength. The valiant muſt muſt fall one day, and be no more known on his hills. Where are our fathers, O warriors! the chiefs of the times of old? They have ſet like ſtars that have ſhone, we only hear the ſound of their praiſe. But they were renowned in their day, the terror of other times. Thus ſhall we paſs, O warriors, in the day of our fall. Then let us be renowned when we may; and leave our fame behind us, like the laſt beams of the ſun, when he hides his red head in the weſt. Ullin, my aged bard! take the ſhip of the king. Carry Oſcar to Selma of harps. Let the daughters of Morven weep. We ſhall fight in Erin for the race of fallen Cormac. The days of my years begin to fail: I feel the weakneſs of my arm. My fathers bend from their clouds, to receive their gray-haired ſon. But, before I go hence, one beam of fame ſhall riſe: ſo ſhall my days end, as my years begun, in fame: my life ſhall be one ſtream of light to bards of other times.

Ullin raiſed his white ſails: the wind of the ſouth came forth. He bounded on the waves towards Selma. I remained in my grief, but my words were not heard. The feaſt is ſpread on Moilena: an hundred heroes reared the tomb of Cairbar: but no ſong is raiſed over the chief: for his ſoul had been dark and bloody. The bards remembered membered the fall of Cormac! What could they ſay in Cairbar's praiſe?

The night came rolling down. The light of an hundred oaks aroſe. Fingal ſat beneath a tree. Old Althan [u] ſtood in the midſt. He told the tale of fallen Cormac. Althan the ſon of Conachar, the friend of car-borne Cuchullin: he dwelt with Cormac in windy Temora, when Semo's ſon fought with generous Torlath. The tale of Althan was mournful, and the tear was in his eye.

"The [x] ſetting ſun was yellow on Dora [y]. Gray evening began to deſcend. Temora's woods ſhook with the blaſt of the unconſtant wind. A cloud, at length, gathered in the weſt, and a red ſtar looked from behind its edge. I ſtood in the wood alone, and ſaw a ghoſt on the darkening air. His ſtride extended from hill to hill: his ſhield was dim on his ſide. It was the ſon of Semo: I knew the warrior's face. But he paſſed away in his blaſt; and all was dark around. My ſoul was ſad. I went to the hall of ſhells. A thouſand lights aroſe: the hundred bards had ſtrung the harp. Cormac ſtood in the midſt, like the morning ſtar, when it rejoices on the eaſtern hill, and its young beams are bathed in ſhowers. The ſword of Artho [z] was in the hand of the king; and he looked with joy on its poliſhed ſtuds: thrice he

ſtrove to draw it, and thrice he failed; his yellow locks are ſpread on his ſhoulders: his cheeks of youth are red. I mourned over the beam of youth, for he was ſoon to ſet.

"Althan!" he ſaid, with a ſmile, "haſt thou beheld my father? Heavy is the ſword of the king, ſurely his arm was ſtrong. O that I were like him in battle, when the rage of his wrath aroſe! then would I have met, like Cuchullin, the car-borne ſon of Cantela! But years may come on, O Althan! and my arm be ſtrong. Haſt thou heard of Semo's ſon, the chief of high Temora? He might have returned with his fame; for he promiſed to return to-night. My bards wait him with ſongs; my feaſt is ſpread in Temora."

"I heard the king in ſilence. My tears began to flow. I hid them with my aged locks; but he perceived my grief. "Son of Conachar!" he ſaid, "is the king of Tura [a] low? Why burſts thy ſigh in ſecret? And why deſcends the tear? Comes the car-borne Torlath? Or the ſound of the red-haired Cairbar? They come! for I behold thy grief. Moſſy Tura's king is low! Shall I not ruſh to battle? But I cannot lift the ſpear! O had mine arm the ſtrength of Cuchullin, ſoon would Cairbar fly; the fame of my fathers would be renewed; and the deeds of other times!"

"He

" He took his bow. The tears flow down, from both his ſparkling eyes. Grief ſaddens round: the bards bend forward, from their hundred harps. The lone blaſt touched their trembling ſtrings. The ſound [b] is ſad and low. A voice is heard at a diſtance, as of one in grief? it was Carril of other times, who came from dark Slimora [c]. He told of the death of Cuchullin, and of his mighty deeds. The people were ſcattered round his tomb: their arms lay on the ground. They had forgot the war, for he, their fire, was ſeen no more.

" But who," ſaid the ſoft-voiced Carril, " come like the bounding roes? their ſtature is like the young trees of the plain, growing in a ſhower: Soft and ruddy are their cheeks; but fearleſs ſouls look forth from their eyes? Who but the ſons of Uſnoth [d], the carborne chiefs of Etha. The people riſe on every ſide, like the ſtrength of an half-extinguiſhed fire, when the winds come, ſudden, from the deſart, on their ruſtling wings. The ſound of Caithbat's [e] ſhield was heard. The heroes ſaw Cuchullin [f] in Nathos. So rolled his ſparkling eyes: his ſteps were ſuch on the heath. Battles are fought at Lego: the ſword of Nathos prevails. Soon ſhalt thou behold him in thy halls, king of Temora of Groves."

" And

"And ſoon may I behold the chief!" replied the blue-eyed king. "But my ſoul is ſad for Cuchullin; his voice was pleaſant in mine ear. Often have we moved, on Dora, to the chaſe of the dark-brown hinds: his bow was unerring on the mountains. He ſpoke of mighty men. He told of the deeds of my fathers; and I felt my joy. But ſit thou at the feaſt, O bard, I have often heard thy voice. Sing in the praiſe of Cuchullin; and of that mighty ſtranger [g]."

"Day roſe on woody Temora, with all the beams of the eaſt. Trathin came to the hall, the ſon of old Gellama [h]. "I behold," he ſaid, "a dark cloud in the deſart, king of Innis-fail! a cloud it ſeemed at firſt, but now a crowd of men. One ſtrides before them in his ſtrength; his red hair flies in wind. His ſhield glitters to the beam of the eaſt. His ſpear is in his hand."

"Call him to the feaſt of Temora," replied the king of Erin. "My hall is the houſe of ſtrangers, ſon of the generous Gellama! Perhaps it is the chief of Etha, coming in the ſound of his renown. Hail, mighty [i] ſtranger, art thou of the friends of Cormac? But Carril, he is dark, and unlovely; and he draws his ſword. Is that the ſon of Uſnoth, bard of the times of old?"

"It is not the ſon of Uſnoth," ſaid Carril, "but the chief of Atha. Why comeſt thou in thy arms to Temora, Cairbar of the gloomy brow? Let not thy ſword riſe againſt Cormac! Whither doſt thou turn thy ſpeed?" He paſſed on in his darkneſs, and ſeized the hand of the king. Cormac foreſaw his death, and the rage of his eyes aroſe. Retire, thou gloomy chief of Atha: Nathos comes with battle. Thou art bold in Cormac's hall, for his arm is weak. The ſword entered the ſide of the king: he fell in the halls of his fathers. His fair hair is in the duſt. His blood is ſmoking round.

And art thou fallen in thy halls[k], O ſon of noble Artho? The ſhield of Cuchullin was not near. Nor the ſpear of thy father. Mournful are the mountains of Erin, for the chief of the people is low? Bleſt be thy ſoul, O Cormac! thou art darkened in thy youth."

His words came to the ears of Cairbar, and he cloſed us[m] in the midſt of darkneſs. He feared to ſtretch his ſword to the bards[n] though his ſoul was dark. Long had we pined alone: at length, the noble Cathmor[o] came. He heard our voice from the cave; he turned the eye of his wrath on Cairbar.

"Chief of Atha!" he ſaid, "how long wilt thou pain my ſoul? Thy heart is like the rock of the the deſart; and thy thoughts are dark. But thou art the brother of Cathmor, and he will fight thy battles. But Cathmor's ſoul is not like thine, thou feeble hand of war! The light of my boſom is ſtained with thy deeds: the bards will not ſing of my renown. They may ſay, Cathmor was brave, but he fought for gloomy Cairbar. They will paſs over my tomb in ſilence: my fame ſhall not be heard. Cairbar! looſe the bards: they are the ſons of other times. Their voice ſhall be heard in other years; after the kings of Temora have failed."

"We came forth at the words of the chief. We ſaw him in his ſtrength. He was like thy youth, O Fingal, when thou firſt didſt lift the ſpear. His face was like the plain of the ſun, when it is bright: no darkneſs travelled over his brow. But he came with his thouſands to Ullin; to aid the red-haired Cairbar: and now he comes to revenge his death, O king of woody Morven."

"And let him come," replied the king; "I love a foe like Cathmor. His ſoul is great; his arm is ſtrong, his battles are full of fame. But the little ſoul is a vapour that hovers round the marſhy lake: it never riſes on the green hill, leſt the winds ſhould meet it there: its dwelling is in the cave, it ſends forth the dart of death. Our young heroes, O warriors, are like the renown of our fathers. They fight in youth; they fall: their names are in the ſong. Fingal is amidſt his darkening years. He muſt not fall, as an aged oak, acroſs a ſecret ſtream. Near it are the ſteps of the hunter, as it lies beneath the wind. How has that tree fallen? He, whiſtling, ſtrides along.

"Raiſe the ſong of joy, ye bards of Morven, that our ſouls may forget the paſt. The red ſtars look on us from the clouds, and ſilently deſcend. Soon ſhall the gray beam of the morning riſe, and ſhew us the foes of Cormac. Fillan! take the ſpear of the king; go to Mora's dark-brown ſide. Let thine eyes travel over the heath, like flames of fire. Obſerve the foes of Fingal, and the courſe of generous Cathmor. I hear a diſtant ſound, like the falling of rocks in the deſart. But ſtrike thou thy ſhield at times, that they may not come through night, and the fame of Morven ceaſe. I begin to be alone, my ſon, and I dread the fall of my renown."

The voice of the bards aroſe. The king leaned on the ſhield of Trenmor. Sleep deſcended on his eyes; his future battles roſe in his dreams. The hoſt are ſleeping around. Dark-haired Fillan obſerved the foe. His ſteps are on a diſtant hill: we hear, at times, his clanging ſhield.

Father of heroes, Trenmor, shrouded in clouds, I grow thy Spear to Oscar, let thine eye rejoice.

TEMORA:

AN EPIC POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

This book opens, we may ſuppoſe, about midnight, with a ſoliloquy of Oſſian, who had retired, from the reſt of the army, to mourn for his ſon Oſcar. Upon hearing the noiſe of Cathmor's army approaching, he went to find out his brother Fillan, who kept the watch, on the hill of Mora, in the front of Fingal's army. In the converſation of his brother, the epiſode of Conar, the ſon of Trenmor, who was the firſt king of Ireland, is introduced, which lays open the origin of the conteſts between Cael and Firbolg, the two nations who firſt poſſeſſed themſelves of that iſland. Oſſian kindles a fire on Mora; upon which Cathmor deſiſted from the deſign he had formed of ſurpriſing the army of the Caledonians. He calls a council of his chiefs; reprimands Foldath for adviſing a night-attack, as the Iriſh army were ſo much ſuperior in number to the enemy. The bard Fonar introduces the ſtory of Crothar, the anceſtor of the king, which throws further light on the hiſtory of Ireland, and the original pretenſions of the family of Atha, to the throne of that kingdom. The Iriſh chiefs lie down to reſt, and Cathmor himſelf undertakes the watch. In his circuit round the army, he is met by Oſſian. The interview of the two heroes is deſcribed. Cathmor obtains a promiſe from Oſſian, to order a funeral elegy to be ſung over the grave of of Cairbar; it being the opinion of the times, that the ſouls of the dead could not be happy, till their elegies were ſung by a bard. Morning comes. Cathmor and Oſſian part; and the latter, caſually meeting with Carril the ſon of Kinfena, ſends that bard, with a funeral ſong, to the tomb of Cairbar.

BOOK II.

FATHER [a] of heroes, Trenmor! dweller of eddying winds! where the dark-red courſe of thunder marks the troubled clouds! Open thou thy ſtormy halls, and let the bards of old be near: let them draw near, with their ſongs and their half viewleſs harps. No dweller of miſty valley comes; no hunter unknown at his ſtreams; but the car-borne Oſcar from the folds of war. Sudden is thy change, my ſon, from what thou wert on dark Moi-lena! The blaſt folds thee in its ſkirt, and ruſtles along the ſky.—Doſt thou not behold thy father, at the ſtream of night? the chiefs of Morven ſleep far diſtant. They have loſt no ſon. But ye have loſt a hero, Chiefs of ſtreamy Morven! Who could equal his ſtrength, when battle rolled againſt his ſide, like the darkneſs of crowded waters?—Why this cloud in Oſſian's ſoul? It ought to burn in danger. Erin is near with her hoſt. The king of Morven is alone. Alone thou ſhalt not be, my father, while I can lift the ſpear.

I roſe,

I roſe, in my rattling arms. I liſtened to the wind of night. The ſhield of Fillan [b] is not heard. I ſhook for the ſon of Fingal. Why ſhould the foe come, by night; and the dark-haired warrior fail? Diſtant, ſullen murmurs riſe: like the noiſe of the lake of Lego, when its waters ſhrink in the days of froſt, and all its burſting ice reſounds. The people of Lara look to heaven, and foreſee the ſtorm. My ſteps are forward on the heath: the ſpear of Oſcar in my hand. Red ſtars looked from high. I gleamed, along the night. I ſaw Fillan ſilent before me, bending forward from Mora's rock. He heard the ſhout of the foe; the joy of his ſoul aroſe. He heard my ſounding tread, and turned his lifted ſpear.

"Comeſt thou, ſon of night, in peace? Or doſt thou meet thy wrath? The foes of Fingal are mine. Speak, or fear my ſteel. I ſtand, not in vain, the ſhield of Morven's race."

"Never mayſt thou ſtand in vain, ſon of blue-eyed Clatho. Fingal begins to be alone; darkneſs gathers on the laſt of his days. Yet he has two [c] ſons who ought to ſhine in war. Who ought to be two beams of light, near the ſteps of his departure."

"Son of Fingal," replied the youth, "it is not long ſince I raiſed the ſpear. Few are the marks of of my ſword in battle, but my ſoul is fire. The chiefs of Bolga [d] crowd around the ſhield of generous Cathmor. Their gathering is on that heath. Shall my ſteps approach their hoſt? I yielded to Oſcar alone, in the ſtrife of the race, on Cona."

"Fillan, thou ſhalt not approach their hoſt; nor fall before thy fame is known. My name is heard in ſong: when needful I advance. From the ſkirts of night I ſhall view their gleaming tribes. Why, Fillan, didſt thou ſpeak of Oſcar, to call forth my ſigh? I muſt forget [e] the warrior, till the ſtorm is rolled away. Sadneſs ought not to dwell in danger, nor the tear in the eye of war. Our fathers forgot their fallen ſons, till the noiſe of arms was paſt. Then ſorrow returned to the tomb, and the ſong of bards aroſe.

"Conar [f] was the brother of Trathal, firſt of mortal men. His battles were on every coaſt. A thouſand ſtreams rolled down the blood of his foes. His fame filled green Erin, like a pleaſant gale. The nations gathered in Ullin, and they bleſſed the king; the king of the race of their fathers, from the land of hinds.

"The chiefs [g] of the ſouth were gathered, in the darkneſs of their pride. In the horrid cave of Moma, they mixed their ſecret words. Thither often, they ſaid, the ſpirits of their fathers came; ſhewing ſhewing their pale forms from the chinky rocks, and reminding them of the honour of Bolga. Why ſhould Conar reign, the ſon of ſtreamy Morven?

"They came forth, like the ſtreams of the deſart, with the roar of their hundred tribes. Conar was a rock before them: broken they rolled on every ſide. But often they returned and the ſons of Ullin fell. The king ſtood, among the tombs of his warriors, and darkly bent his mournful face. His ſoul was rolled into itſelf; he marked the place where he was to fall; when Trathal came, in his ſtrength, the chief of cloudy Morven. Nor did he come alone; Colgar [h] was at his ſide; Colgar the ſon of the king and of white-boſomed Solin-corma.

"As Trenmor, clothed with meteors, deſcends from the halls of thunder, pouring the dark ſtorm before him over the troubled ſea: ſo Colgar deſcended to battle, and waſted the echoing field. His father rejoiced over the hero: but an arrow came. His tomb was raiſed, without a tear. The king was to revenge his ſon. He lightened forward in battle, till Bolga yielded at her ſtreams.

"When peace returned to the land, and his blue waves bore the king to Morven: then he remembered his ſon, and poured the ſilent tear.

Thrice did the bards, at the cave of Furmono, call the ſoul of Colgar. They called him to the hills of his land; he heard them in his miſt. Trathal placed his ſword in the cave, that the ſpirit of his ſon might rejoice.

"Colgar [i], ſon of Trathil," ſaid Fillan, "thou wert renowned in youth! But the king hath not marked my ſword, bright-ſtreaming on the field. I go forth with the crowd: I return, without my fame. But the foe approaches, Oſſian. I hear their murmur on the heath. The ſound of their ſteps is like thunder, in the boſom of the ground, when the rocking hills ſhake their groves, and not a blaſt pours from the darkened ſky."

Sudden I turned on my ſpear, and raiſed the flame of an oak on high. I ſpread it large on Mora's wind. Cathmor ſtopt in his courſe. Gleaming he ſtood, like a rock, on whoſe ſides are the wandering of blaſts; which ſeize its echoing ſtreams and clothe them over with ice. So ſtood the friend [k] of ſtrangers. The winds lift his heavy locks. Thou art the talleſt of the race of Erin, king of ſtreamy Atha!

"Firſt of bards," ſaid Cathmor, "Fonar [l], call the chiefs of Erin. Call red-haired Cormar, dark-browed Malthos, the ſide-long-looking gloom of Maronan. Let the pride of Foldath appear: the red-red-rolling eye of Turlotho. Nor let Hidalla be forgot; his voice, in danger, is like the ſound of a ſhower, when it falls in the blaſted vale, near Atha's failing ſtream."

They came, in their clanging arms. They bent forward to his voice, as if a ſpirit of their fathers ſpoke from a cloud of night. Dreadful ſhone they to the light; like the fall of the ſtream of Brumo [m], when the meteor lights it before the nightly ſtranger. Shuddering, he ſtops in his journey, and looks up for the beam of the morn.

"Why [n] delights Foldath," ſaid the king, "to pour the blood of foes, by night? Fails his arms in battle, in the beams of day? Few are the foes before us, why ſhould we clothe us in miſt? The valiant delight to ſhine, in the battles of their land. Thy council was in vain, chief of Moma; the eyes of Morven do not ſleep. They are watchful, as eagles, on their moſſy rocks. Let each collect, beneath his cloud, the ſtrength of his roaring tribe. To-morrow I move, in light, to meet the foes of Bolga! Mighty [o] was he, that is low, the race of Borbal-duthul!

"Not unmarked," ſaid Foldath, "were my ſteps before thy race. In light, I met the foes of Cairbar; the warrior praiſed my deeds. But his ſtone was raiſed without a tear? No bard ſung [p] over Erin's king; and ſhall his foes rejoice along their moſſy hills? No: they muſt not rejoice: he was the friend of Foldath. Our words were mixed, in ſecret, in Moma's ſilent cave; whilſt thou, a boy in the field, purſuedſt the thiſtle's beard. With Moma's ſons I ſhall ruſh abroad, and find the foe, on his duſky hills. Fingal ſhall lie without his ſon, the gray-haired king of Selma."

"Doſt thou think, thou feeble man," replied the chief of Atha; "doſt thou think that he can fall, without his fame, in Erin? Could the bards be ſilent, at the tomb of the mighty Fingal? The ſong would burſt in ſecret; and the ſpirit of the king rejoice. It is when thou ſhalt fall, that the bard ſhall forget the ſong. Thou art dark, chief of Moma, though thine arm is a tempeſt in war. Do I forget the king of Erin, in his narrow houſe? My ſoul is not loſt to Cairbar, the brother of my love. I marked the bright beams of joy, which travelled over his cloudy mind, when I returned, with fame, to Atha of the ſtreams."

Tall they removed, beneath the words of the king; each to his own dark tribe; where humming, they rolled on the heath, faint-glittering to the ſtars: like waves in the rocky bay, before the nightly wind. Beneath an oak, lay the chief of Atha: his ſhield, a duſky round, hung high.

Near-

Near him, againſt a rock, leaned the ſtranger [q] of Inis-huna: that beam of light, with wandering locks, from Lumon of the roes. At diſtance roſe the voice of Fonar, with the deeds of the days of old. The ſong fails, at times, in Lubar's growing roar.

"Crothar [r]," begun the bard, "firſt dwelt at Atha's moſſy ſtream. A thouſand [s] oaks, from the mountains, formed his echoing hall. The gathering of the people was there, around the feaſt of the blue-eyed king. But who, among his chiefs, was like the ſtately Crothar? Warriors kindled in his preſence. The young ſigh of the virgins roſe. In Alnecma [t] was the warrior honoured; the firſt of the race of Bolga.

"He purſued the chaſe in Ullin: on the moſs-covered top of Drumardo. From the wood looked the daughter of Cathmin, the blue-rolling eye of Con-lama. Her ſigh roſe in ſecret. She bent her head, midſt her wandering locks. The moon looked in, at night, and ſaw the white-toſſing of her arms? for ſhe thought of the mighty Crothar, in the ſeaſon of her dreams.

Three days feaſted Crothar with Cathmin. On the fourth they awaked the hinds. Con-lama moved to the chaſe, with all her lovely ſteps. She met Crothar in the narrow path. The bow, fell, at once, once, from her hand. She turned her face away, and half-hid it with her locks. The love of Crothar roſe. He brought the white-boſomed maid to Atha. Bards raiſed the ſong in her preſence; joy dwelt round the daughter of Ullin.

"The pride of Torloch roſe, a youth who loved the white-handed Con-lama. He came, with battle, to Alnecma; to Atha of the roes. Cormul went forth to the ſtrife, the brother of car-borne Crotha. He went forth, but he fell, and the ſigh of his people roſe. Silent and tall, acroſs the ſtream, came the darkening ſtrength of Crothar: He rolled the foe from Alnecma, and returned, midſt the joy of Con-lama.

"Battle on battle comes. Blood is poured on blood. The tombs of the valiant riſe. Erin's clouds are hung round with ghoſts. The chiefs of the ſouth gathered round the echoing ſhield of Crothar. He came with death to the paths of the foe. The virgins wept, by the ſtreams of Ullin. They looked on the miſt of the hill, no hunter deſcended from its folds. Silence darkened in the land: blaſts ſighed lonely on graſſy tombs.

"Deſcending like the eagle of heaven, with all his ruſtling wings, when he forſakes the blaſt with joy, the ſon of Trenmor came; Conar, arm of death, from Morven of the groves. He poured his his might along green Erin. Death dimly ſtrode behind his ſword. The ſons of Bolga fled, from his courſe, as from a ſtream, that burſting from the ſtormy deſart, rolls the fields together, with all their echoing woods. Crothar [u] met him in battle: but Alnecma's warriors fled. The king of Atha ſlowly retired, in the grief of his ſoul. He, afterwards, ſhone in the ſouth; but dim as the ſun of autumn; when he viſits, in his robes of miſt, Lara of dark ſtreams. The withered graſs is covered with dew: the field, though bright, is ſad."

"Why wakes the bard before me," ſaid Cathmor, "the memory of thoſe who fled? Has ſome ghoſt, from his duſky cloud, bent forward to thine ear; to frighten Cathmor from the field with the tales of old? Dwellers of the folds of night, your voice is but a blaſt to me; which takes the gray thiſtle's head, and ſtrews its beard on ſtreams. Within my boſom is a voice; others hear it not. His ſoul forbids the king of Erin to ſhrink back from war."

Abaſhed the bard ſhrinks back in night: retired, he bends above a ſtream, his thoughts are on the days of Atha, when Cathmor heard his ſong with joy. His tears come rolling down: the winds are in his beard.

Erin

Erin ſleeps around. No ſleep comes down on Cathmor's eyes. Dark, in his ſoul, he ſaw the ſpirit of low-laid Cairbar. He ſaw him, without his ſong, rolled in a blaſt of night. He roſe. His ſteps were round the hoſt. He ſtruck, at times, his echoing ſhield. The ſound reached Oſſian's ear, on Mora of the hinds.

"Fillan," I ſaid, "the foes advance. I hear the ſhield of war. Stand thou in the narrow path. Oſſian ſhall mark their courſe. If over my fall the hoſt ſhall pour; then be thy buckler heard. Awake the king on his heath, leſt his fame ſhould ceaſe." I ſtrode, in all my rattling arms; wide-bounding over a ſtream that darkly winded, in the field, before the king of Atha. Green Atha's king, with lifted ſpear, came forward on my courſe. Now would we have mixed in horrid fray, like two contending ghoſts, that bending forward, from two clouds, ſend forth the roaring winds; did not Oſſian behold, on high, the helmet of Erin's kings. The eagle's wing ſpread above it, ruſtling in the breeze. A red ſtar looked through the plumes. I ſtopt the lifted ſpear.

"The helmet of kings is before me! Who art thou ſon of night? Shall Oſſian's ſpear be renowned, when thou art lowly-laid?" At once he dropt the gleaming lance. Growing before me ſeemed

the form. He ſtretched his hand in night; and ſpoke the words of kings.

"Friend of the ſpirit of heroes, do I meet thee thus in ſhades? I have wiſhed for thy ſtately ſteps in Atha, in the days of feaſts. Why ſhould my ſpear now ariſe? The ſun muſt behold us, Oſſian; when we bend, gleaming, in the ſtrife. Future warriors ſhall mark the place: and, ſhuddering, think of other years. They ſhall mark it, like the haunt of ghoſts, pleaſant and dreadful to the ſoul."

"And ſhall it be forgot," I ſaid, "where we meet in peace? Is the remembrance of battles always pleaſant to the ſoul? Do not we behold, with joy, the place where our fathers feaſted? But our eyes are full of tears, on the field of their wars. This ſtone ſhall riſe, with all its moſs, and ſpeak to other years. Here Cathmor and Oſſian met! the warriors met in peace! When thou, O ſtone, ſhalt fail: and Lubar's ſtream roll quite away! then ſhall the traveller come, and bend here, perhaps, in reſt. When the darkened moon is rolled over his head, our ſhadowy forms may come, and, mixing with his dreams, remind him of this place. But why turneſt thou ſo dark away, ſon of Borbarduthul [x]?"

"Not forgot, ſon of Fingal, ſhall we aſcend theſe winds. Our deeds are ſtreams of light, before the eyes of bards. But darkneſs is rolled on Atha: the king is low, without his ſong: ſtill there was a beam towards Cathmor from his ſtormy ſoul; like the moon, in a cloud, amidſt the dark-red courſe of thunder."

"Son of Erin," I replied, "my wrath dwells not in this houſe [y]. My hatred flies, on eagle-wing, from the foe that is low. He ſhall hear the ſong of bards; Cairbar ſhall rejoice on his winds."

Cathmor's ſwelling ſoul aroſe: he took the dagger from his ſide; and placed it gleaming in my hand. He placed it, in my hand, with ſighs, and, ſilent, ſtrode away. Mine eyes followed his departure. He dimly gleamed, like the form of a ghoſt, which meets a traveller by night, on the dark-ſkirted heath. His words are dark like ſongs of old: with morning ſtrides the unfiniſhed ſhade away.

Who [z] comes from Lubar's vale? From the folds of the morning miſt? The drops of heaven are on his head. His ſteps are in the paths of the ſad. It is Carril of other times. He comes from Tura's ſilent cave. I behold it dark in the rock, through the thin folds of miſt. There, perhaps, Cuchullin ſits, on the blaſt which bend its trees. Pleaſant is the ſong of the morning from the bard of Erin!

"The waves crowd away for fear: they hear the ſound of thy coming forth, O ſun! Terrible is thy beauty, ſon of heaven, when death is folded in thy locks; when thou rolleſt thy vapours before thee, over the blaſted hoſt. But pleaſant is thy beam to the hunter, ſitting by the rock in a ſtorm, when thou lookeſt from thy parted cloud, and brighteneſt his dewy locks; he looks down on the ſtreamy vale, and beholds the deſcent of roes. How long ſhalt thou riſe on war, and roll, a bloody ſhield, through heaven? I ſee the deaths of heroes dark-wandering over thy face!"

"Why wander the words of Carril! does the ſon of heaven mourn! he is unſtained in his courſe, ever rejoicing in his fire. Roll on, thou careleſs light; thou too, perhaps, muſt fall. Thy dun robe [a] may ſeize thee, ſtruggling, in the ſky.

"Pleaſant is the voice of the ſong, O Carril, to Oſſian's ſoul! It is like the ſhower of the morning, when it comes through the ruſtling vale, on which the ſun looks through miſt, juſt riſing from his rocks. But this is no time, O bard, to ſit down, at the ſtrife of ſong. Fingal is in arms on the vale. Thou ſeeſt the flaming ſhield of the king. His face darkens between his locks. He beholds the wide rolling of Erin.

"Does not Carril behold that tomb, beſide the roaring ſtream? Three ſtones lift their gray heads, beneath a bending oak. A king is lowly laid: give thou his ſoul to the wind. He is the brother of Cathmor! open his airy hall. Let thy ſong be a ſtream of joy to Cairbar's darkened ghoſt."

He struck again the shield.

TEMORA:

AN EPIC POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

Morning coming on, Fingal, after a ſpeech to his people, devolves the command on Gaul, the ſon of Morni; it being the cuſtom of the times, that the king ſhould not engage, till the neceſſity of affairs required his ſuperior valour and conduct. The king and Oſſian retire to the rock of Cormul, which overlooked the field of battle. The bards ſung the war-ſong. The general conflict is deſcribed. Gaul, the ſon of Morni, diſtinguiſhes himſelf; kills Tur-lathon, chief of Moruth, and other chiefs of leſſer name. On the other hand, Foldath, who commanded the Iriſh army (for Cathmor, after the example of Fingal, kept himſelf from battle) fights gallantly; kills Connal, chief of Dunlora, and advances to engage Gaul himſelf. Gaul, in the mean time, being wounded in the hand, by a random arrow, is covered by Fillan, the ſon of Fingal, who performs prodigies of valour. Night comes on. The horn of Fingal recalls his army. The bards meet them, with a congratulary ſong, in which the praiſes of Gaul and Fillan are particularly celebrated. The chiefs ſit down at a feaſt; Fingal miſſes Connal. The epiſode of Connal and Duthcaron is introduced; which throws further light on the ancient hiſtory of Ireland. Carril is diſpatched to raiſe the tomb of Connal.

ARGUMENT.

The action of this book takes up the ſecond day, from the opening of the poem.

BOOK III.

WHO is that, at blue-ſtreaming Lubar; by the bending hill of the roes? Tall, he leans on an oak torn from high, by nightly winds. Who but Comhal's ſon, brightening in the laſt of his fields? His gray hair is on the breeze: he half unſheathes the ſword of Luno. His eyes are turned to Moi-lena, to the dark rolling of foes. Doſt thou hear the voice of the king? It is like the burſting of a ſtream, in the deſart, when it comes between its echoing rocks, to the blaſted field of the ſun.

"Wide-ſkirted comes down the foe! Sons of woody Morven, ariſe. Be ye like the rocks of my land, on whoſe brown ſides are the rolling of waters. A beam of joy comes on my ſoul; I ſee them mighty before me. It is when the foe is feeble, that the ſighs of Fingal are heard; leſt death ſhould come, without renown, and darkneſs dwell on his tomb. Who ſhall lead the war, againſt the hoſt of Alnecma? It is only when danger grows, that my ſword ſhall ſhine. Such was the cuſtom, heretofore, of Trenmor the ruler of winds:

winds: and thus deſcended to battle the blue-ſhielded Trathal."

The chiefs bend towards the king: each darkly ſeems to claim the war. They tell, by halves, their mighty deeds: and turn their eyes on Erin. But far before the reſt the ſon of Morni ſtood: ſilent he ſtood, for who had not heard of the battles of Gaul? They roſe within his ſoul. His hand, in ſecret, ſeized the ſword. The ſword which he brought from Strumon, when the ſtrength of Morni failed [a].

On his ſpear ſtood the ſon of Clatho [b] in the wandering of his locks. Thrice he raiſed his eyes to Fingal: his voice thrice failed him, as he ſpoke. Fillan could not boaſt of battles; at once he ſtrode away. Bent over a diſtant ſtream he ſtood: the tear hung in his eye. He ſtruck, at times, the thiſtle's head, with his inverted ſpear.

Nor is he unſeen of Fingal. Sidelong he beheld his ſon. He beheld him, with burſting joy; and turned, amidſt his crowded ſoul. In ſilence turned the king towards Mora of woods. He hid the big tear with his locks. At length his voice is heard.

"Firſt of the ſons of Morni; thou rock that defieſt the ſtorm! Lead thou my battle, for the race of low-laid Cormac. No boy's ſtaff is thy ſpear: no no harmleſs beam of light thy ſword. Son of Morni of ſteeds, behold the foe; deſtroy. Fillan, obſerve the chief: he is not calm in ſtrife: nor burns he, heedleſs, in battle; my ſon, obſerve the king. He is ſtrong as Lubar's ſtream, but never foams and roars. High on cloudy Mora, Fingal ſhall behold the war. Stand, Oſſian [c], near thy father, by the falling ſtream. Raiſe the voice, O bards; Morven, move beneath the ſound. It is my latter field; clothe it over with light."

As the ſudden riſing of winds; or diſtant rolling of troubled ſeas, when ſome dark ghoſt, in wrath, heaves the billows over an iſle, the ſeat of miſt, on the deep, for many dark-brown years: ſo terrible is the ſound of the hoſt, wide-moving over the field. Gaul is tall before them: the ſtreams glitter within his ſtrides. The bards raiſed the ſong by his ſide; he ſtruck his ſhield between. On the ſkirts of the blaſt, the tuneful voices roſe.

On Crona, ſaid the bards, there burſts a ſtream by night. It ſwells, in its own dark courſe, till morning's early beam. Then comes it white from the hill, with the rocks and their hundred groves. Far be my ſteps from Crona: Death is tumbling there. Be ye a ſtream from Mora, ſons of cloudy Morven."

"Who

"Who riſes, from his car, on Clutha? the hills are troubled before the king! The dark woods echo round, and lighten at his ſteel. See him, amidſt the foe, like Colgach's [d] ſportful ghoſt; when he ſcatters the clouds, and rides the eddying wings! It is Morni [e] of the bounding ſteeds! Be like thy father, Gaul!

"Selma is opened wide. Bards take the trembling harps. Ten youths carry the oak of the feaſt. A diſtant ſun-beam marks the hill. The duſky waves of the blaſt fly over the fields of graſs. Why art thou ſo ſilent, Morven? The king returns with all his fame. Did not the battle roar; yet peaceful is his brow? It roared, and Fingal overcame. Be like thy father, Fillan."

They moved beneath the ſong. High waved their arms, as ruſhy fields, beneath autumnal winds. On Mora ſtood the king in arms. Miſt flies round his buckler broad, as, aloft, it hung on a bough, on Cormul's moſſy rock. In ſilence I ſtood by Fingal, and turned my eyes on Cromla's [f] wood: leſt I ſhould behold the hoſt, and ruſh amidſt my ſwelling ſoul. My foot is forward on the heath. I glittered, tall, in ſteel: like the falling ſtream of Tromo, which nightly winds bind over with ice. The boy ſees it, on high, gleaming to the early beam: towards it he turns his ear, and wonders why its ſo ſilent.

Nor bent over a ſtream is Cathmor, like a youth in a peaceful field: wide he drew forward the war, a dark and troubled wave. But when he beheld Fingal on Mora, his generous pride aroſe. "Shall the chief of Atha fight, and no king in the field? Foldath, lead my people forth. Thou art a beam of fire."

Forth iſſued the chief of Moma, like a cloud, the robe of ghoſts. He drew his ſword, a flame, from his ſide; and bade the battle move. The tribes, like ridgy waves, dark pour their ſtrength around. Haughty is his ſtride before them: his red eye rolls in wrath. He called the chief of Dunratho [5]; and his words were heard.

"Cormul, thou beholdeſt that path. It winds green behind the foe. Place thy people there; leſt Morven ſhould eſcape from my ſword. Bards of green-valleyed Erin, let no voice of yours ariſe. The ſons of Morven muſt fall without ſong. They are the foes of Cairbar. Hereafter ſhall the traveller meet their dark, thick miſt on Lena, where it wanders, with their ghoſts, beſide the reedy lake. Never ſhall they riſe, without ſong, to the dwelling of winds."

Cormul

Cormul darkened, as he went: behind him ruſhed his tribe. They ſunk beyond the rock: Gaul ſpoke to Fillan of Moruth; as his eye purſued the courſe of the dark-eyed king of Dunratho. "Thou beholdeſt the ſteps of Cormul; let thine arm be ſtrong. When he is low, ſon of Fingal, remember Gaul in war. Here I fall forward into battle, amidſt the ridge of ſhields."

The ſign of death aroſe: the dreadful ſound of Morni's ſhield. Gaul poured his voice between. Fingal roſe, high on Mora. He ſaw them, from wing to wing, bending in the ſtrife. Gleaming, on his own dark hill, the ſtrength of Atha ſtood. They were like two ſpirits of heaven, ſtanding each on his gloomy cloud; when they pour abroad the winds, and lift the roaring ſeas. The blue-tumbling of waves is before them, marked with the paths of whales. Themſelves are calm and bright; and the gale lifts their locks of miſt.

What beam of light hangs high in air? It is Morni's dreadful ſword. Death is ſtrewed on thy paths, O Gaul; thou foldeſt them together in thy rage. Like a young oak falls Tur-lathon [h], with his branches round him. His high-boſomed ſpouſe ſtretches her white arms, in dreams, to the returning king, as ſhe ſleeps by gurgling Moruth, in her diſordered locks. It is his ghoſt, Oichoma; the chief is lowly laid. Hearken not to the winds for Tur-lathon's echoing ſhield. It is pierced, by his ſtreams, and its ſound is paſt away.

Not peaceful is the hand of Foldath: he winds his courſe in blood. Connal met him in fight; they mixed their clanging ſteel. Why ſhould mine eyes behold them! Connal, thy locks are gray. Thou wert the friend of ſtrangers, at the moſs-covered rock of Dunlora. When the ſkies were rolled together; then thy feaſt was ſpread. The ſtranger heard the winds without; and rejoiced at thy burning oak. Why, ſon of Duth-caron, art thou laid in blood! The blaſted tree bends above thee: thy ſhield lies broken near. Thy blood mixes with the ſtream; thou breaker of the ſhields!

I took the ſpear, in my wrath; but Gaul ruſhed forward on the foe. The feeble paſs by his ſide; his rage is turned on Moma's chief. Now they had raiſed their dreadful ſpears: unſeen an arrow came. It pierced the hand of Gaul; his ſteel fell ſounding to earth. Young Fillan came [i], with Cormul's ſhield, and ſtretched it large before the king. Foldath ſent his ſhout abroad, and kindled all the field: as a blaſt that lifts the broad-winged flame, over Lumon's [k] echoing groves.

"Son of blue-eyed Clatho," ſaid Gaul, "thou art a beam from heaven; that coming on the troubled bled deep, binds up the tempeſt's wing. Cormul is fallen before thee. Early art thou in the fame of thy fathers. Ruſh not too far, my hero, I cannot lift the ſpear to aid. I ſtand harmleſs in battle: but my voice ſhall be poured abroad. The ſons of Morven ſhall hear, and remember my former deeds."

His terrible voice roſe on the wind, the hoſt bend forward in the fight. Often had they heard him at Strumon, when he called them to the chaſe of the hinds.—Himſelf ſtood tall, amidſt the war, as an oak in the ſkirts of a ſtorm, which now is clothed, on high, in miſt: then ſhews its broad, waving head; the muſing hunter lifts his eye from his own ruſhy field.

My ſoul purſues thee, O Fillan, through the path of thy fame. Thou rolledſt the foe before thee. Now Foldath, perhaps, would fly; but night came down with its clouds; and Cathmor's horn was heard. The ſons of Morven heard the voice of Fingal, from Mora's gathered miſt. The bards poured their ſong, like dew, on the returning war.

"Who comes from Strumon," they ſaid, "amidſt her wandering locks? She is mournful in her ſteps, and lifts her blue eyes towards Erin. Why art thou ſad, Evirchoma[1]? Who is like thy chief in renown? He deſcended dreadful to battle; he he returns, like a light from a cloud. He lifted the ſword in wrath: they ſhrunk before blue-ſhielded Gaul!

"Joy, like the ruſtling gale, comes on the ſoul of the king. He remembers the battles of old; the days, wherein his fathers fought. The days of old return on Fingal's mind, as he beholds the renown of his ſon. As the ſun rejoices, from his cloud, over the tree his beams have raiſed, as it ſhakes its lonely head on the heath; ſo joyful is the king over Fillan.

"As the rolling of thunder on hills, when Lara's fields are ſtill and dark, ſuch are the ſteps of Morven pleaſant and dreadful to the ear. They return with their ſound, like eagles to their dark-browed rock, after the prey is torn on the field, the dun ſons of the bounding hind. Your fathers rejoice from their clouds, ſons of ſtreamy Cona."

Such was the nightly voice of bards, on Mora of the hinds. A flame roſe, from an hundred oaks, which winds had torn from Cormul's ſteep. The feaſt is ſpread in the midſt: around ſat the gleaming chiefs. Fingal is there in his ſtrength; the eagle-wing [m] of his helmet ſounds: the ruſtling blaſts of the weſt, unequal ruſhed through night. Long looked the king in ſilence round: at length his words were heard.

"My

" My ſoul feels a want in our joy. I behold a breach among my friends. The head of one tree is low: the ſqually wind pours in on Selma. Where is the chief of Dun-lora! Ought he to be forgot at the feaſt? When did he forget the ſtranger, in the midſt of his echoing hall? Ye are ſilent in my preſence! Connal is then no more. Joy meet thee, O warrior, like a ſtream of light. Swift be thy courſe to thy fathers, in the folds of the mountain-winds. Oſſian, thy ſoul is fire: kindle the memory of the king. Awake the battles of Connal, when firſt he ſhone in war. The locks of Connal were gray; his days of youth [n] were mixed with mine. In one day Duth-caron firſt ſtrung our bows againſt the roes of Dunlora."

" Many," I ſaid, " are our paths to battle, in green-hilled Innis-fail. Often did our ſails ariſe, over the blue-tumbling waters; when we came, in other days, to aid the race of Conar. The ſtrife roared once in Alnecma, at the foam-covered ſtreams of Duth-ula [o]. With Cormac deſcended to battle Duth-caron from cloudy Morven. Nor deſcended Duth-caron alone, his ſon was by his ſide, the long-haired youth of Connal, lifting the firſt of his ſpears. Thou didſt command them, O Fingal, to aid the king of Erin.

" Like the burſting ſtrength of a ſtream, the ſons of Bolga ruſhed to war: Colc-ulla [p] was before fore them, the chief of blue-ſtreaming Atha. The battle was mixed on the plain, like the meeting of two ſtormy ſeas. Cormac [q] ſhone in his own ſtrife, bright as the forms of his fathers. But, far before the reſt, Duth-caron hewed down the foe. Nor ſlept the arm of Connal, by his father's ſide. Atha prevailed on the plain: like ſcattered miſt, fled the people of Ullin [r].

"Then roſe the ſword of Duth-caron, and the ſteel of broad-ſhielded Connal. They ſhaded their flying friends, like two rocks, with their heads of pine. Night came down on Duth-ula: ſilent ſtrode the chiefs over the field. A mountain ſtream roared acroſs the path, nor could Duth-caron bound over its courſe. Why ſtands my father?" ſaid Connal, "I hear the ruſhing foe."

"Fly, Connal," he ſaid; "thy father's ſtrength begins to fail. I come wounded from battle; here let me reſt in night. "But thou ſhalt not remain alone, ſaid Connal's burſting ſigh. My ſhield is an eagle's wing to cover the king of Dun-lora." He bends dark above the chief: the mighty Duth-caron dies.

"Day roſe, and night returned. No lonely bard appeared, deep-muſing on the heath: and could Connal leave the tomb of his father, till he ſhould receive his fame? He bent the bow againſt the the roes of Duth-ula; he ſpread the lonely feaſt. Seven nights he laid his head on the tomb, and ſaw his father in his dreams. He ſaw him rolled dark, in a blaſt, like the vapour of reedy Lego.—At length the ſteps of Colgan [s] came, the bard of high Temora. Duth-caron received his fame, and brightened, as he roſe on the wind."

"Pleaſant to the ear," ſaid Fingal, "is the praiſe of the kings of men; when their bows are ſtrong in battle; when they ſoften at the ſight of the ſad. Thus let my name be renowned, when bards ſhall lighten my riſing ſoul. Carril, ſon of Kinfena; take the bards and raiſe a tomb. To-night let Connal dwell, within his narrow houſe: let not the ſoul of the valiant wander on the winds. Faint glimmers the moon on Moi-lena, through the broad-headed groves of the hill: raiſe ſtones, beneath its beams, to all the fallen in war. Though no chiefs were they, yet their hands were ſtrong in fight. They were my rock in danger: the mountain from which I ſpread my eagle-wings. Thence am I renowned: Carril forget not the low."

Loud, at once, from the hundred bards, roſe the ſong of the tomb. Carril ſtrode before them; they are the murmur of ſtreams behind him. Silence dwells in the vales of Moi-lena, where each, with its own dark ſtream, is winding between the hills. I heard the voice of the bards, leſſening, as they moved along. I leaned forward from my ſhield; and felt the kindling of my ſoul. Half-formed the words of my ſong, burſt forth upon the wind. So hears a tree, on the vale, the voice of ſpring around: it pours its green leaves to the ſun, and ſhakes its lonely head. The hum of the mountain bee is near it; the hunter ſees it, with joy, from the blaſted heath.

Young Fillan, at a diſtance ſtood. His helmet lay glittering on the ground: His dark hair is looſe to the blaſt: a beam of light is Clatho's ſon. He heard the words of the king with joy; and leaned forward on his ſpear.

"My ſon," ſaid car-borne Fingal; "I ſaw thy deeds, and my ſoul was glad. The fame of our fathers, I ſaid, burſts from its gathered cloud. Thou art brave, ſon of Clatho; but headlong in the ſtrife. So did no Fingal advance, though he never feared a foe. Let thy people be a ridge behind; they are thy ſtrength in the field. Then ſhalt thou be long renowned, and behold the tombs of thy fathers. The memory of the paſt returns, my deeds in other years: when firſt I deſcended from ocean on the green-valleyed iſle. We bend towards the voice of the king. The moon looks abroad from her cloud. The gray-ſkirted miſt is near, the dwelling of the ghoſts.

AN EPIC POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

The ſecond night continues. Fingal relates, at the feaſt, his own firſt expedition into Ireland, and his marriage with Ros-crana, the daughter of Cormac, king of that iſland. The Iriſh chiefs convene in the preſence of Cathmor. The ſituation of the king deſcribed. The ſtory of Sul-malla, the daughter of Conmor, king of Inis-huna, who, in the diſguiſe of a young warrior, had followed Cathmor to the war. The ſullen behaviour of Foldath, who had commanded in the battle of the preceding day, renews the difference between him and Malthos; but Cathmor, interpoſing, ends it. The chiefs feaſt, and hear the ſong of Fonar the bard. Cathmor returns to reſt, at a diſtance from the army. The ghoſt of his brother Cairbar appears to him in a dream; and obſcurely foretels the iſſue of the war. The ſoliloquy of the king. He diſcovers Sul-malla. Morning comes. Her ſoliloquy cloſes the book.

BOOK IV.

"BENEATH[a] an oak," ſaid the king, "I ſat on Selma's ſtreamy rock, when Connal roſe, from the ſea, with the broken ſpear of Duth-caron. Far-diſtant ſtood the youth, and turned away his eyes; for he remembered the ſteps of his father, on his own green hills. I darkened in my place: duſky thoughts rolled over my ſoul. The kings of Erin roſe before me. I half-unſheathed my ſword. Slowly approached the chiefs; they lifted up their ſilent eyes. Like a ridge of clouds, they wait for the burſting forth of my voice: it was to them, a wind from heaven, to roll the miſt away.

"I bade my white ſails to riſe, before the roar of Cona's wind. Three hundred youths looked, from their waves, on Fingal's boſſy ſhield. High on the maſt it hung, and marked the dark-blue ſea. But when the night came down, I ſtruck, at times, the warning boſs: I ſtruck, and looked on high, for fiery-haired Ul-erin [b]. Nor wanting was the ſtar of heaven: It travelled red between the clouds: I purſued the lovely beam, on the faint-gleaming deep. With morning, Erin roſe in miſt. We came into the bay of Moi-lena, when its blue waters tumbled, in the boſom of echoing woods. Here Cormac, in his ſecret hall, avoided the ſtrength of Col-culla. Nor he alone avoids the foe: the blue eye of Ros-crana is there: Ros-crana [c], white-handed maid, the daughter of the king.

"Gray,

" Gray, on his pointleſs ſpear, came forth the aged ſteps of Cormac. He ſmiled, from his waving locks, but grief was in his ſoul. He ſaw us few before him, and his ſigh aroſe. " I ſee the arms of Trenmor," he ſaid; " and theſe are the ſteps of the king: Fingal! thou art a beam of light to Cormac's darkened ſoul. Early is thy fame, my ſon: but ſtrong are the foes of Erin. They are like the roar of ſtreams in the land, ſon of carborne Comhal."

" Yet they may be rolled [d] away," I ſaid, in my riſing ſoul. " We are not of the race of the feeble, king of blue-ſhielded hoſts. Why ſhould fear come amongſt us, like a ghoſt of night? The ſoul of the valiant grows, as foes increaſe in the field. Roll no darkneſs, king of Erin, on the young in war."

" The burſting tears of the king came down. He ſeized my hand in ſilence. " Race of the daring Trenmor, I roll no cloud before thee. Thou burneſt in the fire of thy fathers. I behold thy fame. It marks thy courſe in battles, like a ſtream of light. But wait the coming of Cairbar [e]: my ſon muſt join thy ſword. He calls the ſons of Ullin, from all their diſtant ſtreams."

" We came to the hall of the king, when it roſe in the midſt of rocks: rocks, on whoſe dark ſides, were the marks of ſtreams of old. Broad oaks bend bend around with their moſs: the thick birch waves its green head. Half-hid, in her ſhady grove, Ros-crana raiſed the ſong. Her white hands roſe on the harp. I beheld her blue-rolling eyes. She was like a ſpirit [f] of heaven half-folded in the ſkirt of a cloud.

"Three days we feaſted at Moi-lena; ſhe roſe bright amidſt my troubled ſoul. Cormac beheld me dark. He gave the white boſomed maid. She came with bending eye, amidſt the wandering of her heavy locks. She came. Straight the battle roared. Colc-ulla ruſhed; I ſeized my ſpear. My ſword roſe, with my people, againſt the ridgy foe. Alnecma fled. Colc-ulla fell. Fingal returned with fame.

"He is renowned, O Fillan, who fights, in the ſtrength of his people. The bard purſues his ſteps, through the land of the foe. But he who fights alone; few are his deeds to other times. He ſhines, to-day, a mighty light. To-morrow, he is low. One ſong contains his fame. His name is on one field. He is forgot, but where his tomb ſends forth the tufts of graſs."

Such were the words of Fingal, on Mora of the roes. Three bards, from the rock of Cormul, poured down the pleaſant ſong. Sleep deſcended, in the ſound, on the broad-ſkirted hoſt. Carril returned, returned, with the bards, from the tomb of Dunlora's king. The voice of morning ſhall not come, to the duſky bed of the hero. No more ſhalt thou hear the tread of roes, around thy narrow houſe.

As roll the troubled clouds, round a meteor of night, when they brighten their ſides, with its light, along the heaving ſea: ſo gathered Erin, around the gleaming form of Atha's king. He, tall in the midſt, careleſs lifts, at times, his ſpear: as ſwells or falls the ſound of Fonar's diſtant harp. Near [g] him leaned, againſt a rock, Sul-malla [h] of blue eyes, the white-boſomed daughter of Conmor king of Inis-huna. To his aid came blue-ſhielded Cathmor, and rolled his foes away. Sul-malla beheld him ſtately in the hall of feaſts; nor careleſs rolled the eyes of Cathmor on the long-haired maid.

The third day aroſe, and Fithil [i] came from Erin of the ſtreams. He told of the lifting up of the ſhield [k] on Morven, and the danger of the red-haired Cairbar. Cathmor raiſed the ſail at Cluba; but the winds were in other lands. Three days he remained on the coaſt, and turned his eyes on Conmor's halls. He remembered the daughter of ſtrangers, and his ſigh aroſe. Now when the winds awaked the wave: from the hill came a youth in arms; to lift the ſword with Cathmor in his echoing field. It was the white-armed Sul-malla: ſecret ſhe dwelt beneath her helmet. Her ſteps were in the path of the king; on him her blue eyes rolled with joy, when he lay by his roaring ſtreams. But Cathmor thought, that, on Lumon, ſhe ſtill purſued the roes: or fair on a rock, ſtretched her white hand to the wind; to feel its courſe from Inis-fail the green dwelling of her love. He had promiſed to return, with his white-boſomed ſails. The maid is near thee, king of Atha, leaning on her rock.

The tall forms of the chiefs ſtood around: all but dark-browed Foldath [l]. He ſtood beneath a diſtant tree, rolled into his haughty ſoul. His buſhy hair whiſtles in wind. At times, burſts the hum of a ſong. He ſtruck the tree, at length, in wrath; and ruſhed before the king. Calm and ſtately, to the beam of the oak, aroſe the form of young Hidalla. His hair falls round his bluſhing cheek, in wreaths of waving light. Soft was his voice in Clon-ra [m], in the valley of his fathers; when he touched the harp, in the hall, near his roaring ſtreams.

"King of Erin," ſaid the youth, "now is the time of feaſts. Bid the voice of bards ariſe, and roll the night away. The ſoul returns, from ſong, more terrible to war. Darkneſs ſettles on Inis-fail:

fail: from hill to hill bend the ſkirted clouds. Far and gray, on the heath, the dreadful ſtrides of ghoſts are ſeen: the ghoſts of thoſe who fell bend forward to their ſong. Bid thou the harps to riſe, and brighten the dead, on their wandering blaſts."

"Be all the dead forgot," ſaid Foldath's burſting wrath. "Did not I fail in the field, and ſhall I hear the ſong? Yet was not my courſe harmleſs in battle: blood was a ſtream around my ſteps. But the feeble were behind me, and the foe has eſcaped my ſword. In Clon-ra's vale touch thou the harp; let Dura anſwer to thy voice; while ſome maid looks, from the wood, on thy long, yellow locks. Fly from Lubar's echoing plain; it is the field of heroes."

"King of Temora[n]," Malthos ſaid, "it is thine to lead in war. Thou art a fire to our eyes, on the dark-brown field. Like a blaſt thou haſt paſt over hoſts, and laid them low in blood; but who has heard thy words returning from the field? The wrathful delight in death: their remembrance reſts on the wounds of their ſpear. Strife is folded in their thoughts: their words are ever heard. Thy courſe, chief of Moma, was like a troubled ſtream. The dead were rolled on thy path: but others alſo lift the ſpear. We were not feeble behind thee, but the foe was ſtrong."

The king beheld the riſing rage, and bending forward of either chief: for half-unſheathed, they held their ſwords, and rolled their ſilent eyes. Now would they have mixed in horrid fray, had not the wrath of Cathmor burned. He drew his ſword: it gleaned through night, to the high-flaming oak. "Sons of pride," ſaid the king, "allay your ſwelling ſouls. Retire in night. Why ſhould my rage ariſe? Should I contend with both in arms? It is no time for ſtrife. Retire, ye clouds at my feaſt. Awake my ſoul no more."

They ſunk from the king on either ſide; like [o] two columns of morning miſt, when the ſun riſes, between them, on his glittering rocks. Dark is their rolling on either ſide; each towards its reedy pool.

Silent ſat the chiefs at the feaſt. They looked, at times, on Atha's king, where he ſtrode, on his rock, amidſt his ſettling ſoul. The hoſt lay, at length, on the field: ſleep deſcended on Moi-lena. The voice of Fonar roſe alone, beneath his diſtant tree. It roſe in the praiſe of Cathmor ſon of Larthon [p] of Lumon. But Cathmor did not hear his praiſe. He lay at the roar of a ſtream. The ruſtling breeze of night flew over his whiſtling locks.

Cairbar came to his dreams, half-ſeen from his low-hung cloud. Joy roſe darkly in his face: he had had heard the ſong of Carril [q]. A blaſt ſuſtained his dark-ſkirted cloud; which he ſeized in the boſom of night, as he roſe, with his fame, towards his airy hall. Half-mixed with the noiſe of the ſtream, he poured his feeble words.

"Joy meet the ſoul of Cathmor: his voice was heard on Moi-lena. The bard gave his ſong to Cairbar: he travels on the wind. My form is in my father's hall, like the gliding of a terrible light, which winds through the deſart, in a ſtormy night. No bard ſhall be wanting at thy tomb, when thou art lowly laid. The ſons of ſong love the valiant. Cathmor, thy name is a pleaſant gale. The mournful ſounds ariſe! On Lubar's field there is a voice! Louder ſtill ye ſhadowy ghoſts! the dead were full of fame. Shrilly ſwells the feeble ſound. The rougher blaſt alone is heard! Ah! ſoon is Cathmor low!" Rolled into himſelf he flew, wide on the boſom of his blaſt. The old oak felt his departure, and ſhook its whiſtling head. The king ſtarted from reſt, and took his deathful ſpear. He lifts his eyes around. He ſees but dark-ſkirted night.

"It [r] was the voice of the king; but now his form is gone. Unmarked is your path in the air, ye children of the night. Often, like a reflected beam, are ye ſeen in the deſart wild; but ye retire in your blaſts before our ſteps approach. Go then, ye feeble race! knowledge with you there is none. Your joys are weak, and like the dreams of our reſt, or the light-winged thought that flies acroſs the ſoul. Shall Cathmor ſoon be low? Darkly laid in his narrow houſe? where no morning comes with her half-opened eyes. Away, thou ſhade! to fight is mine, all further thought away! I ruſh forth, on eagle wings, to ſeize my beam of fame. In the lonely vale of ſtreams, abides the little [s] ſoul. Years roll on, ſeaſons return, but he is ſtill unknown. In a blaſt comes cloudy death, and lays his gray head low. His ghoſt is rolled on the vapour of the fenny field. Its courſe is never on hills or moſſy vales of wind. So ſhall not Cathmor depart, no boy in the field was he, who only marks the bed of roes, upon the echoing hills. My iſſuing forth was with kings, and my joy in dreadful plains: where broken hoſts are rolled away, like ſeas before the wind."

So ſpoke the king of Alnecma, brightening in his riſing ſoul: valour, like a pleaſant flame, is gleaming within his breaſt. Stately is his ſtride on the heath: the beam of eaſt is poured around. He ſaw his gray hoſt on the field, wide-ſpreading their ridges in light. He rejoiced, like a ſpirit of heaven, ven, whoſe ſteps come forth on his ſeas, when he beholds them peaceful round, and all the winds are laid. But ſoon he awakes the waves, and rolls them large to ſome echoing coaſt.

On the ruſhy bank of a ſtream, ſlept the daughter of Inis-huna. The helmet had fallen from her head. Her dreams were in the lands of her fathers. There morning was on the field: gray ſtreams leapt down from the rocks; the breezes, in ſhadowy waves, fly over the ruſhy fields. There is the ſound that prepares for the chaſe; and the moving of warriors from the hall. But tall above the reſt is the hero of ſtreamy Atha: he bends his eye of love on Sul-malla, from his ſtately ſteps. She turns, with pride, her face away, and careleſs bends the bow.

Such were the dreams of the maid when Atha's warrior came. He ſaw her fair face before him, in the midſt of her wandering locks. He knew the maid of Lumon. What ſhould Cathmor do? His ſigh aroſe: his tears came down. But ſtraight he turned away. "This is no time, king of Atha, to wake thy ſecret ſoul. The battle is rolled before thee, like a troubled ſtream."

He ſtruck that warning boſs [t], wherein dwelt the voice of war. Erin roſe around him like the ſound of eagle-wings. Sul-malla ſtarted from ſleep, in her diſordered locks. She ſeized the helmet from earth, and trembled in her place. "Why ſhould they know in Erin of the daughter of Inis-huna?" for ſhe remembered the race of kings, and the pride of her ſoul aroſe. Her ſteps are behind a rock, by the blue-winding ſtream [u] of a vale: where dwelt the dark-brown hind ere yet the war aroſe. Thither came the voice of Cathmor, at times, to Sul-malla's ear. Her ſoul is darkly ſad; ſhe pours her words on wind.

"The dreams of Inis-huna departed: they are rolled away from my ſoul. I hear not the chaſe in my land. I am concealed in the ſkirts of war. I look forth from my cloud, but no beam appears to light my path. I behold my warrior low; for the broad-ſhielded king is near; he that overcomes in danger; Fingal of the ſpears. Spirit of departed Conmor, are thy ſteps on the boſom of winds? Comeſt thou, at times, to other lands, father of ſad Sul-malla! Thou doſt come, for I have heard thy voice at night; while yet I roſe on the wave to ſtreamy Inis-fail. The ghoſt of fathers, they ſay [x], can ſeize the ſouls of their race, while they behold them lonely in the midſt of woe. Call me, my father, when the king is low on earth; for then I ſhall be lonely in the midſt of woe."

TEMORA:

AN EPIC POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

Oſſian, after a ſhort addreſs to the harp of Cona, deſcribes the arrangement of both armies on either ſide of the river Lubar. Fingal gives the command to Fillan: but, at the ſame time, orders Gaul, the ſon of Morni, who had been wounded in the hand in the preceding battle, to aſſiſt him with his counſel. The army of the Fir-bolg is commanded by Foldath. The general onſet is deſcribed The great actions of Fillan. He kills Rothmar and Culmin. But when Fillan conquers, in one wing, Foldath preſſes hard on the other. He wounds Dermid, the ſon of Duthno, and puts the whole wing to flight. Dermid deliberates with himſelf, and, at laſt, reſolves to put a ſtop to the progreſs of Foldath, by engaging him in ſingle combat. When the two chiefs were approaching towards one another, Fillan came ſuddenly to the relief of Dermid; engaged Foldath, and killed him. The behaviour of Malthos towards the fallen Foldath. Fillan puts the whole army of the Fir-bolg to flight. The book cloſes with an addreſs to Clatho, the mother of that hero.

BOOK V.

THOU dweller between the ſhields that hang on high in Oſſian's hall, deſcend from thy place place, O harp, and let me hear thy voice. Son of Alpin, ſtrike the ſtring; thou muſt awake the ſoul of the bard. The murmur of Lora's [a] ſtream has rolled the tale away. I ſtand in the cloud of years; few are its openings towards the paſt, and when the viſion comes it is but dim and dark. I hear thee, harp of Cona; my ſoul returns, like a breeze which the ſun brings back to the vale, where dwelt the lazy miſt.

Lubar [b] is bright before me, in the windings of its vale. On either ſide, on their hills, riſe the tall forms of the kings; their people are poured around them, bending forward to their words; as if their fathers ſpoke, deſcending from their winds. But the kings were like two rocks in the midſt, each with its dark head of pines, when they are ſeen in the deſart, above low-ſailing miſt. High on their face are ſtreams, which ſpread their foam on blaſts.

Beneath the voice of Cathmor poured Erin, like the ſound of flame. Wide they came down to Lubar; before them is the ſtride of Foldath. But Cathmor retired to his hill, beneath his bending oaks. The tumbling of a ſtream is near the king: he lifts, at times, his gleaming ſpear. It was a flame to his people, in the midſt of war. Near him ſtood the daughter of Con-mor, leaning on her her rock. She did not rejoice over the ſtrife: her ſoul delighted not in blood. A valley [c] ſpreads green behind the hill, with its three blue ſtreams. The ſun is there in ſilence; and the dun mountain-roes come down. On theſe are turned the eyes of Inis-huna's white boſomed maid.

Fingal beheld, on high, the ſon of Borbar-duthul: he ſaw the deep rolling of Erin, on the darkened plain. He ſtruck that warning boſs, which bids the people obey; when he ſends his chiefs before them, to the field of renown. Wide roſe their ſpears to the ſun; their echoing ſhields reply around. Fear, like a vapour, did not wind among the hoſt: for he, the king, was near, the ſtrength of ſtreamy Morven. Gladneſs brightened the hero, we heard his words of joy.

"Like the coming forth of winds, is the ſound of Morven's ſons! They are mountain waters determined in their courſe. Hence is Fingal renowned, and his name in other lands. He was not a lonely beam in danger; for your ſteps were always near. But never was I a dreadful form, in your preſence, darkened into wrath. My voice was no thunder to your ears: mine eyes ſent forth no death. When the haughty appeared, I beheld them not. They were forgot at my feaſts: like miſt they melted away. A young beam is before you:

you: few are his paths to war. They are few, but he is valiant: defend my dark-haired ſon. Bring him back with joy: Hereafter he may ſtand alone. His form is like his fathers: his ſoul is a flame of their fire. Son of car-borne Morni, move behind the ſon of Clatho: let thy voice reach his ear, from the ſkirts of war. Not unobſerved rolls battle, before thee, breaker of the ſhields."

The king ſtrode, at once, away to Cormul's lofty rock. As, ſlow, I lifted my ſteps behind; came forward the ſtrength of Gaul. His ſhield hung looſe on its thong; he ſpoke, in haſte, to Oſſian. "Bind[d], ſon of Fingal, this ſhield, bind it high on the ſide of Gaul. The foe may behold it, and think I left the ſpear. If I ſhall fall, let my tomb be hid in the field; for fall I muſt without my fame: mine arm cannot lift the ſteel. Let not Evir-choma hear it, to bluſh between her locks. Fillan the mighty behold us; let us not forget the ſtrife. Why ſhould they come, from their hills, to aid our flying field?"

He ſtrode onward, with the ſound of his ſhield. My voice purſued him, as he went. "Can the ſon of Morni fall without his fame in Erin? But the deeds of the mighty forſake their ſouls of fire. They ruſh careleſs over the fields of renown: their words words are never heard." I rejoiced over the ſteps of the chief: I ſtrode to the rock of the king, where he ſat in his wandering locks, amidſt the mountain-wind.

In two dark ridges bend the hoſts, towards each other, at Lubar. Here Foldath roſe a pillar of darkneſs: there brightened the youth of Fillan. Each, with his ſpear in the ſtream, ſent forth the voice of war. Gaul ſtruck the ſhield of Morven: at once they plunge in battle. Steel poured its gleam on ſteel: like the fall of ſtreams ſhone the field, when they mix their foam together, from two dark-browed rocks. Behold he comes the ſon of fame: he lays the people low! Deaths ſit on blaſts around him! Warriors ſtrew thy paths, O Fillan!

Rothmar [e], the ſhield of warriors, ſtood between two chinky rocks. Two oaks, which winds had bent from high, ſpread their branches on either ſide. He rolls his darkening eyes on Fillan, and ſilent, ſhades his friends. Fingal ſaw the approaching fight; and all his ſoul aroſe. But as the ſtone of Loda [f] falls, ſhook, at once, from rocking Druman-ard, when ſpirits heave the earth in their wrath; ſo fell blue-ſhielded Rothmar.

Near are the ſteps of Culmin; the youth came, burſting into tears. Wrathful he cut the wind, ere yet he mixed his ſtrokes with Fillan. He had firſt bent the bow with Rothmar, at the rock of his own blue ſtreams. There they had marked the place of the roe, as the ſun-beam flew over the fern. Why, ſon of Cul-allin, doſt thou ruſh on that beam [g] of light? it is a fire that conſumes. Youth of Strutha retire. Your fathers were not equal, in the glittering ſtrife of the field.

The mother of Culmin remains in the hall; ſhe looks forth on blue-rolling Strutha. A whirlwind riſes, on the ſtream, dark-eddying round the ghoſt of her ſon. His dogs [h] are howling in their place: his ſhield is bloody in the hall. "Art thou fallen, my fair-haired ſon in Erin's diſmal war?"

As a roe, pierced in ſecret, lies panting, by her wonted ſtreams, the hunter looks over her feet of wind, and remembers her ſtately bounding before: ſo lay the ſon of Cul-allin, beneath the eye of Fillan. His hair is rolled in a little ſtream: his blood wandered on his ſhield. Still his hand held the ſword, that failed him in the day of his danger. "Thou art fallen," ſaid Fillan, "ere yet thy fame was heard. Thy father ſent thee to war: and he expects to hear thy deeds. He is gray, perhaps, at his ſtreams, turning his dim eyes towards Moi-lena. But thou ſhalt not return, with the ſpoil of the fallen foe."

Fillan

Fillan poured the flight of Erin before him, over the echoing heath. But, man on man, fell Morven before the dark-red rage of Foldath; for, far on the field, he poured the roar of half his tribes. Dermid ſtood before him in wrath: the ſons of Cona gather round. But his ſhield is cleft by Foldath, and his people poured over the heath.

Then ſaid the foe, in his pride, "They have fled, and my fame begins. Go, Malthos, and bid the king to guard the dark-rolling of ocean; that Fingal may not eſcape from my ſword. He muſt lie on earth. Beſide ſome fen ſhall his tomb be ſeen. It ſhall riſe without a ſong. His ghoſt ſhall hover in miſt over the reedy pool."

Malthos heard, with darkening doubt; he rolled his ſilent eyes. He knew the pride of Foldath, and looked up to the king on his hill; then, darkly turning, he plunged his ſword in war.

In Clono's narrow vale, were bent two trees above the ſtreams, dark in his grief ſtood Duthno's ſilent ſon. The blood poured from his thigh: his ſhield lay broken near. His ſpear leaned againſt a ſtone; why, Dermid, why ſo ſad? "I hear the roar of battle. My people are alone. My ſteps are ſlow on the heath; and no ſhield is mine. Shall he then prevail? It is then after Dermid mid is low! I will call thee forth, O Foldath, and meet thee yet in fight."

He took his ſpear, with dreadful joy. The ſon of Morni came. "Stay, ſon of Duthno, ſtay thy ſpeed; thy ſteps are marked with blood. No boſſy ſhield is thine. Why ſhouldſt thou fall unarmed?" King of Strumon, give thou thy ſhield. It has often rolled back the war. I ſhall ſtop the chief, in his courſe. Son of Morni, doſt thou behold that ſtone? It lifts its gray head through graſs. There dwells a chief of the race of Dermid. Place me there in night."

He ſlowly roſe againſt the hill, and ſaw the troubled field. The gleaming ridges of the fight, disjoined and broken round. As diſtant fires, on heath by night, now ſeem as loſt in ſmoke, then rearing their red ſtreams on the hill, as blow or ceaſe the winds: ſo met the intermitting war the eye of broad-ſhielded Dermid. Through the hoſt are the ſtrides of Foldath, like ſome dark ſhip on wintry waves, when it iſſues from between two iſles, to ſport on echoing ſeas.

Dermid, with rage, beheld his courſe. He ſtrove to ruſh along. But he failed in the midſt of his ſteps; and the big tear came down. He ſounded his father's horn; and thrice ſtruck his boſſy ſhield. He called thrice the name of Foldath, dath, from his roaring tribes. Foldath, with joy, beheld the chief: he lifted high his bloody ſpear. As a rock is marked with ſtreams, that fell troubled down its ſide in a ſtorm; ſo, ſtreaked with wandering blood, is the dark form of Moma. The hoſt, on either ſide, withdrew from the contending of kings. They raiſed, at once, their gleaming points. Ruſhing came Fillan of Moruth. Three paces back Foldath withdrew; dazzled with that beam of light, which came, as iſſuing from a cloud, to ſave the wounded hero. Growing in his pride, he ſtood, and called forth all his ſteel.

As meet two broad-winged eagles, in their ſounding ſtrife, on the winds: ſo ruſhed the two chiefs, on Moi-lena, into gloomy fight. By turns are the ſteps of the kings [k] forward on their rocks; for now the duſky war ſeems to deſcend on their ſwords. Cathmor feels the joy of warriors, on his moſſy hill: their joy in ſecret when dangers riſe equal to their ſouls. His eye is not turned on Lubar, but on Morven's dreadful king; for he beheld him, on Mora, riſing in his arms.

Foldath [l] fell on his ſhield; the ſpear of Fillan pierced the king. Nor looked the youth on the fallen, but onward rolled the war. The hundred voices of death aroſe. "Stay, ſon of Fingal, ſtay thy ſpeed. Beholdeſt thou not that gleaming form, form, a dreadful ſign of death? Awaken not the king of Alnecma. Return, ſon of blue-eyed Clatho."

Malthos [m] ſaw Foldath low. He darkly ſtood above the king. Hatred was rolled from his ſoul. He ſeemed a rock in the deſart, on whoſe dark ſide are the trickling of waters, when the ſlow-ſailing miſt has left it, and its trees are blaſted with winds. He ſpoke to the dying hero, about the narrow houſe. Whether ſhall thy gray ſtone riſe in Ullin? or in Moma's [n] woody land, where the ſun looks, in ſecret, on the blue ſtreams of Da'rutho [o]? There are the ſteps of thy daughter, blue-eyed Dardu-lena.

"Remembereſt thou her," ſaid Foldath, "becauſe no ſon is mine; no youth to roll the battle before him, in revenge of me? Malthos, I am revenged. I was not peaceful in the field. Raiſe the tombs of thoſe I have ſlain, around my narrow houſe. Often ſhall I forſake the blaſt, to rejoice above their graves; when I behold them ſpread around, with their long-whiſtling graſs."

His ſoul ruſhed to the vales of Moma, and came to Dardu-lena's dreams, where ſhe ſlept, by Dalrutho's ſtream, returning from the chaſe of the hinds. Her bow is near the maid, unſtrung; the breezes fold her long hair on her breaſts. Clothed in in the beauty of youth, the love of heroes lay. Dark bending, from the ſkirts of the wood, her wounded father came. He appeared, at times, then ſeemed as hid in miſt. Burſting into tears ſhe roſe: ſhe knew that the chief was low. To her came a beam from his ſoul when folded in its ſtorms. Thou wert the laſt of his race, blue-eyed Dardu-lena!

Wide-ſpreading over echoing Lubar, the flight of Bolga is rolled along. Fillan hung forward on their ſteps; and ſtrewed, with dead, the heath. Fingal rejoiced over his ſon. Blue-ſhielded Cathmor roſe.

Son [P] of Alpin, bring the harp: give Fillan's praiſe to the wind: raiſe high his praiſe, in my hall, while yet he ſhines in war.

Leave, blue eyed Clatho, leave thy hall. Behold that early beam of thine. The hoſt is withered in its courſe. No further look—it is dark. Light-trembling from the harp, ſtrike, virgins, ſtrike the ſound. No hunter he deſcends, from the dewy haunt of the bounding roe. He bends not his bow on the wind; or ſends his gray arrow abroad.

Deep-folded in red war, the battle rolls againſt his ſide. Or, ſtriding midſt the ridgy ſtrife, he pours the deaths of thouſands forth. Fillan is like a ſpirit of heaven, that deſcends from the ſkirt of his blaſt. The troubled ocean feels his ſteps, as he ſtrides from wave to wave. His path kindles behind him; iſlands ſhake their heads on the heaving ſeas.

AN EPIC POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

This book opens with a ſpeech of Fingal, who ſees Cathmor deſcending to the aſſiſtance of his flying army. The king diſpatches Oſſian to the relief of Fillan. He himſelf retires behind the rock of Cormul, to avoid the ſight of the engagement between his ſon and Cathmor. Oſſian advances. The deſcent of Cathmor deſcribed. He rallies the army, renews the battle, and, before Oſſian could arrive, engages Fillan himſelf. Upon the approach of Oſſian, the combat between the two heroes ceaſes. Oſſian and Cathmor prepare to fight, but night coming on prevents them. Oſſian returns to the place where Cathmor and Fillan fought. He finds Fillan mortally wounded, and leaning againſt a rock. Their diſcourſe. Fillan dies: his body is laid, by Oſſian, in a neighbouring cave. The Caledonian army return to Fingal. He queſtions them about his ſon, and underſtanding that he was killed, retires, in ſilence, to the rock of Cormul. Upon the retreat of the army of Fingal, the Fir-bolg advance, Cathmor finds Bran, one of the dogs of Fingal, lying on the ſhield of Fillan, before the entrance of the cave, where the body of that hero lay. His reflections thereupon. He returns, in a melancholy mood, to his army. Malthos endeavours to comfort him, by the example of his father Borbar-duthul. Cathmor retires to reſt. The ſong of Sul-malla concludes the book, which ends about the middle of the third night, from the opening of the poem.

BOOK VI.

"CATHMOR riſes on his echoing hill! Shall Fingal take the ſword of Luno? But what ſhall become of thy fame, ſon of white-boſomed Clatho? Turn not thine eyes from Fingal, daughter of Iniſtore. I ſhall not quench thy early beam; it ſhines along my ſoul. But riſe, O wood-ſkirted Mora, riſe between the war and me! Why ſhould Fingal behold the ſtrife, leſt his dark-haired warrior ſhould fall! Amidſt the ſong, O Carril, pour the ſound of the trembling harp: here are the voices of rocks, and bright tumbling of waters. Father of Oſcar, lift the ſpear; defend the young in arms. Conceal thy ſteps from Fillan's eyes. He muſt not know that I doubt his ſteel. No cloud of mine ſhall riſe, my ſon, upon thy ſoul of fire!"

He ſunk behind his rock, amidſt the ſound of Carril's ſong. Brightening, in my growing ſoul, I took the ſpear of Temora [a]. I ſaw, along Moilena, the wild tumbling of battle, the ſtrife of death, in gleaming rows, disjoined and broken round round. Fillan is a beam of fire: from wing to wing is his waſteful courſe. The ridges of war melt before him. They are rolled, in ſmoke, from the fields.

Now is the coming forth of Cathmor, in the armour of kings! Dark-rolled the eagle's wing above his helmet of fire. Unconcerned are his ſteps, as if they were to the chaſe of Atha. He raiſed, at times, his dreadful voice; Erin, abaſhed, gathered round. Their ſouls returned back, like a ſtream: they wondered at the ſteps of their fear: for he aroſe, like the beam of the morning on a haunted heath: the traveller looks back, with bending eye, on the field of dreadful forms. Sudden, from the rock of Moi-lena, are Sul-malla's trembling ſteps. An oak took the ſpear from her hand; half-bent ſhe looſed the lance: but then are her eyes on the king, from amidſt her wandering locks. "No friendly ſtrife is before thee: no light contending of bows, as when the youth of Cluba [b] came forth beneath the eye of Conmor."

As the rock of Runo, which takes the paſſing clouds for its robe, ſeems growing, in gathered darkneſs, over the ſtreamy heath; ſo ſeemed the chief of Atha taller, as gathered his people round. As different blaſts fly over the ſea, each behind its dark-blue wave, ſo Cathmor's words, on every ſide, poured his warriors forth. Nor ſilent on his hill is Fillan; he mixed his words with his echoing ſhield. An eagle he ſeemed, with ſounding wings, calling the wind to his rock, when he ſees the coming forth of the roes, on Lutha's [c] ruſhy field.

Now they bent forward in battle: death's hundred voices roſe; for the kings, on either ſide, were like fires on the ſouls of the people. I bounded along: high rocks and trees ruſhed tall between the war and me. But I heard the noiſe of ſteel, between my clanging arms. Riſing, gleaming, on the hill, I beheld the backward ſteps of hoſts: their backward ſteps, on either ſide, and wildly looking eyes. The chiefs were met in dreadful fight; the two blue-ſhielded kings. Tall and dark, through gleams of ſteel, are ſeen the ſtriving heroes. I ruſhed. My fears for Fillan flew, burning acroſs my ſoul.

I came; nor Cathmor fled; nor yet advanced: he ſide-long ſtalked along. An icy rock, cold, tall he ſeemed. I called forth all my ſteel. Silent awhile we ſtrode, on either ſide of a ruſhing ſtream: then, ſudden turning, all at once, we raiſed our pointed ſpears. We raiſed our ſpears, but night came down. It is dark and ſilent around; but where the diſtant ſteps of hoſts are ſounding over the heath.

I came

I came to the place where Fillan fought. Nor voice, nor ſound is there. A broken helmet lay on earth; a buckler cleft in twain. "Where, Fillan, where art thou, young chief of echoing Morven?" He heard me leaning againſt a rock, which bent its gray head over the ſtream. He heard; but ſullen, dark he ſtood. At length I ſaw the chief.

"Why ſtandeſt thou, robed in darkneſs, ſon of woody Selma? Bright is thy path, my brother, in this dark-brown field. Long has been thy ſtrife in battle. Now the horn of Fingal is heard. Aſcend to the cloud of thy father, to his hill of feaſts. In the evening miſt he ſits, and hears the voice of Carril's harp. Carry joy to the aged, young breaker of the ſhields."

"Can the vanquiſhed carry joy? Oſſian, no ſhield is mine. It lies broken on the field. The eagle-wing of my helmet is torn. It is when foes fly before them that fathers delight in their ſons. But their ſighs burſts forth, in ſecret, when their young warriors yield. No: Fillan will not behold the king. Why ſhould the hero mourn?"

"Son of blue-eyed Clatho, why doſt thou awake my ſoul? Wert thou not a burning fire before him; and ſhall he not rejoice! Such fame belonged not to Oſſian; yet was the king ſtill a ſun to me. He looked on my ſteps, with joy; ſhadows never roſe on his face. Aſcend, O Fillan, to Mora: his feaſt is ſpread in the folds of miſt."

"Oſſian, give me that broken ſhield: theſe feathers that are rolled in the wind. Place them near to Fillan, that leſs of his fame may fall. Oſſian, I begin to fail. Lay me in that hollow rock. Raiſe no ſtone above: leſt one ſhould aſk about my fame. I am fallen in the firſt of my fields: fallen without renown. Let thy voice alone ſend joy to my flying ſoul. Why ſhould the feeble know where dwells the loſt beam of Clatho[d]?"

"Is thy ſpirit on the eddying winds, blue-eyed king of ſhields? Joy purſue my hero, through his folded clouds. The forms of thy fathers, O Fillan, bend to receive their ſon. I behold the ſpreading of their fire on Mora? the blue rolling of their miſty wreaths. Joy meet thee, my brother. But we are dark and ſad. I behold the foe round the aged, and the waſting away of his fame. Thou art left alone in the field, gray-haired king of Selma."

I laid him in the hollow rock, at the roar of the nightly ſtream. One red ſtar looked in on the hero: winds lift, at times, his locks. I liſtened: no ſound was heard: for the warrior ſlept. As lightning ning on a cloud, a thought came ruſhing over my ſoul. My eyes rolled in fire: my ſtride was in the clang of ſteel. "I will find thee, chief of Atha, in the gathering of thy thouſands. Why ſhould that cloud eſcape, that quenched our early beam? Kindle your meteors, my fathers, to light my daring ſteps. I will conſume in wrath [e]. Should I not return! the king is without a ſon, gray-haired amidſt his foes. His arm is not in the days of old: his fame grows dim in Erin. Let me not behold him from high, laid low in his latter field. But can I return to the king? Will he not aſk about his ſon? "Thou oughteſt to defend young Fillan." I will meet the foe. Green Inisfail, thy ſounding tread is pleaſant to my ear: I ruſh on thy ridgy hoſt, to ſhun the eyes of Fingal. I hear the voice of the king, on Mora's miſty top! He calls his two ſons; I come, my father, in my grief. I come like an eagle, which the flame of night met in the deſart, and ſpoiled of half his wings."

Diſtant, [f] round the king, on Mora, the broken ridges of Morven are rolled. They turned their eyes: each darkly bends, on his own aſhen ſpear. Silent ſtood the king in the midſt. Thought on thought rolled over his ſoul. As waves on a ſecret mountain lake, each with its back of foam. He looked; no ſon appeared, with his long-beaming ſpear. The ſighs roſe, crowding from his ſoul; but he concealed his grief. At length I ſtood beneath an oak. No voice of mine was heard. What could I ſay to Fingal in his hour of woe? His words roſe, at length, in the midſt: the people ſhrunk backward as he ſpoke [g].

"Where is the ſon of Selma, he who led in war? I beheld not his ſteps, among my people, returning from the field. Fell the young bounding roe, who was ſo ſtately on my hills? He fell; for ye are ſilent. The ſhield of war is broke. Let his armour be near to Fingal; and the ſword of dark-brown Luno. I am waked on my hills: With morning I deſcend to war."

High [h] on Cormul's rock, an oak flamed to the wind. The gray ſkirts of miſt are rolled around; thither ſtrode the king in his wrath. Diſtant from the hoſt he always lay, when battle burnt within his ſoul. On two ſpears hung his ſhield on high; the gleaming ſign of death; that ſhield which he was wont to ſtrike, by night, before he ruſhed to war. It was then his warriors knew, when the king was to lead in ſtrife; for never was this buckler heard, till Fingal's wrath aroſe. Unequal were his ſteps on high, as he ſhone in the beam of the oak; he was dreadful as the form of the ſpirit of night, when he clothes, on hills, his wild geſ-

tures with miſt, and, iſſuing forth, on the troubled ocean, mounts the car of winds.

Nor ſettled, from the ſtorm, is Erin's ſea of war; they glittered, beneath the moon, and, low-humming, ſtill rolled on the field. Alone are the ſteps of Cathmor, before them on the heath; he hung forward, with all his arms, on Morven's flying hoſt. Now had he come to the moſſy cave, where Fillan lay in night. One tree was bent above the ſtream, which glittered over the rock. There ſhone to the moon the broken ſhield of Clatho's ſon; and near it, on graſs, lay hairy-footed Bran[1]. He had miſſed the chief on Mora, and ſearched him along the wind. He thought that the blue-eyed hunter ſlept; he lay upon his ſhield. No blaſt came over the heath, unknown to bounding Bran.

Cathmor ſaw the white-breaſted dog; he ſaw the broken ſhield. Darkneſs is blown back on his ſoul; he remembers the falling away of the people. "They come, a ſtream; are rolled away; another race ſucceeds. But ſome mark the fields, as they paſs, with their own mighty names. The heath, through dark-brown years, is theirs; ſome blue ſtream, winds to their fame. Of theſe be the chief of Atha, when he lays him down on earth. Often may the voice of future times meet Cathmor in the air: when he ſtrides from wind to wind, or folds himſelf in the wing of a ſtorm."

Green Erin gathered round the king, to hear the voice of his power. The joyful faces bend, unequal, forward, in the light of the oak. They who were terrible were removed; Lubar [k] winds again in their hoſt. Cathmor was that beam from heaven which ſhone when his people were dark. He was honoured in the midſt. Their ſouls roſe trembling around. The king alone no gladneſs ſhewed; no ſtranger he to war!

"Why is the king ſo ſad," ſaid Malthos eagle-eyed; "Remains there a foe at Lubar? Lives there among them, who can lift the ſpear? Not ſo peaceful was thy father, Borbar-duthul [l], ſovereign of ſpears. His rage was a fire that always burned: his joy over fallen foes was great. Three days feaſted the gray-haired hero, when he heard that Calmar fell: Calmar; who aided the race of Ullin, from Lara of the ſtreams. Often did he feel, with his hands, the ſteel which, they ſaid, had pierced his foe. He felt it with his hands, for Borbar-duthul's eyes had failed. Yet was the king a ſun to his friends; a gale to lift their branches round. Joy was around him in his halls: he loved the ſons of Bolga. His name remains in Atha, like the awful memory of ghoſts, whoſe preſence preſence was terrible, but they blew the ſtorm away. Now let the voices [m] of Erin raiſe the ſoul of the king; he that ſhone when war was dark, and laid the mighty low. Fonar, from that gray-browed rock, pour the tale of other times: pour it on wide ſkirted Erin, as it ſettles round."

"To me," ſaid Cathmor, "no ſong ſhall riſe: nor Fonar ſit on the rock of Lubar. The mighty there are laid low. Diſturb not their ruſhing ghoſts. Far, Malthos, far remove the ſound of Erin's ſong. I rejoice not over the foe, when he ceaſes to lift the ſpear. With morning we pour our ſtrength abroad. Fingal is wakened on his echoing hill."

Like waves, blown back by ſudden winds, Erin retired, at the voice of the king. Deep-rolled into the field of night, they ſpread their humming tribes: Beneath his own tree, at intervals, each [n] bard ſat down with his harp. They raiſed the ſong, and touched the ſtring: each to the chief he loved. Before a burning oak Sul-malla touched, at times, the harp. She touched the harp and heard, between, the breezes in her hair. In darkneſs near, lay the king of Atha, beneath an aged tree. The beam of the oak was turned from him; he ſaw the maid, but was not ſeen. His

ſoul poured forth, in ſecret, when he beheld her tearful eye. "But battle is before thee, ſon of Borbar-duthul."

Amidſt the harp, at intervals, ſhe liſtened whether the warriors ſlept. Her ſoul was up; ſhe longed, in ſecret, to pour her own ſad ſong. The field is ſilent. On their wings, the blaſts of night retire. The bards had ceaſed; and meteors came, red-winding with their ghoſts. The ſky grew dark: the forms of the dead were blended with the clouds. But heedleſs bends the daughter of Conmor, over the decaying flame. Thou wert alone in her ſoul, car-borne chief of Atha. She raiſed the voice of the ſong, and touched the harp between.

"Clun-galo [o] came; ſhe miſſed the maid. Where art thou, beam of light? Hunters, from the moſſy rock, ſaw you the blue-eyed fair? Are her ſteps on graſſy Lumon; near the bed of roes? Ah me! I behold her bow in the hall. Where art thou, beam of light?

"Ceaſe, [p] love of Conmor, ceaſe; I hear thee not on the ridgy heath. My eye is turned to the king, whoſe path is terrible in war. He for whom my ſoul is up, in the ſeaſon of my reſt. Deep-boſomed in war he ſtands, he beholds me not not from his cloud. Why, ſun of Sul-malla, doſt thou not look forth? I dwell in darkneſs here; wide over me flies the ſhadowy miſt. Filled with dew are my locks: look thou from thy cloud, O ſun of Sul-malla's ſoul." * * * * * *

AN EPIC POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

This book begins, about the middle of the third night from the opening of the poem. The poet deſcribes a kind of miſt, which roſe, by night, from the lake of Lego, and was the uſual reſidence of the ſouls of the dead, during the interval between their deceaſe and the funeral ſong. The appearance of the ghoſt of Fillan above the cave where his body lay. His voice comes to Fingal, on the rock of Cormul. The king ſtrikes the ſhield of Trenmor, which was an infallible ſign of his appearing in arms himſelf. The extraordinary effect of the ſound of the ſhield. Sul-malla, ſtarting from ſleep, awakes Cathmor. Their affecting diſcourſe. She inſiſts with him, to ſue for peace; he reſolves to continue the war. He directs her to retire to the neighbouring valley of Lona, which was the reſidence of an old Druid, until the battle of the next day ſhould be over. He awakes his army with the ſound of his ſhield. The ſhield deſcribed. Fonar, the bard, at the deſire of Cathmor, relates the firſt ſettlement of the Fir-bolg in Ireland, under their leader Larthon. Morning comes. Sul-malla retires to the valley of Lona. A lyric ſong concludes the book.

BOOK VII.

FROM the wood-ſkirted waters of Lego, aſcend, at times, gray-boſomed miſts, when the gates of of the weſt are cloſed on the ſun's eagle-eye. Wide, over Lara's ſtream, is poured the vapour dark and deep: the moon, like a dim ſhield, is ſwimming through its folds. With this, clothe the ſpirits of old their ſudden geſtures on the wind, when they ſtride, from blaſt to blaſt, along the duſky face of the night. Often blended with the gale, to ſome warrior's grave [a] they roll the miſt, a gray dwelling to his ghoſt, until the ſongs ariſe.

A ſound came from the deſart; the ruſhing courſe of Conar in winds. He poured his deep miſt on Fillan, at blue-winding Lubar. Dark and mournful ſat the ghoſt, bending in his gray ridge of ſmoke. The blaſt, at times, rolled him together: but the lovely form returned again. It returned with ſlow-bending eyes: and dark winding locks of miſt.

It was [b] dark. The ſleeping hoſt were ſtill, in the ſkirts of night. The flame decayed, on the hill of Fingal; the king lay lonely on his ſhield. His eyes were half-cloſed in ſleep; the voice of Fillan came. "Sleeps the huſband of Clatho? Dwells the father of the fallen in reſt? Am I forgot in the folds of darkneſs; lonely in the ſeaſon of dreams?"

"Why art thou in the midſt of my dreams?" ſaid Fingal, as, ſudden, he roſe! "Can I forget thee, my ſon, or thy path of fire in the field? Not ſuch, on the ſoul of the king, come the deeds of the mighty in arms. They are not there a beam of lightning, which is ſeen, and is then no more. I remember thee, O Fillan, and my wrath begins to riſe."

The king took his deathful ſpear, and ſtruck the deeply-ſounding ſhield: his ſhield that hung high on night, the diſmal ſign of war! Ghoſts fled on every ſide, and rolled their gathered forms on the wind. Thrice from the winding vale aroſe the voices of death. The harps [c] of the bards, untouched, ſound mournful over the hill.

He ſtruck again the ſhield: battles roſe in the dreams of his hoſt. The wide-tumbling ſtrife is gleaming over their ſouls. Blue-ſhielded kings deſcend to war. Backward-looking armies fly; and mighty deeds are half-hid, in the bright gleams of ſteel.

But when the third ſound aroſe; deer ſtarted from the clefts of their rocks. The ſcreams of fowl are heard, in the deſart, as each flew, frighted, on his blaſt. The ſons of Albion half-roſe, and half-aſſumed their ſpears. But ſilence rolled back on the hoſt: they knew the ſhield of the king. Sleep returned to their eyes: the field was dark and ſtill.

No

No ſleep was thine in darkneſs, blue-eyed daughter of Conmor! Sul-malla heard the dreadful ſhield, and roſe, amidſt the night. Her ſteps are towards the king of Atha. "Can danger ſhake his daring ſoul!" In doubt, ſhe ſtands, with bending eyes. Heaven burns with all its ſtars.

Again the ſhield reſounds! She ruſhed. She ſtopt. Her voice half-roſe. It failed. She ſaw him, amidſt his arms, that gleamed to heaven's fire. She ſaw him dim in his locks, that roſe to nightly wind. Away, for fear, ſhe turned her ſteps. "Why ſhould the king of Erin awake? Thou art not a dream to his reſt, daughter of Inis-huna."

More dreadful rung the ſhield. Sul-malla ſtarts. Her helmet falls. Loud echoed Lubar's rock, as over it rolled the ſteel. Burſting from the dreams of night, Cathmor half-roſe, beneath his tree. He ſaw the form of the maid, above him, on the rock. A red ſtar, with twinkling beam, looked down through her floating hair.

"Who comes through night to Cathmor, in the dark ſeaſon of his dreams? Bringeſt thou ought of war? Who art thou, ſon of night? Standeſt thou before me, a form of the times of old? A voice from the fold of a cloud, to warn me of Erin's danger?"

"Nor traveller of night am I, nor voice from folded cloud: but I warn thee of the danger of Erin. Doſt thou hear that ſound? It is not the feeble, king of Atha, that rolls his ſigns on night"

"Let the warrior roll his ſigns; to Cathmor they are the ſound of harps. My joy is great, voice of night, and burns over all my thoughts. This is the muſic of kings, on lonely hills, by night; when they light their daring ſouls, the ſons of mighty deeds! The feeble dwell alone, in the valley of the breeze; where miſts lift their morning ſkirts, from the blue-winding ſtreams."

"Not feeble, thou leader of heroes, were they, the fathers of my race. They dwelt in the darkneſs of battle: in their diſtant lands. Yet delights not my ſoul, in the ſigns of death! He [d], who never yields, comes forth: Awake the bard of peace!"

Like a rock with its trickling waters, ſtood Cathmor in his tears. Her voice came, a breeze, on his ſoul, and waked the memory of her land; where ſhe dwelt by her peaceful ſtreams, before he came to the war of Conmor.

"Daughter of ſtrangers," he ſaid; (ſhe trembling turned away) "long have I marked in her armour, the young pine of Inis-huna. But my ſoul, I ſaid, is folded in a ſtorm. Why ſhould that beam ariſe, till my ſteps return in peace? Have I been pale in thy preſence, when thou bidſt me to fear the king? The time of danger, O maid, is the ſeaſon of my ſoul; for then it ſwells, a mighty ſtream, and rolls me on the foe.

to

"Beneath the moſs-covered rock of Lona, near his own winding ſtream; gray in his locks of age, dwells Clonmal[e] king of harps. Above him is his echoing oak, and the dun bounding of roes. The noiſe of our ſtrife reaches his ear, as he bends in the thoughts of years. There let thy reſt be, Sulmalla, until our battle ceaſe. Until I return, in my arms, from the ſkirts of the evening miſt that riſes, on Lona, round the dwelling of my love."

A light fell on the ſoul of the maid; it roſe kindled before the king. She turned her face to Cathmor; her locks are ſtruggling with winds. "Sooner ſhall the eagle of heaven be torn, from the ſtreams of his roaring wind, when he ſees the dun prey, before him, the young ſons of the bounding roe, than thou, O Cathmor, be turned from the ſtrife of renown. Soon may I ſee thee, warrior, from the ſkirts of the evening miſt, when it is rolled around me, on Lona of the ſtreams. While yet thou art diſtant far, ſtrike, Cathmor, ſtrike the ſhield, that joy may return to my darkened ſoul, as I lean on the moſſy rock. But if thou ſhould fall—I am in the land of ſtrangers; O ſend thy voice, from thy cloud, to the maid of Inis-huna."

"Young branch of green-headed Lumon, why doſt thou ſhake in the ſtorm? Often has Cathmor returned, from darkly-rolling wars. The darts of death are but hail to me; they have often bounded from my ſhield. I have riſen brightened from battle, like a meteor from a ſtormy cloud. Return not, fair beam, from thy vale, when the roar of battle grows. Then might the foe eſcape, as from my fathers of old.

"They told to Son-mor [f], of Clunar [g], ſlain by Cormac the giver of ſhells. Three days darkened Son-mor, over his brother's fall. His ſpouſe beheld the ſilent king, and foreſaw his ſteps to war. She prepared the bow, in ſecret, to attend her blue-ſhielded hero. To her dwelt darkneſs at Atha, when the warrior moved to his fields. From their hundred ſtreams, by night, poured down the ſons of Alnecma. They had heard the ſhield of the king, and their rage aroſe. In clanging arms, they moved along, towards Ullin the land of groves. Son-mor ſtruck his ſhield, at times, the leader of the war.

"Far behind followed Sul-allin [h], over the ſtreamy hills. She was a light on the mountain, when they croſſed the vale below. Her ſteps were ſtately ſtately on the vale, when they roſe on the moſſy hill. She feared to approach the king, who left her in Atha of hinds. But when the roar of battle roſe; when hoſt was rolled on hoſt; when Son-mor burnt like the fire of heaven in clouds, with her ſpreading hair came Sul-allin; for ſhe trembled for her king. He ſtopt the ruſhing ſtrife to ſave the love of heroes. The foe fled by night; Clunar ſlept without his blood; the blood which ought to be poured upon the warrior's tomb.

"Nor roſe the rage of Son-mor, but his days were dark and ſlow. Sul-allin wandered, by her gray ſtreams, with her tearful eyes. Often did ſhe look, on the hero, when he was folded in his thoughts. But ſhe ſhrunk from his eyes, and turned her lone ſteps away. Battles roſe, like a tempeſt, and drove the miſt from his ſoul. He beheld with joy, her ſteps in the hall, and the white riſing of her hands on the harp."

In his arms ſtrode the chief of Atha, to where his ſhield hung, high, in night: high on a moſſy bough, over Lubar's ſtreamy roar. Seven boſſes roſe on the ſhield; the ſeven voices of the king, which his warriors received, from the wind, and marked over all their tribes.

On each boſs is placed a ſtar of night; Canmathon with beams unſhorn: Col-derna riſing from a cloud:

a cloud: Uloicho robed in miſt; and the ſoft beam of Cathlin glittering on a rock. Fair-gleaming on its own blue wave, Reldurath half-ſinks its weſtern light. The red eye of Berthin looks, through a grove, on the ſlow-moving hunter, as he returns, through ſhowery night, with the ſpoils of the bounding roe. Wide in the midſt, aroſe the cloudleſs beams of Ton-thena; Ton-thena which looked, by night, on the courſe of the ſea-toſſed Larthon: Larthon, the firſt of Bolga's race, who travelled on the winds [k]. White-boſomed ſpread the ſails of the king, towards ſtreamy Inis-fail; dun night was rolled before him, with its ſkirts of miſt. The winds were changeful in heaven, and rolled him from wave to wave. Then roſe the fiery-haired Ton-thena, and laughed from her parted cloud. Larthon [l] rejoiced at the guiding beam, as it faint-gleamed on the tumbling waters.

Beneath the ſpear of Cathmor, awaked that voice which awakes the bards. They came, dark-winding, from every ſide; each, with the ſound of his harp. Before them rejoiced the king, as the traveller, in the day of the ſun; when he hears, far-rolling around, the murmur of moſſy ſtreams; ſtreams that burſt, in the deſart, from the rock of roes.

"Why,"

"Why," ſaid Fonar, "hear we the voice of the king, in the ſeaſon of his reſt? Were the dim forms of thy fathers bending in thy dreams? Perhaps they ſtand on that cloud, and wait for Fonar's ſong; often they come to the fields where their ſons are to lift the ſpear. Or ſhall our voice ariſe for him who lifts the ſpear no more; he that conſumed the field, from Moma of the groves?"

"Not forgot is that cloud in war, bard of other times. High ſhall his tomb riſe, on Moi-lena, the dwelling of renown. But, now, roll back my ſoul to the times of my fathers: to the years when firſt they roſe, on Inis-huna's waves. Nor alone pleaſant to Cathmor is the remembrance of wood-covered Lumon. Lumon the land of ſtreams, the dwelling of white-boſomed maids."

"Lumon [m] of foamy ſtreams, thou riſeſt on Fonar's ſoul! Thy ſun is on thy ſide, on the rocks of thy bending trees. The dun roe is ſeen from thy furze; the deer lifts his branchy head; for he ſees, at times, the hound, on the half covered heath. Slow, on the vale, are the ſteps of maids; the white-armed daughters of the bow: they lift their blue eyes to the hill, from amidſt their wandering locks. Not there is the ſtride of Larthon, chief of Inis-huna. He mounts the wave on his own dark oak, in Cluba's ridgy bay. That oak which he cut from Lumon, to bound along the ſea. The maids turn their eyes away, leſt the king ſhould be lowly laid; for never had they ſeen a ſhip, dark rider of the wave!

"Now he dares to call the winds, and to mix with the miſt of ocean. Blue Inis-fail roſe, in ſmoke; but dark-ſkirted night came down. The ſons of Bolga feared. The fiery haired Ton-thena roſe. Culbin's bay received the ſhip, in the boſom of its echoing woods. There, iſſued a ſtream, from Duthuma's horrid cave; where ſpirits gleamed, at times, with their half-finiſhed forms.

"Dreams deſcended on Larthon: he ſaw ſeven ſpirits of his fathers. He heard their half-formed words, and dimly beheld the times to come. He beheld the kings of Atha, the ſons of future days. They led their hoſts, along the field, like ridges of miſt, which winds pour, in autumn, over Atha of the groves.

"Larthon raiſed the hall of Samla [n], to the ſoft ſound of the harp. He went forth to the roes of Erin, to their wonted ſtreams. Nor did he forget green headed Lumon; he often bounded over his ſeas, to where white-handed Flathal [o] looked from the hill of roes. Lumon of the foamy ſtreams, thou riſeſt on Fonar's ſoul."

The

The beam awaked in the eaſt. The miſty heads of the mountains roſe. Valleys ſhew, on every ſide, the gray-winding of their ſtreams. His hoſt heard the ſhield of Cathmor: at once they roſe around; like a crowded ſea, when firſt it feels the wings of the wind. The waves know not whither to roll; they lift their troubled heads.

Sad and ſlow retired Sul-malla to Lona of the ſtreams. She went and often turned; her blue eyes rolled in tears. But when ſhe came to the rock, that darkly covered Lona's vale: ſhe looked, from her burſting ſoul, on the king; and ſunk, at once, behind.

Son [p] of Alpin, ſtrike the ſtring. Is there ought of joy in the harp? Pour it then, on the ſoul of Oſſian: it is folded in miſt. I hear thee, O bard, in my night. But ceaſe the lightly-trembling ſound. The joy of grief belongs to Oſſian, amidſt his dark-brown years.

Green thorn of the hill of ghoſts, that ſhakeſt thy head to nightly winds! I hear no ſound in thee; is there no ſpirit's windy ſkirt now ruſtling in thy leaves? Often are the ſteps of the dead, in the dark-eddying blaſts; when the moon, a dun ſhield, from the eaſt, is rolled along the ſky.

Ullin, Carril, and Ryno, voices of the days of old! Let me hear you, in the darkneſs of Selma, and awake the ſoul of ſongs. I hear you not, ye children of muſic, in what hall of the clouds is your reſt? Do you touch the ſhadowy harp, robed with morning miſt, where the ſun comes ſounding forth from his green-headed waves?

TEMORA:

AN EPIC POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

The fourth morning, from the opening of the poem, comes on. Fingal, ſtill continuing in the place, to which he had retired on the preceding night, is ſeen, at intervals, through the miſt, which covered the rock of Cormul. The deſcent of the king is deſcribed. He orders Gaul, Dermid, and Carril the bard, to go to the valley of Cluna, and conduct, from thence, to the Caledonian army, Ferad-artho, the ſon of Cairbre, the only perſon remaining of the family of Conar, the firſt king of Ireland. The king takes the command of the army, and prepares for battle. Marching towards the enemy, he comes to the cave of Lubar, where the body of Fillan lay. Upon ſeeing his dog Bran, who lay at the entrance of the cave, his grief returns. Cathmor arranges the army of the Firbolg in order of battle. The appearance of that hero. The general conflict is deſcribed. The actions of Fingal and Cathmor. A ſtorm. The total rout of the Firbolg. The two kings engage, in a column of miſt, on the banks of Lubar. Their attitude and conference after the combat. The death of Cathmor. Fingal reſigns the ſpear of Trenmor to Oſſian. The ceremonies obſerved on that occaſion. The ſpirit of Cathmor appears to Sul-malla, in the valley of Lona. Her ſorrow. Evening comes on. A feaſt is prepared. The coming of Ferad-

artho is announced by the ſongs of a hundred bards. The poem cloſes, with a ſpeech of Fingal.

BOOK VIII.

AS when the wintry winds have ſeized the waves of the mountain-lake, have ſeized them, in ſtormy night, and clothed them over with ice; white to the hunter's early eye, the billows ſtill ſeem to roll. He turns his ear to the ſound of each unequal ridge. But each is ſilent, gleaming, ſtrewn with boughs and tufts of graſs, which ſhake and whiſtle to the wind, over their gray ſeats of froſt. So ſilent ſhone to the morning the ridges of Morven's hoſt, as each warrior looked up from his helmet towards the hill of the king; the cloud-covered hill of Fingal, where he ſtrode, in the rolling of miſt. At times is the hero, ſeen, greatly dim in all his arms. From thought to thought rolled the war, along his mighty ſoul.

Now is the coming forth of the king. Firſt appeared the ſword of Luno; the ſpear half iſſuing from a cloud, the ſhield ſtill dim in miſt. But when the ſtride of the king came abroad, with all his gray, dewy locks in the wind; then roſe the ſhouts of his hoſt over every moving tribe. They gathered, gleaming, round with all their echoing ſhields, ſhields. So riſe the green ſeas round a ſpirit, that comes down from the ſqually wind. The traveller hears the ſound afar, and lifts his head over the rock. He looks on the troubled bay, and thinks he dimly ſees the form. The waves ſport, unwieldy, round, with all their backs of foam.

Far-diſtant ſtood the ſon of Morni, Duthno's race, and Cona's bard. We ſtood far-diſtant; each beneath his tree. We ſhunned the eyes of the king; we had not conquered in the field. A little ſtream rolled at my feet: I touched its light wave, with my ſpear. I touched it with my ſpear; nor there was the ſoul of Oſſian. It darkly roſe, from thought to thought, and ſent abroad the ſigh.

"Son of Morni," ſaid the king, "Dermid, hunter of roes! why are ye dark, like two rocks, each with its trickling waters? No wrath gathers on the ſoul of Fingal, againſt the chiefs of men. Ye are my ſtrength in battle; the kindling of my joy in peace. My early voice was a pleaſant gale to your ears, when Fillan prepared the bow. The ſon of Fingal is not here, nor yet the chace of the bounding roes. But why ſhould the breakers of ſhields, darkened, far away?"

Tall they ſtrode towards the king; they ſaw him turned to Mora's wind. His tears came down, for his blue-eyed ſon, who ſlept in the cave of ſtreams. But he brightened before them, and ſpoke to the broad-ſhielded kings.

"Crommal, with woody rocks, and miſty top, the field of winds, pours forth, to the ſight, blue Lubar's ſtreamy roar. Behind it rolls clear-winding Lavath, in the vale of deer. A cave is dark in a rock; above it ſtrong-winged eagles dwell; broad-headed oaks, before it found it Cluna's wind. Within his locks of youth, is Ferad-artho [a], blue-eyed king, the ſon of broad-ſhielded Cairbar, from Ullin of the roes. He liſtens to the voice of Condan, as gray, he bends in feeble light. He liſtens, for his foes dwell in the echoing halls of Temora. He comes, at times, abroad, in the ſkirts of miſt, to pierce the bounding roes. When the ſun looks on the field, nor by the rock, nor ſtream, is he! He ſhuns the race of Bolga, who dwell in his father's hall. Tell him, that Fingal lifts the ſpear, and that his foes, perhaps, may fail.

"Lift up, O Gaul, the ſhield before him. Stretch, Dermid, Temora's ſpear. Be thy voice in his ear, O Carril, with the deeds of his fathers. Lead him to green Moi-lena, to the duſky field of ghoſts; for there I fall forward in battle, in the folds of war. Before dun night deſcends, come to high Dunmora's top. Look, from the gray rolling of miſt, on Lena of the ſtreams. If there my ſtandard ſhall float on wind, over Lubar's gleaming courſe, then has not Fingal failed in the laſt of his fields."

Such were his words: nor aught replied the ſilent, ſtriding kings. They looked ſide-long, on Erin's hoſt, and darkened, as they went. Never before had they left the king, in the midſt of the ſtormy field. Behind them, touching at times his harp, the gray-haired Carril moved. He foreſaw the fall of the people, and mournful was the ſound! It was like a breeze that comes, by fits, over Lego's reedy lake; when ſleep half-deſcends on the hunter, within his moſſy cave.

"Why bends the bard of Cona," ſaid Fingal, "over his ſecret ſtream? Is this a time for ſorrow, father of low-laid Oſcar? Be the warriors [b] remembered in peace; when echoing ſhields are heard no more. Bend, then, in grief, over the flood, where blows the mountain breeze. Let them paſs on thy ſoul, the blue-eyed dwellers of Lena. But Erin rolls to war, wide-tumbling, rough, and dark. Lift, Oſſian, lift the ſhield. I am alone, my ſon!"

As comes the ſudden voice of winds to the becalmed ſhip of Inis-huna, and drives it large, along the deep, dark rider of the wave: ſo the voice of Fingal ſent Oſſian, tall, along the heath. He lifted high his ſhining ſhield, in the duſky wing of war: like the broad, blank moon, in the ſkirt of a cloud, before the ſtorms ariſe.

Loud, from moſs-covered Mora, poured down, at once, the broad-winged war. Fingal led his people forth, king of Morven of ſtreams. On high ſpread the eagle's wing. His gray hair is poured on his ſhoulders broad. In thunder are his mighty ſtrides. He often ſtood, and ſaw behind, the wide-gleaming rolling of armour. A rock he ſeemed, gray over with ice, whoſe woods are high in wind. Bright ſtreams leap from its head, and ſpread their foam on blaſts.

Now he came to Lubar's cave, where Fillan darkly ſlept. Bran ſtill lay on the broken ſhield: the eagle-wing is ſtrewed on winds Bright, from withered furze, looked forth the hero's ſpear. Then grief ſtirred the ſoul of the king, like whirlwinds blackening on a lake. He turned his ſudden ſtep, and leaned on his bending ſpear.

White-breaſted Bran came bounding with joy to the known path of Fingal. He came and looked towards the cave, where the blue-eyed hunter lay, for he was wont to ſtride, with morning to the dewy bed of the roe. It was then the tears of the king came down, and all his ſoul was dark. But as the riſing wind rolls away the ſtorm of rain, and leaves leaves the white ſtreams to the ſun, and high hills with their heads of graſs; ſo the returning war brightened the mind of Fingal. He bounded [c], on his ſpear, over Lubar, and ſtruck his echoing ſhield. His ridgy hoſt bend forward, at once, with all their pointed ſteel.

Nor Erin heard, with fear, the ſound: wide they came rolling along. Dark Malthos, in the wing of war, looks forward from ſhaggy brows. Next roſe that beam of light Hidalla; then the ſide-long-looking gloom of Maronan. Blue-ſhielded Clonar lifts the ſpear; Cormar ſhakes his buſhy locks on the wind. Slowly, from behind a rock, roſe the bright form of Atha. Firſt appeared his two pointed ſpears, then the half of his burniſhed ſhield: like the riſing of a nightly meteor, over the vale of ghoſts. But when he ſhone all abroad: the hoſts plunged, at once, into ſtrife. The gleaming waves of ſteel are poured on either ſide.

As meet two troubled ſeas, with the rolling of all their waves, when they feel the wings of contending winds, in the rock-ſided firth of Lumon; along the echoing hills is the dim courſe of ghoſts: from the blaſt fall the torn groves on the deep, amidſt the foamy path of whales. So mixed the hoſts! Now Fingal; now Cathmor came abroad. The dark tumbling of death is before them: the gleam of broken ſteel is rolled on their ſteps, as, loud, the high-bounding kings hewed down the ridge of ſhields.

Maronan fell, by Fingal, laid large acroſs a ſtream. The waters gathered by his ſide, and leapt gray over his boſſy ſhield. Clonar is pierced by Cathmor: nor yet lay the chief on earth. An oak ſeized his hair in his fall. His helmet rolled on the ground. By its thong, hung his broad ſhield; over it wandered his ſtreaming blood. Tlamin [d] ſhall weep, in the hall, and ſtrike her heaving breaſt. Nor did Oſſian forget the ſpear, in the wing of his war. He ſtrewed the field with dead. Young Hidalla came. Soft voice of ſtreamy Clonra! Why doſt thou lift the ſteel? O that we met, in the ſtrife of ſong, in thy own ruſhy vale! Malthos beheld him low, and darkened as he ruſhed along. On either ſide of a ſtream, we bend in the echoing ſtrife. Heaven comes rolling down: around burſt the voices of ſqually winds. Hills are clothed, at times, in fire. Thunder rolls in wreaths of miſt. In darkneſs ſhrunk the foe: Morven's warriors ſtood aghaſt. Still I bent over the ſtream, amidſt my whiſtling locks.

Then roſe the voice of Fingal, and the ſound of the flying foe. I ſaw the king, at times, in lightning, darkly ſtriding in his might. I ſtruck my echoing ſhield, and hung forward on the ſteps of Alnecma: the foe is rolled before me, like a wreath of ſmoke.

The ſun looked forth from his cloud. The hundred ſtreams of Moi-lena ſhone. Slow roſe the blue columns of miſt, againſt the glittering hill. Where are the mighty kings [e]! Nor by that ſtream, nor wood, are they! I hear the clang of arms! Their ſtrife is in the boſom of miſt. Such is the contending of ſpirits in a nightly cloud, when they ſtrive for the wintry wings of winds, and the rolling of the foam-covered waves.

I ruſhed along. The gray miſt roſe. Tall, gleaming, they ſtood at Lubar. Cathmor leaned againſt a rock. His half-fallen ſhield received the ſtream, that leapt from the moſs above. Towards him is the ſtride of Fingal; he ſaw the hero's blood. His ſword fell ſlowly to his ſide. He ſpoke, midſt his darkening joy.

"Yields the race of Borbar-duthul? Or ſtill does he lift the ſpear? Not unheard is thy name, in Selma, in the green dwelling of ſtrangers. It has come, like the breeze of his deſart, to the ear of Fingal. Come to my hill of feaſts: the mighty fail, at times. No fire am I to low-laid foes: I rejoice not over the fall of the brave. To cloſe [f] the wound is mine: I have known the herbs of the hills.

hills. I ſeized their fair heads, on high, as they waved by their ſacred ſtreams. Thou art dark and ſilent, king of Atha of ſtrangers."

"By Atha of the ſtreams," he ſaid, "there riſes a moſſy rock. On its head is the wandering of boughs, within the courſe of winds. Dark, in its face, is a cave with its own loud rill. There have I heard the tread of ſtrangers [g], when they paſſed to my hall of ſhells. Joy roſe, like a flame, on my ſoul: I bleſt the echoing rock. Here be my dwelling, in darkneſs, in my graſſy vale. From this I ſhall mount the breeze, that purſues my thiſtle's beard; or look down, on blue-winding Atha, from its wandering miſt."

"Why ſpeaks the king of the tomb? Oſſian! the warrior has failed! Joy meet thy ſoul, like a ſtream, Cathmor, friend of ſtrangers! My ſon, I hear the call of years: they take my ſpear as they paſs along. Why does not Fingal, they ſeem to ſay, reſt within his hall? Doſt thou always delight in blood? In the tears of the ſad? No: ye darkly-rolling years, Fingal delights not in blood. Tears are wintry ſtreams that waſte away my ſoul. But when I lie down to reſt, then comes the mighty voice of war. It awakes me, in my hall, and calls forth all my ſteel. It ſhall call it forth no more;

more; Oſſian, take thou thy father's ſpear. Lift it, in battle, when the proud ariſe.

" My fathers, Oſſian, trace my ſteps; my deeds are pleaſant to their eyes. Wherever I come forth to battle, on my field, are their columns of miſt. But mine arm reſcued the feeble; the haughty found my rage was fire. Never, over the fallen, did mine eye rejoice. For this [h] my fathers ſhall meet me, at the gates of their airy halls, tall, with robes of light, with mildly-kindled eyes. But, to the proud in arms, they are darkened moons in heaven, which ſend the fire of night, red-wandering over their face.

" Father of heroes, Trenmor, dweller of eddying winds! I give thy ſpear to Oſſian, let thine eye rejoice. Thee have I ſeen, at times, bright from between thy clouds; ſo appear to my ſon, when he is to lift the ſpear: then ſhall he remember thy mighty deeds, though thou art now but a blaſt."

He gave the ſpear to my hand, and raiſed, at once, a ſtone on high, to ſpeak to future times, with its gray head of moſs. Beneath he placed a ſword [i] in earth, and one bright boſs from his ſhield. Dark in thought, a-while, he bends: his words, at length, came forth.

" When

"When thou, O ſtone, ſhall moulder down, and loſe thee, in the moſs of years, then ſhall the traveller come, and whiſtling paſs away. Thou know'ſt not, feeble wanderer, that fame once ſhone on Moi-lena. Here Fingal reſigned his ſpear, after the laſt of his fields. Paſs away, thou empty ſhade; in thy voice there is no renown. Thou dwelleſt by ſome peaceful ſtream; yet a few years, and thou art gone. No one remembers thee, thou dweller of thick miſt! But Fingal ſhall be clothed with fame, a beam of light to other times; for he went forth, in echoing ſteel, to ſave the weak in arms."

Brightening in his fame, the king ſtrode to Lubar's ſounding oak, where it bent, from its rock, over the bright tumbling ſtream. Beneath it is a narrow plain, and the ſound of the fount of the rock. Here the ſtandard [k] of Morven poured its wreaths on the wind, to mark the way of Feradartho, from his ſecret vale. Bright, from his parted weſt, the ſun of heaven looked abroad. The hero ſaw his people, and heard their ſhoots of joy. In broken ridges round, they glittered to the beam. The king rejoiced, as a hunter in his own green vale, when after the ſtorm is rolled away, he ſees the gleaming ſides of the rocks. The green thorn ſhakes its head in their face; from their top, look forward the roes.

Gray[l] at his moſſy cave, is bent the aged form of Clonmal. The eyes of the bard had failed. He leaned forward, on his ſtaff. Bright, in her locks, before him, Sul-malla liſtened to the tale; the tale of the kings of Atha, in the days of old. The noiſe of battle had ceaſed in his ear: he ſtopt, and raiſed the ſecret ſigh. The ſpirits of the dead, they ſaid, often lightened over his ſoul. He ſaw the king of Atha low, beneath his bending tree.

"Why art thou dark?" ſaid the maid, "The ſtrife of arms is paſt. Soon[m] ſhall he come to thy cave, over thy winding ſtreams. The ſun looks from the rocks of the weſt. The miſts of the lake ariſe. Gray, they ſpread on that hill, the ruſhy dwelling of roes. From the miſt ſhall my king appear! Behold, he comes in his arms. Come to the cave of Clonmal, O my beſt beloved!"

It was the ſpirit of Cathmor, ſtalking, large, a gleaming form. He ſunk by the hollow ſtream, that roared between the hills. "It was but the hunter," ſhe ſaid, "who ſearches for the bed of the roe. His ſteps are not forth to war; his ſpouſe expects him with night. He ſhall, whiſtling, return, with the ſpoils of the dark-brown hinds." Her eyes are turned to the hill; again the ſtately form came down. She roſe, in the midſt of joy. He retired in miſt. Gradual vaniſh his limbs of ſmoke, and mix with the mountain-wind. Then ſhe knew that he fell! "King of Erin art thou low!" Let Oſſian forget her grief; it waſtes the ſoul of age [n].

Evening came down on Moi-lena. Gray rolled the ſtreams of the land. Loud came forth the voice of Fingal: the beam of oaks aroſe. The people gathered round with gladneſs; with gladneſs blended with ſhades. They ſide-long-looked to the king, and beheld his unfiniſhed joy. Pleaſant, from the way of the depart, the voice of muſic came. It ſeemed, at firſt, the noiſe of a ſtream, far-diſtant on its rocks. Slow it rolled along the hill like the ruffled wing of a breeze, when it takes the tufted beard of the rocks, in the ſtill ſeaſon of night. It was the voice of Condan, mixed with Carril's trembling harp. They came with blue-eyed Ferad-artho, to Mora of the ſtreams.

Sudden burſts the ſong from our bards, on Lena: the hoſt ſtruck their ſhields midſt the ſound. Gladneſs roſe brightening on the king, like the beam of a cloudy day when it riſes, on the green hill, before the roar of winds. He ſtruck the boſſy ſhield of kings; at once they ceaſe around.

The people lean forward, from their ſpears, towards the voice of their land °.

" Sons of Morven, ſpread their feaſt; ſend the night away on ſong. Ye have ſhone around me, and the dark ſtorm is paſt. My people are the windy rocks, from which I ſpread my eagle wings, when I ruſh forth to renown, and ſeize it on its field. Oſſian, thou haſt the ſpear of Fingal: it is not the ſtaff of a boy with which he ſtrews the thiſtle round, young wanderer of the field. No: it is the lance of the mighty, with which they ſtretched forth their hands to death. Look to thy fathers, my ſon; they are awful beams. With morning lead Ferad-artho forth to the echoing halls of Temora. Remind him of the kings of Erin: the ſtately forms of old. Let not the fallen be forgot, they were mighty in the field. Let Carril pour his ſong, that the kings may rejoice in their miſt. To-morrow I ſpread my ſails to Selma's ſhaded walls; where ſtreamy Duthula winds through the ſeats of roes."

TEMORA:

BOOK I.

[a] Cairbar, the ſon of Borbar-duthul, was deſcended lineally from Larthon the chief of the Firbolg, the firſt colony who ſettled in the ſouth of Ireland. The Cael were in poſſeſſion of the northern coaſt of that kingdom, and the firſt monarchs of Ireland were of their race. Hence aroſe thoſe differences between the two nations, which terminated, at laſt, in the murder of Cormac, and the uſurpation of Cairbar, lord of Atha, who is mentioned in this place.

Foldath, who is here ſtrongly marked, makes a great figure in the ſequel of the poem. His fierce, uncomplying character is ſuſtained throughout. He ſeems, from a paſſage in the ſecond book, to have been Cairbar's greateſt confident, and to have had a principal hand in the conſpiracy againſt Cormac king of Ireland. His tribe was one of the moſt conſiderable race of the Fir-bolg.

[c] Mor-annal here alludes to the particular appearance of Fingal's ſpear. If a man, upon his firſt landing in a ſtrange country, kept the point of his ſpear forward, it denoted in thoſe days that he came in a hoſtile manner, and accordingly he was treated as an enemy; if he kept the point behind him, it was a token of friendſhip, and he was immediately diately invited to the feaſt, according to the hoſpitality of the times.

d This was the famous ſword of Fingal, made by Luno, a ſmith of Lochlin, and after him poetically called the ſon of Lano: it is ſaid of this ſword, that it killed a man at every ſtroke; and that Fingal never uſed it but in times of the greateſt danger.

e The oppoſite characters of Foldath and Malthos are ſtrongly marked in ſubſequent parts of the poem. They appear always in oppoſition. The feuds between their families, which were the ſource of their hatred to one another, are mentioned in other poems.

f That is, who has heard my vaunting? He intended the expreſſion as a rebuke to the ſelf-praiſe of Foldath.

g Hidalla was the chief of Clonra, a ſmall diſtrict on the banks of the lake of Lego. The beauty of his perſon, his eloquence, and genius for poetry, are afterwards mentioned.

h Cathol the ſon of Maronnan, or Moran, was murdered by Cairbar, for his attachment to the family of Cormac. He had attended Oſcar to the war of Innis-thona, where they contracted a great friendſhip for one another. Oſcar immediately after the death of Cathol, had ſent a formal challenge to Cairbar, which he prudently declined, but conceived a ſecret hatred againſt Oſcar, and had beforehand contrived to kill him at the feaſt, to which he here invites him.

i He alludes to the battle of Oſcar againſt Caros, king of ſhips; who is ſuppoſed to be the ſame with Carauſius the uſurper.

k Cathmor, great in battle, the ſon of Borbar-duthul, and brother of Cairbar king of Ireland, had, before the inſurrection of the Firbolg, paſſed over into Inis-hura, ſuppoſed to be a part of South-Britain, to aſſiſt Conmor king of that place againſt his enemies. Cathmor was ſucceſsful in the war, but in the courſe of it, Conmor was either killed, or died a natural death. Cairbar, upon intelligence of the deſigns of Fingal to dethrone him, had diſpatched a meſſenger for Cathmor, who returned into Ireland a few days before the opening of the poem.

Cairbar here takes advantage of his brother's abſcence, to perpetrate his ungenerous deſigns againſt Oſçar; for the noble ſpirit of Cathmor, had he been preſent, would not have permitted the laws of that hoſpitality, for which he was ſo renowned himſelf to be violated. The brothers form a contraſt; we do not deteſt the mean foul of Cairbar more, than we admire the diſintereſted and generous mind of Cathmor.

[1] Fingal's army heard the joy that was in Cairbar's camp. The character given of Cathmor is agreeable to the times. Some, through oſtentation, were hoſpitable: and others fell naturally into a cuſtom handed down from their anceſtors. But what marks ſtrongly the character of Cathmor, is his averſion to praiſe; for he is repreſented to dwell in a wood to avoid the thanks of his gueſts; which is ſtill a higher degree of generoſity than that of Axylus in Homer; for the poet does not ſay, but the good man might, at the head of his own table, have heard with pleaſure the praiſe beſtowed on him by the people he entertained.

No nation in the world carried hoſpitality to a greater length than the ancient Scots. It was even infamous, for many ages, in a man of condition, to have the door of his houſe ſhut at all, leſt, as the bards expreſs, the ſtranger ſhould come and behold his contracted ſoul. Some of the chiefs were poſſeſſed of this hoſpitable diſpoſition to an extravagant travagant degree; and the bards, perhaps upon a felfifh account, never failed to recommend it, in their eulogiums, Cean-uia' na dai', or the point to which all the roads of the ſtrangers lead, was an invariable epithet given by them to the chiefs; on the contrary, they diſtinguiſhed the inhoſpitable by the title of the cloud which the ſtrangers ſhun. This laſt however was ſo uncommon, that in all the old poems I have ever met with, I found but one man branded with this ignominious appellation; and that, perhaps, only founded upon a private quarrel, which ſubſiſted between him and the patron of the bard, who wrote the poem.

[m] When a chief was determined to kill a perſon already in his power, it was uſual to ſignify that his death was intended by the ſound of a ſhield ſtruck with the blunt end of a ſpear; at the ſame time that a bard at a diſtance raiſed the death-ſong. A ceremony of another kind was long uſed in Scotland upon ſuch occaſions. Every body has heard that a bull's head was ſerved up to Lord Douglas in the caſtle of Edinburgh, as a certain ſignal of his approaching death.

[n] Cormac, the ſon of Arth, had given the ſpear, which is here the foundation of the quarrel, to Oſſar when he came to congratulate him, upon Swaran's being expelled from Ireland.

[o] Ti-mor-ráth, the houſe of good fortune, the name of the royal palace of the ſupreme kings of Ireland.

[p] Hundred here is an indefinite number, and is only intended to expreſs a great many. It was probably the hyperbolical phraſes of bards, that gave the firſt hint to the Iriſh Senachies to place the origin of their monarchy in ſo remote a period as they have done.

[q] Atha,

[q] Atha, ſhallow river: the name of Cairbar's ſeat in Connaught.

[r] Malvina, the daughter of Toſcar, to whom he addreſſes that part of the poem which relates to the death of Oſcar her lover.

[s] The Iriſh hiſtorians place the death of Cairbar, in the latter end of the third century: they ſay, he was killed in battle againſt Oſcar the ſon of Oſſian, but deny that he fell by his hand.

It is, however, certain, that the Iriſh hiſtorians diſguiſe, in ſome meaſure, this part of their hiſtory. An Iriſh poem on this ſubject, which, undoubtedly was the ſource of their information, concerning the battle of Gabhra, where Cairbar fell, is juſt now in my hands. The circumſtances are leſs to the diſadvantage of the character of Cairbar, than thoſe related by Oſſian. As a tranſlation of the poem (which, though evidently no very ancient compoſition, does not want poetical merit) would extend this note to too great a length, I ſhall only give the ſtory of it, in brief, with ſome extracts from the original Iriſh.

Oſcar, ſays the Iriſh bard, was invited to a feaſt, at Temora, by Cairbar king of Ireland. A diſpute aroſe between the two heroes, concerning the exchange of ſpears, which was uſually made, between the gueſts and their hoſt, upon ſuch occaſions. In the courſe of their altercation, Cairbar ſaid, in a boaſtful manner, that he would hunt on the hills of Albion, and carry the ſpoils of it into Ireland, in ſpite of all the efforts of its inhabitants. The original words are;

Briathar buan ſin; Briathar buan
A bheireadh an Cairbre rua.'
Gu tuga' ſe fealg, agus creach
A h'Albin an la'r na mhaireach

Oſcar

Oſcar replied, that, the next day, he himſelf would carry into Albion the ſpoils of the five provinces of Ireland; in ſpite of the oppoſition of Cairbar.

Briathar eile an aghai' ſin
A bheirea' an t'Oſcar, og, calma
Gu'n tugadh ſe ſealg agus creach
Do dh'ALBIN an la'r na mhairnach, &c.

Oſcar, in conſequence of his threats, begun to lay waſte Ireland; but as he returned with the ſpoil into Ulſter, through the narrow paſs of Gabhra (Caoilghlen-Ghabhra) he was met, by Cairbar, and a battle enſued, in which both the heroes fell by mutual wounds. The bard gives a very curious liſt of the followers of Oſcar, as they marched to battle. They appear to have been five hundred in number, commanded, as the poet expreſſes it, by five heroes of the blood of kings. This poem mentions Fingal, as arriving from Scotland, before Oſcar died of his wounds.

[u] Althan, the ſon of Conachar, was the chief bard of Arth king of Ireland. After the death of Arth, Althan attended his ſon Cormac, and was preſent at his death. He had made his eſcape from Cairbar, by the means of Cathmor, and coming to Fingal, related, as here, the death of his maſter Cormac.

[y] Doira, the woody ſide of a mountain; it is here a hill in the neighbourhood of Temora.

[z] Arth or Artho, the father of Cormac king of Ireland.

[a] Cuchullin is called the king of Tura, from a caſtle of that name on the coaſt of Ulſter, where he dwelt, before he undertook the management of the affairs of Ireland, in the minority of Cormac.

[b] The prophetic ſound, mentioned in other poems, which the harps of the bards emitted before the death of a perſon worthy and renowned. It is here an omen of the death of Cormac, which, ſoon after, followed.

[c] Slimora, a hill in Connaught, near which Cuchullin was killed.

[d] Uſnoth chief of Etha, a diſtrict on the weſtern coaſt of Scotland, had three ſons, Nathos, Althos, and Ardan, by Sliſſama the ſiſter of Cuchullin. The three brothers, when very young, were ſent over to Ireland by their father, to learn the uſe of arms under their uncle, whoſe military fame was very great in that kingdom. They had juſt arrived in Ulſter when the news of Cuchullin's death arrived. Nathos, the eldeſt of the three brothers, took the command of Cuchullin's army, and made head againſt Cairbar the chief of Atha. Cairbar having, at laſt, murdered young king Cormac, at Temora, the army of Nathos ſhifted ſides, and the brothers were obliged to return into Ulſter, in order to paſs over into Scotland. The ſequel of their mournful ſtory is related, at large, in the poem of Dar-thula.

[e] Caithbait was grandfather to Cuchullin; and his ſhield was made uſe of to alarm his poſterity to the battles of the family.

[f] That is, they ſaw a manifeſt likeneſs between the perſon of Nathos and Cuchullin.

[g] Nathos the ſon of Uſnoth.

[h] Geal-lamha, white-handed.

[i] From this expreſſion, we underſtand, that Cairbar had entered the palace of Temora, in the midſt of Cormac's ſpeech.

[k] Althan

[k] Althan ſpeaks.

[l] That is, himſelf and Carril, as it afterwards appears.

[m] The perſons of the bards were ſo ſacred, that even he, who had juſt murdered his ſovereign, feared to kill them.

[n] Cathmor appears the ſame diſintereſted hero upon every occaſion. His humanity and generoſity were unparalleled: in ſhort he had no fault, but too much attachment to ſo bad a brother as Cairbar. His family connection with Cairbar prevails, as he expreſſes it, over every other conſideration, and makes him engage in a war, of which he did not approve.

BOOK II.

[a] Though this book has little action, it is not the leaſt important part of Temora. The poet, in ſeveral epiſodes, runs up the cauſe of the war to the very ſource. The firſt population of Ireland, the wars between the two nations who originally poſſeſſed that iſland, its firſt race of kings, and the revolutions of its government, are important facts, and are delivered by the poet, with ſo little mixture of the fabulous, that one cannot help preferring his accounts to the improbable fictions of the Scottiſh and Iriſh hiſtorians. The Mileſian fables of thoſe gentlemen bear about them the marks of a late invention. To trace their legends to their ſource would be no difficult taſk; but a diſquiſition of this ſort would extend this note too far.

[b] We underſtand, from the preceding book, that Cathmor was near with an army. When Cairbar was killed, the tribes who attended him fell back to Cathmor; who, as it afterwards appears, had taken a reſolution to ſurpriſe Fingal by night. Fillan was diſpatched to the hill of Mora, which was in the front of the Caledonians, to obſerve the motions of Cathmor. In this ſituation were affairs when Oſſian, upon hearing the noiſe of the approaching enemy, went to find out his brother. Their converſation naturally introduces the epiſode, concerning Conar the ſon of Trenmor, the firſt Iriſh monarch, which is ſo neceſſary to the underſtanding the foundation of the rebellion and uſurpation of Cairbar and Cathmor. Fillan was the youngeſt of the ſons of Fingal, then living. He and Boſmina, mentioned in the battle of Lora, were the only children of the king, by Clatho the daughter of Cathulla king of Iniſtore, whom he had taken to wife, after the death of Ros-crana, the daughter of Cormac Mac-Conar king of Ireland.

[c] That is, two ſons in Ireland. Fergus, the ſecond ſon of Fingal, was, at that time, on an expedition, which is mentioned in one of the leſſer poems of Oſſian. He, according to ſome traditions, was the anceſtor of Fergus, the ſon of Erc or Arcath, commonly called Fergus the ſecond in the Scottiſh hiſtories. The beginning of the reign of Fergus, over the Scots, is placed, by the moſt approved annals of Scotland, in the fourth year of the fifth age: a full century after the death of Oſſian. The genealogy of his family is recorded thus by the Highland Senachies; Fergus Mac-Arcath Mac-Chongeal, Mac-Fergus, Mac-Fiongael na buai': i. e. Fergus the ſon of Arcath, the ſon of Congal, the ſon of Fergus, the ſon of Fingal the victorious. This ſubject is treated more at large, in the Diſſertation prefixed to the poems.

[d] The ſouthern parts of Ireland went, for ſome time, under the name of Bolga, from the Fir-bolg or Belgæ of Britain, who ſettled a colony there. Bolg ſignifies a quiver, from from which proceeds Fir-bolg, i. e. bow-men, ſo called from their uſing bows, more than any of the neighbouring nations.

[e] It is remarkable, that, after this paſſage, Oſcar is not mentioned in all Temora. The ſituations of the characters who act in the poem are ſo intereſting, that others, foreign to the ſubject, could not be introduced with any luſtre. Though the epiſode, which follows, may ſeem to flow naturally enough from the converſation of the brothers, yet I have ſhewn, in a preceding note, and, more at large in the Diſſertation prefixed to this collection, that the poet had a farther deſign in view.

[f] Conar, the firſt king of Ireland, was the ſon of Trenmor, the great-grandfather of Fingal. It was on account of this family connection, that Fingal was engaged in ſo many wars in the cauſe of the race of Conar. Though few of the actions of Trenmor are mentioned in Oſſian's poems, yet, from the honourable appellations beſtowed on him, we may conclude that he was, in the days of the poet, the moſt renowned name of antiquity. The moſt probable opinion concerning him is, that he was the firſt, who united the tribes of the Caledonians, and commanded them, in chief, againſt the incurſions of the Romans. The genealogiſts of the North have traced his family far back, and given a liſt of his anceſtors to Cuanmor nan lan, or Conmor of the ſwords, who, according to them, was the firſt who croſſed the great ſea, to Caledonia, from which circumſtance his name proceeded, which ſignifies Great ocean. Genealogies of ſo ancient a date, however, are little to be depended upon.

[g] The chiefs of the Fir-bolg who poſſeſſed themſelves of the ſouth of Ireland, prior, perhaps, to the ſettlement of the Cael of Caledonia, and the Hebrides, in Ulſter. From the

the ſequel, it appears that the Fir-bolg were, by much the moſt powerful nation; and it is probable that the Cael muſt have ſubmitted to them, had they not received ſuccours from their mother-country, under the command of Conar.

[h] Colg-er, fiercely-looking warrior. Sulin-corma, blue-eyes. Colgar was the eldeſt of the ſons of Trathal: Comhal, who was the father of Fingal, was very young when the preſent expedition to Ireland happened. It is remarkable, that, of all his anceſtors, the poet makes the leaſt mention of Comhal; which, probably, proceeded from the unfortunate life and untimely death of that hero. From ſome paſſages, concerning him, we learn, indeed, that he was brave, but he wanted conduct.

[i] The poet begins here to mark ſtrongly the character of Fillan, who is to make ſo great a figure in the ſequel of the poem. He has the impatience, the ambition, and fire which are peculiar to a young hero. Kindled with the fame of Colgar, he forgets his untimely fall. From Fillan's expreſſions in this paſſage, it would ſeem, that he was neglected by Fingal, on account of his youth.

[k] Cathmor is diſtinguiſhed, by this honourable title, on account of his generoſity to ſtrangers, which was ſo great as to be remarkable, even in thoſe days of hoſpitality.

[l] Fonar, the man of ſong. Before the introduction of Chriſtianity, a name was not impoſed upon any perſon, till he had diſtinguiſhed himſelf by ſome remarkable action, from which his name ſhould be derived.

[m] Brumo was a place of worſhip (Fing. B. VI.) in Craca, which is ſuppoſed to be one of the iſles of Shetland. It was thought, that the ſpirits of the deceaſed haunted it, by night, which adds more terror to the deſcription introduced here.

here. The horrid circle of Bruno, where often, they ſaid, the ghoſts of the dead howled round the ſtone of fear.

[n] From this paſſage it appears, that it was Foldath who had adviſed the night attack. The gloomy character of Foldath is properly contraſted to the generous, the open Cathmor.

[o] By this exclamation, Cathmor intimates that he intends to revenge the death of his brother Cairbar.

[p] To have no funeral elegy ſung over his tomb, was, in thoſe days, reckoned the greateſt misfortune that could befal a man; as his ſoul could not otherwiſe be admitted to the airy hall of his fathers.

[q] By the ſtranger of Inis-huna, is meant Sul-malla, the daughter of Conmor king of Inis-huna, the ancient name of that part of South-Britain, which is next to the Iriſh coaſt. She had followed Cathmor in diſguiſe. Her ſtory is related at large in the fourth book.

[r] Crothiar was the anceſtor of Cathmor, and the firſt of his family, who had ſettled in Atha. It was in his time, that the firſt wars were kindled between the Fir-bolg and Cael. The propriety of the epiſode is evident; as the conteſt which originally roſe between Crothar and Conar, ſubſiſted afterwards between their poſterity, and was the foundation of the ſtory of the poem.

[s] From this circumſtance we may learn, that the art of building with ſtone was not known in Ireland ſo early as the days of Crothar. When the colony were long ſettled in the country, the arts of civil life began to increaſe among them; for we find mention made of the towers of Atha in the time of Cathmor, which could not well be applied to wooden buildings. In Caledonia they begun very early to build with ſtone. None of the houſes of Fingal, excepting Ti-foirmal were of wood. Ti-foirmal was the great hall where the bards met to repeat their compoſitions annually, before they ſubmitted them to the judgment of the king in Selma.

[t] Alnecma, or Alnecmacht, was the ancient name of Connaught. Ullin is ſtill the Iriſh name of the province of Ulſter. To avoid the multiplying of notes, I ſhall here give the ſignification of the names in this epiſode. Drumardo, high-ridge. Cathmin, calm in battle. Con-lamha, ſoft hand. Turloch, man of the quiver. Cormul, blue eye.

[u] The delicacy of the bard, with regard to Crothar, is remarkable. As he was the anceſtor of Cathmor, to whom the epiſode is addreſſed, the bard ſoftens his defeat, by only mentioning that his people fled. Cathmor took the ſong of Fonar in an unfavourable light. The bards, being of the order of the Druids, who pretended to a foreknowledge of events, were ſuppoſed to have ſome ſupernatural preſcience of futurity. The king thought, that the choice of Fonar's ſong proceeded, from his foreſeeing the unfortunate iſſue of the war; and that his own fate was ſhadowed out, in that of his anceſtor Crothar. The attitude of the bard, after the reprimand of his patron, is picturesque and affecting. We admire the ſpeech of Cathmor, but lament the effect it has on the feeling ſoul of the good old poet.

[x] Borbar-duthul, the ſurly warrior of the dark-brown eyes. That his name ſuited well with his character, we may eaſily conceive, from the ſtory delivered concerning him, by Malthos, toward the end of the ſixth book. He was the brother of that Colculla, who is mentioned in the epiſode which begins the fourth book.

[q] The grave, often poetically called a houſe. This reply of Oſſian abounds with the moſt exalted ſentiments of a noble a noble mind. Though, of all men living, he was the moſt injured by Cairbar, yet he laid aſide his rage as the ſae was low. How different is this from the behaviour of the heroes of other ancient poems! Cynthius aurem vellit.

[z] The morning of the ſecond day, from the opening of the poem, comes on. After the death of Cuchullin, Carril, the ſon of Kinſena, his bard, retired to the cave of Tura, which was in the neighbourhood of Moi-lena, the ſcene of the poem of Temora. His caſual appearance here enables Oſſian to fulfil immediately the promiſe he had made to Cathmor, of cauſing the funeral ſong to be pronounced over the tomb of Cairbar. This book takes up only the ſpace of a few hours.

BOOK III.

[a] Strumon, ſtream of the hill, the name of the ſeat of the family of Gaul, in the neighbourhood of Selma. During Gaul's expedition to Tromathon, mentioned in the poem of Oithona, Morni his father died. Morni ordered the ſword of Strumon, (which had been preſerved, in the family, as a relique, from the days of Colgach the moſt renowned of his anceſtors) to be laid by his ſide, in the tomb: at the ſame time, leaving it in charge to his ſon, not to take it from thence, till he was reduced to the laſt extremity. Not long after, two of his brothers being ſlain, in battle, by Coldaronnan, chief of Clutha, Gaul went to his father's tomb to take the ſword. His addreſs to the ſpirit of the deceaſed hero, is the only part now remaining, of a poem of Oſſian, on the ſubject. I ſhall here lay it before the reader.

Gaul. "Breaker of echoing ſhields, whoſe head is deep in ſhades; hear me from the darkneſs of Clora, O ſon of Colgach, hear!

No ruſtling, like the eagle's wing, comes over the courſe of my ſtreams. Deep-boſomed in the miſt of the deſart, O king of Strumon, hear!

Dwelleſt thou in the ſhadowy breeze, that pours its dark wave over the graſs? Ceaſe to ſtrew the beard of the thiſtle; O chief of Clora, hear!

Or rideſt thou a beam, amidſt the dark trouble of clouds? Poureſt thou the loud wind on ſeas, to roll their blue waves over iſles? hear me, father of Gaul; amidſt thy terrors, hear!

The ruſtling of eagles is heard, the murmuring oaks ſhake their heads on the hills; dreadful and pleaſant is thy approach, friend of the dwelling heroes.

Morni. Who awakes me, in the midſt of my cloud, where my locks of miſt ſpread on the winds? Mixed with the noiſe of ſtreams, why riſes the voice of Gaul?

Gaul. My foes are around me, Morni: their dark ſhips deſcend from their waves. Give the ſword of Strumon, that beam which thou hideſt in thy night.

Morni. Take the ſword of reſounding Strumon; I look on thy war, my ſon; I look, a dim meteor, from my cloud: blue-ſhielded Gaul, deſtroy."

[b] Clatho was the daughter of Cathulla, king of Iniſtore. Fingal, in one of his expeditions to that iſland, fell in love with Clatho, and took her to wife, after the death of Roscrana, the daughter of Cormac, king of Ireland.

Clatho was the mother of Ryno, Fillan and Boſmina, mentioned in the Battle of Lora. Fillan is often called the

ſon of Clatho, to diſtinguiſh him from thoſe ſons which Fingal had by Ros-crana.

[c] Ullin being ſent to Morven with the body of Oſcar, Oſſian attends his father, in quality of chief bard.

[d] There are ſome traditions, but, I believe, of late invention, that this Colgach was the ſame with Galgacus of Tacitus. He was the anceſtor of Gaul, the ſon of Morni, and appears, from ſome, really ancient traditions, to have been king, or Vergobret, of the Caledonians; and hence proceeded the pretenſions of the family of Morni to the throne, which created a good deal of diſturbance, both to Comhal and his ſon Fingal. The firſt was killed in battle by that tribe; and it was after Fingal was grown up, that they were reduced to obedience. Colgach ſignifies fiercely looking; which is a very proper name for a warrior, and is probably the origin of Galgacus; though I believe it a matter of mere conjecture, that the Colgach here mentioned was the ſame with that hero. I cannot help obſerving, with how much propriety the ſong of the bards is conducted. Gaul, whoſe experience might have rendered his conduct cautious in war, has the example of his father, juſt ruſhing to battle, ſet before his eyes. Fillan, on the other hand, whoſe youth might make him impetuous and unguarded in action, is put in mind of the ſedate and ſerene behaviour of Fingal upon like occaſions.

[e] The expedition of Morni to Clutha, alluded to, is handed down in tradition.

[f] The mountain Cromla was in the neighbourhood of the ſcene of this poem; which was nearly the ſame with that of Fingal.

[g] Dun-ratho, a hill with a plain on its top. Cormul, blue eye. Foldath diſpatches, here, Cormul to lie in am-buſh behind the army of the Caledonians. This ſpeech, ſuits well with the character of Foldath, which is, throughout, haughty and preſumptuous. Towards the latter end of his ſpeech, we find the opinion of the times, concerning the unhappineſs of the ſouls of thoſe who were buried without the funeral ſong. This doctrine, no doubt, was inculcated by the bards, to make their order reſpectable and neceſſary.

[i] Fillan had been diſpatched by Gaul to oppoſe Cormul, who had been ſent by Foldath to lie in ambuſh behind the Caledonian army. It appears that Fillan had killed Cormul, otherwiſe he could not be ſuppoſed to have poſſeſſed himſelf of the ſhield of that chief.

[k] Lumon, bending hill; a mountain in Innis-huna, or that part of South-Britain which is over againſt the Iriſh coaſt.

[l] Evir-choama, mild and ſtately maid, the wife of Gaul. She was the daughter of Caſdu-conglas, the chief of I-dronlo, one of the Hebrides.

[m] The kings of Morven and Ireland had a plume of eagle's feathers, by way of ornament, in their helmets. It was from this diſtinguiſhed mark that Oſſian knew Cathmor, in the ſecond book.

[n] After the death of Comhal, and during the uſurpation of the tribe of Morni, Fingal was educated in private by Duth-caron. It was then he contracted that intimacy, with Connal the ſon of Duth-caron, which occaſions his regretting ſo much his fall. When Fingal was grown up, he ſoon reduced the tribe of Morni; and, as it appears from from the ſubſequent epiſode, ſent Duth-caron and his ſon Connal to the aid of Cormac, the ſon of Conar, king of Ireland, who was driven to the laſt extremity, by the inſurrections of the Fir-bolg. This epiſode throws farther light on the conteſts between Cael and Fir-bolg; and is the more valuable upon that account.

[p] Colc-ulla, firm look in readineſs; he was the brother of Borbar-duthul, the father of Cairbar and Cathmor, who, after the death of Cormac the ſon of Artho, ſucceſſively mounted the Iriſh throne.

[q] Cormac, the ſon of Conar, the ſecond king of Ireland, of the race of the Caledonians. This inſurrection of the Fir-bolg, happened towards the latter end of the long reign of Cormac. From ſeveral epiſodes and poems, it appears, that he never poſſeſſed the Iriſh throne peaceably. The party of the family of Atha had made ſeveral attempts to overturn the ſucceſſion in the race of Conar, before they effected it, in the minority of Cormac, the ſon of Artho. Ireland, from the moſt ancient accounts concerning it, ſeems to have been always ſo diſturbed by domeſtic commotions, that it is difficult to ſay, whether it ever was, for any length of time, ſubject to one monarch. It is certain, that every province, if not every ſmall diſtrict, had its own king. One of thoſe petty princes aſſumed, at times, the title of king of Ireland, and, on account of his ſuperior force, or in caſes of public danger, was acknowledged by the reſt as ſuch; but the ſucceſſion, from father to ſon, does not appear to have been eſtabliſhed. It was the diviſions amongſt themſelves, ariſing from the bad conſtitution

[r] The inhabitants of Ullin or Ulſter, who were of the race of the Caledonians, ſeem, alone, to have been the firm friends to the ſucceſſion in the family of Conar. The Firbolg were only ſubject to them by conſtraint, and embraced every opportunity to throw off their yoke.

[s] Colgan, the ſon of Cathmul, was the principal bard of Cormac Mac-Conar, king of Ireland. Part of an old poem, on the loves of Fingal and Ros-crana, is ſtill preſerved, and goes under the name of this Colgan; but whether it is of his compoſition, or the production of a later age, I ſhall not pretend to determine. Be that as it will, it appears, from the obſolete phraſes which it contains, to be very ancient; and its poetical merit may perhaps excuſe me, for laying a tranſlation of it before the reader. What remains of the poem is a dialogue in a lyric meaſure between Fingal and Ros-crana, the daughter of Cormac. She begins with a ſoliloquy, which is overheard by Fingal.

Ros-crana. "By night, came a dream to Ros-crana! I feel my beating ſoul. No viſion of the forms of the dead, came to the blue eyes of Erin. But, riſing from the waves of the north, I beheld him upright in his locks. I beheld the ſon of the king. My beating ſoul is high. I laid my head down in night; again aſcended the form. Why delayeſt thou thy coming, young rider of the ſtreamy waves!

But, there, far-diſtant, he comes; where ſeas roll their green ridges in miſt! Young dweller of my ſoul; why doſt thou delay.

Fingal. It was the ſoft voice of Moi-lena! the pleaſant breeze of the valley of roes! But why doſt thou hide thee in ſhades? Young love of heroes riſe. Are not thy ſteps covered covered with light? In thy groves thou appeareſt, Ros-crana, like the ſun in the gathering of clouds. Why doſt thou hide thee in ſhades? Young love of heroes riſe.

Ros-crana. My fluttering ſoul is high? Let me turn from the ſteps of the king. He has heard my ſecret voice, and ſhall my blue eyes roll, in his preſence! Roe of the hill of moſs, toward thy dwelling I move. Meet me, ye breezes of Mora, as I move through the valley of wind. But why ſhould he aſcend his ocean? Son of heroes, my ſoul is thine? My ſteps ſhall not move to the deſart: the light of Ros-crana is here.

Fingal. It was the light tread of a ghoſt, the fair dweller of eddying winds. Why deceiveſt thou me, with thy voice? Here let me reſt in ſhades. Shouldſt thou ſtretch thy white arm, from thy grove, thou ſun-beam of Cormac of Erin!

Ros-crana. He is gone! and my blue eyes are dim: faint rolling, in all my tears. But, there, I behold him, alone; king of Morven, my ſoul is thine. Ah me! what clanging of armour! Colc-ulla of Atha is near!"

BOOK IV.

[a] This epiſode has an immediate connection with the ſtory of Connal and Duthcaron, in the latter end of the third book. Fingal, ſitting beneath an oak, near the palace of Selma, diſcovers Connal juſt landing from Ireland. The danger which threatened Cormac king of Ireland induces him to ſail immediately to that iſland. The ſtory is introduced, by the king, as a pattern for the future behaviour of Fillan, whoſe raſhneſs in the preceding battle is reprimanded.

[b] Ul-erin,

[b] Ul-erin, the guide to Ireland, a ſtar known by that name in the days of Fingal, and very uſeful to thoſe who ſailed, by night, from the Hebrides, or Caledonia, to the coaſt of Ulſter.

[c] Ros-crana, the beam of the riſing ſun; ſhe was the mother of Oſſian. The Iriſh bards relate ſtrange fictions concerning this princeſs. Their ſtories, however, concerning Fingal, if they mean him by Fion Mac-Comnal, are ſo inconſiſtent and notoriouſly fabulous, that they do no deſerve to be mentioned; for they evidently bear, along with them, the marks of late invention.

[d] Cormac had ſaid that his foes were like the roar of ſtreams, and Fingal continues the metaphor. The ſpeech of the young hero is ſpirited, and conſiſtent with that ſedate intrepidity, which eminently diſtinguiſhes his character throughout.

[e] Cairbar, the ſon of Cormac, was afterwards king of Ireland. His reign was ſhort. He was ſucceeded by his ſon Artho, the father of that Cormac who was murdered by Cairbar the ſon of Borbar-duthul. Cairbar, the ſon of Cormac, long after his ſon Artho was grown to man's eſtate, had, by his wife Beltanno, another ſon, whoſe name was Ferard-artho. He was the only one remaining of the race of Conar the firſt king of Ireland, when Fingal's expedition againſt Cairbar the ſon of Borbar-duthul happened. See more of Ferard-artho in the eighth book.

[f] The attitude of Ros-crana is aptly illuſtrated by this ſimile; for the ideas of thoſe times, concerning the ſpirits of the deceaſed, were not ſo gloomy and diſagreeable, as thoſe of ſucceeding ages. The ſpirits of women, it was ſuppoſed, retained that beauty, which they poſſeſſed while living, and tranſported themſelves from place to place, with that gliding motion, which Homer aſcribes to the gods. The deſcriptions which poets, leſs ancient than Oſſian, have left us of thoſe beautiful figures, that appeared ſometimes on the hills, are elegant and pictureſque. They compare them to the rain-bow on ſtreams: or the gliding of ſun-beams on the hills.

A chief who lived three centuries ago, returning from the war, underſtood that his wife or miſtreſs was dead. The bard introduces him ſpeaking the following ſoliloquy, when he came, within ſight of the place, where he had left her, at his departure.

"My ſoul darkens in ſorrow. I behold not the ſmoke of my hall. No gray dog bounds at my ſtreams. Silence dwells in the valley of trees.

"Is that a rain-bow on Crunath? It flies: and the ſky is dark. Again, thou moveſt, bright, on the heath, thou ſun-beam, clothed in a ſhower! Ha! it is ſhe, my love: her gliding courſe on the boſom of winds!"

In ſucceeding times the beauty of Ros-crana paſſed into a proverb; and the higheſt compliment, that could be paid to a woman, was to compare her perſon with the daughter of Cormac.

'S tu fein an Ros-crana.

§ In order to illuſtrate this paſſage, I ſhall give, here, the hiſtory on which it is founded, as I have gathered it from other poems. The nation of the Fir-bolg who inhabited the ſouth of Ireland, being originally deſcended from the Belgæ, who poſſeſſed the ſouth and ſouth-weſt coaſt of Britain, kept up, for many ages, an amicable correſpondence with their mother-country; and ſent aid to the Britiſh Belgæ, when they were preſſed by the Romans or other newcomers from the continent. Con-mor, king of Inis-huna, (that part of South-Britain which is over againſt the Iriſh coaſt) being attacked, by what enemy is not mentioned, ſent for aid to Cairbar, lord of Atha, the moſt potent chief of the Fir-bolg. Cairbar diſpatched his brother Cathmor to the aſſiſtance of Con-mor. Cathmor, after various viciſſitudes of fortune, put an end to the war, by the total defeat of the enemies of Inis-huna, and returned in triumph to the reſidence of Con-mor. There, at a feaſt, Sul-malla, the daughter of Con-mor, fell deſperately in love with Cathmor, who, before her paſſion was diſcloſed, was recalled to Ireland by his brother Cairbar, upon the news of the intended expedition of Fingal, to re-eſtabliſh the family of Conar on the Iriſh throne. The wind being contrary, Cathmor remained, for three days, in a neighbouring bay, during which time Sul-malla diſguiſed herſelf, in the habit of a young warrior, and came to offer him her ſervice, in the war. Cathmor accepted of the propoſal, ſailed for Ireland, and arrived in Ulſter a few days before the death of Cairbar.

[i] Fithil, an inferior bard. It may either be taken here for the proper name of a man, or in the literal ſenſe, as the bards were the heralds and meſſengers of thoſe times. Cathmor, it is probable, was abſent, when the rebellion of his brother Cairbar, and the aſſaſſination of Cormac, king of Ireland, happened. The traditions, which are handed down with the poem, ſay that Cathmor and his followers had only arrived, from Inis-huna, three days before the death of Cairbar, which ſufficiently clears his character from any imputation of being concerned in the conſpiracy, with his brother.

[k] The [k] The ceremony which was uſed by Fingal, when he prepared for an expedition, is related, by Oſſian, in one of the leſſer poems. A bard, at midnight, went to the hall, where the tribes feaſted upon ſolemn occaſions, raiſed the war-ſong, and thrice called the ſpirits of their deceaſed anceſtors to come, on their clouds, to behold the actions of their children. He then fixed the ſhield of Trenmor, on a tree on the rock of Selma, ſtriking it, at times, with the blunt end of a ſpear, and ſinging the war ſong between. Thus he did, for three ſucceſſive nights, and in the mean time, meſſengers were diſpatched to convene the tribes; or, as Oſſian expreſſes it, to call them from all their ſtreams. This phraſe alludes to the ſituation of the reſidences of the clans, which were generally fixed in vallies, where the torrents of the neighbouring mountains were collected into one body, and became large ſtreams or rivers. The lifting up of the ſhield, was the phraſe for beginning a war.

[l] The ſurly attitude of Foldath is a proper preamble to his after behaviour. Chaffed with the diſappointment of the victory which he promiſed himſelf, he becomes paſſionate and over-bearing. The quarrel which ſucceeds between him and Malthos, was, no doubt, introduced by the poet, to raiſe the character of Cathmor, whoſe ſuperior worth ſhines forth, in his manly manner of ending the difference between the chiefs.

[m] Claon-rath, winding field. The th are ſeldom pronounced audibly in the Gallic language.

[n] This ſpeech of Malthos is, throughout, a ſevere reprimand to the bluſtering behaviour of Foldath.

[o] The poet could ſcarcely find, in all nature, a compariſon ſo favourable as this to the ſuperiority of Cathmor over his two chiefs. I ſhall illuſtrate this paſſage with another from a fragment of an ancient poem, juſt now in my hands. "As the ſun is above the vapours, which his beams have raiſed; ſo is the ſoul of the king above the ſons of fear. They roll dark below him; he rejoices in the robe of his beams. But when feeble deeds wander on the ſoul of the king, he is a darkened ſon rolled along the ſky; the valley is ſad below: flowers wither beneath the drops of the night."

[p] Lear-thon, ſea-wave, the name of the chief of that colony of the Fir-bolg, which firſt migrated into Ireland. Lar-thon's firſt ſettlement in that country is related in the ſeventh book. He was the anceſtor of Cathmor; and is here called Larthon of Lumon, from a high hill of that name in Inis-huna, the ancient ſeat of the Fir-bolg. The poet preſerves the character of Cathmor throughout. He had mentioned, in the firſt book, the averſion of that chief to praiſe and we find him here lying at the ſide of a ſtream, that the noiſe of it might drown the voice of Fonar, who, according to the cuſtom of the times, ſung his eulogium in his evening ſong. Though other chiefs, as well as Cathmor, might be averſe to hear their own praiſe, we find it the univerſal policy of the times, to allow the bards to be as extravagant as they pleaſed in their encomiums on the leaders of armies, in the preſence of the people. The vulgar, who had no great ability to judge for themſelves, received the characters of their princes, entirely upon the faith of the bards.

[q] Carril, the ſon of Kinfena, by the orders of Oſſian, ſung the funeral elegy at the tomb of Cairbar. See the ſecond book, towards the end. In all the poems of Oſſian, the viſit of ghoſts, to their living friends, are ſhort, and their language obſcure, both which circumſtances tend to throw a ſolemn gloom on their ſupernatural ſcenes. Towards the latter end of the ſpeech of the ghoſt of Cairbar, he foretels the death of Cathmor, by enumerating thoſe ſignals which, according to the opinion of the times, preceded the death of a perſon renowned. It was thought that the ghoſts of deceaſed bards ſung, for three nights preceding the death (near the place where his tomb was to be raiſed) round an unſubſtantial figure which repreſented the body of the perſon who was to die.

[r] The ſoliloquy of Cathmor abounds with that magnanimity and love of fame which conſtitute the hero. Though ſtaggered at firſt with the prediction of Cairbar's ghoſt, he ſoon comforts himſelf with the agreeable proſpect of his future renown; and like Achilles, prefers a ſhort and glorious life, to an obſcure length of years in retirement and eaſe.

[s] From this paſſage we learn in what extreme contempt an indolent and unwarlike life was held in thoſe days of heroiſm. Whatever a philoſopher may ſay, in praiſe of quiet and retirement, I am far from thinking but they weaken and debaſe the human mind. When the faculties of the ſoul are not exerted, they loſe their vigour, and low and circumſcribed notions take the place of noble and enlarged ideas. Action, on the contrary, and the viciſſitudes of fortune which attend it, call forth, by turns, all the powers of the mind, and, by exerciſing, ſtrengthen them. Hence it is that in great and opulent ſtates, when property and indolence are ſecured to individuals, we ſeldom meet with that ſtrength of mind which is ſo common in a nation, not far advanced in civilization. It is a curious, but juſt obſervation; that great kingdoms ſeldom produce great characters, which muſt be altogether attributed to that indolence and and diſſipation, which are the inſeparable companions of too much property and ſecurity. Rome, it is certain, had more more real great men within it, when its power was confined within the narrow bounds of Latium, than when its dominion extended over all the known world; and one petty ſtate of the Saxon heptarchy had, perhaps, as much genuine ſpirit in it, as the two Britiſh kingdoms united. As a ſtate, we are much more powerful than our anceſtors, but we would loſe by comparing individuals with them.

[t] In order to underſtand this paſſage, it is neceſſary to look to the deſcription of Cathmor's ſhield which the poet has given us in the ſeventh book. This ſhield had ſeven principal boſſes, the ſound of each of which, when ſtruck with a ſpear, conveyed a particular order from the king to his tribes. The ſound of one of them, as here, was the ſignal for the army to aſſemble.

[u] This was not the valley of Lona to which Sul-malla afterwards retired.

[x] Con-mor, the father of Sul-malla, was killed in that war, from which Cathmor delivered Inis-huna. Lormar his ſon ſucceeded Con-mor. It was the opinion of the times, when a perſon was reduced to a pitch of miſery, which could admit of no alleviation, that the ghoſts of his anceſtors called his ſoul away. This ſupernatural kind of death was called the voice of the dead; and is believed by the ſuperſtitious vulgar to this day.

There is no people in the world, perhaps, who gave more univerſal credit to apparitions, and the viſits of the ghoſts of the deceaſed to their friends, than the common highlanders. This is to be attributed as much, at leaſt, to the ſituation of the country they poſſeſs, as to that credulous diſpoſition which diſtinguiſhes an unenlightened people. As their buſineſs was feeding of cattle, in dark and extenſive deſarts, ſo their journies lay over wide and unfrequented ed heaths, where, often. they were obliged to ſleep in the open air, amidſt the whiſtling of winds, and roar of waterfalls. The gloomineſs of the ſcenes around them was apt to beget that melancholy diſpoſition of mind, which moſt readily receives impreſſions of the extraordinary and ſupernatural kind. Falling aſleep in this gloomy mood, and their dreams being diſturbed by the noiſe of the elements around it is no matter of wonder, that they thought they heard the voice of the dead. This voice of the dead, however, was, perhaps, no more than a ſhriller whiſtle of the winds in an old tree, or in the chinks of a neighbouring rock. It is to this cauſe I aſcribe thoſe many and improbable tales of ghoſts, which we meet with in the highlands: for, in other reſpects we do not find that the highlanders are more credulous than their neighbours.

BOOK. V.

[a] Lora is often mentioned; it was a ſmall and rapid ſtream in the neighbourhood of Selma. There is no veſtige of this name now remaining; though it appears from a very old ſong, which the tranſlator has ſeen, that one of the ſmall rivers on the north-weſt coaſt was called Lora ſome centuries ago.

[b] From ſeveral paſſages in the poem, we may form a diſtinct idea of the ſcene of the action of Temora. At a ſmall diſtance from one another roſe the hills of Mora and Lona: the firſt poſſeſſed by Fingal, the ſecond by the army of Cathmor. Through the intermediate plain ran the ſmall river Lubar, on the banks of which all the battles were fought, excepting that between Cairbar and Oſcar, related in the firſt book. This laſt mentioned engagement happened, to the north of the hill of Mora, Mora, of which Fingal took poſſeſſion, after the army of Cairbar fell back to that of Cathmor. At ſome diſtance, but within the ſight of Mora, towards the weſt, Lubar iſſued from the mountain of Cromma'l, and after a ſhort courſe through the plain of Moi-lena, diſcharged itſelf into the ſea near the field of battle. Behind the mountain of Cromma'l ran the ſmall ſtream of Levath, on the banks of which Ferad-artho, the ſon of Cairbre, the only perſon remaining of Conar, lived concealed in a cave, during the uſurpation of Cairbar, the ſon of Borbar-duthul.

[c] It was to this valley Sul-malla retired, during the laſt and deciſive battle between Fingal and Cathmor. It is deſcribed in the ſeventh book, where it is called the vale of Lona, and the reſidence of a Druid.

[d] It is neceſſary to remember, that Gaul was wounded; which occaſions his requiring here the aſſiſtance of Oſſian to bind his ſhield on his ſide.

[f] By the ſtone of Loda, as I have remarked in my notes on ſome other poems of Oſſian, is meant a place of worſhip among the Scandinavians. Oſſian, in his many expeditions to Orkney and Scandinavia, became acquainted with ſome of the rites of the religion which prevailed in thoſe countries, and frequently alludes to them in his poems. There are ſome ruins, and circular pales of ſtones, remaining ſtill in Orkney, and the iſlands of Shetland, which retain, to this day, the name of Loda or Loden. They ſeem to have differed materially, in their conſtruction, from thoſe Druidical monuments which remain in Britain, and the weſtern iſles. The places of worſhip among the Scandinavians were originally ginally rude and unadorned. In after ages, when they opened a communication with other nations, they adopted their manners, and built temples. That at Upſal, in Sweden, was amazingly rich and magnificent. Haquin, of Norway, built one, near Drontheim, little inferior to the former; and it went always under the name of Loden. Mallet, introduction a l'hiſtoire de Dannemarc.

g The poet, metaphorically, calls Fillan a beam of light. Culmin, mentioned here, was the ſon of Clonmar, chief of Strutha, by the beautiful Cul-allin. She was ſo remarkable for the beauty of her perſon, that ſhe is introduced, frequently, in the ſimiliés and alluſions of ancient poetry. Mar Chul-aluin Strutha nan ſian; is a line of Oſſian in another poem; i. e. Lovely as Cul-allin of Strutha of the ſtorms.

h Dogs were thought to be ſenſible of the death of their maſter, let it happen at ever ſo great a diſtance. It was alſo the opinion of the times, that the arms which warriors left at home became bloody, when they themſelves fell in battle. It was from thoſe ſigns that Cul-allin is ſuppoſed to underſtand that her ſon is killed; in which ſhe is confirmed by the appearance of his ghoſt. Her ſudden and ſhort exclamation, on the occaſion, is more affecting than if ſhe had extended her complaints to a greater length. The attitude of the fallen youth, and Fillan's reflections over him, are natural and judicious, and come forcibly back on the mind when we conſider, that the ſuppoſed ſituation of the father of Culmin, was ſo ſimilar to that of Fingal, after the death of Fillan himſelf.

i This valley had its name from Clono, ſon of Lethmal of Lora, one of the anceſtors of Dermid, the ſon of Duthno. His hiſtory is thus related in an old poem. In the days of Conar, the ſon of Trenmor, the firſt king of Ireland, Clono paſſed over into that kingdom, from Caledonia, to aid Conar againſt the Fir-bolg. Being remarkable for the beauty of his perſon, he ſoon drew the attention of Sulmin, the young wife of an Iriſh chief. She diſcloſed her paſſion, which was not properly returned by the Caledonian. The lady ſickened, through diſappointment, and her love for Clono came to the ears of her huſband. Fired with jealouſy, he vowed revenge. Clono, to avoid his rage, departed from Temora, in order to paſs over into Scotland; and being benighted in the valley mentioned here, he laid him down to ſleep. There, Lethmal deſcended in the dreams of Clona; and told him that danger was near.

Ghoſt of Lethmal. "Ariſe from thy bed of moſs; ſon of low-laid Lethmal, ariſe. The ſound of the coming of foes, deſcends along the wind.

Clono. Whoſe voice is that, like many ſtreams, in the ſeaſon of my reſt!

Ghoſt of Lethmal. Ariſe, thou dweller of the ſouls of the lovely; ſon of Lethmal, ariſe.

Clono. How dreary is the night! The moon is darkened in the ſky; red are the paths of ghoſts, along its ſullen face! Green-ſkirted meteors ſet around. Dull is the roaring of ſtreams, from the valley of dim forms. I hear thee, ſpirit of my father, on the eddying courſe of the wind. I hear thee, but thou bendeſt not, forward, thy tall form, from the ſkirts of night."

As Clono prepared to depart, the huſband of Sulmin came up, with his numerous attendants. Clono defended himſelf, but, after a gallant reſiſtance, he was overpowered and ſlain. He was buried in the place where he was killed, and the valley was called after his name. Dermid, in his requeſt requeſt to Gaul the ſon of Morni, which immediately follows this paragraph, alludes to the tomb of Clono, and his own connection with that unfortunate chief.

[k] Fingal and Cathmor.

[l] The fall of Foldath, if we may believe tradition, was predicted to him, before he had left his own country to join Cairbar, in his deſigns on the Iriſh throne. He went to the cave of Moma, to inquire of the ſpirits of his fathers, concerning the ſucceſs of the enterpriſe of Cairbar. The reſponſes of oracles are always attended with obſcurity, and liable to a double meaning: Foldath, therefore, put a favourable interpretation on the prediction, and purſued his adopted plan of aggrandizing himſelf with the family of Atha. I ſhall, here, tranſlate the anſwer of the ghoſts of his anceſtors, as it was handed down by tradition. Whether the legend is really ancient, or the invention of a late age, I ſhall not pretend to determine, though, from the phraſeology, I ſhould ſuſpect the laſt.

FOLDATH, addreſſing the ſpirits of his fathers.

Dark, I ſtand in your preſence; fathers of Foldath, hear. Shall my ſteps paſs over Atha, to Ullin of the roes?

The Anſwer.

Thy ſteps ſhall paſs over Atha, to the green dwelling of kings. There ſhall thy ſtature ariſe, over the fallen, like a pillar of thunder-clouds. There, terrible in darkneſs, ſhalt thou ſtand, till the reflected beam, or Clon-cath of Moruth, come; Moruth of many ſtreams, that roars in diſtant lands."

Cloncath, or reflected beam, ſay my traditional authors, was the name of the ſword of Fillan; ſo that it was, in the latent ſignification of the word Clon-cath, that the deception lay. My principal reaſon for introducing this note, is, that if this tradition is equally ancient with the poem, which, by the bye, is doubtful, it ſerves to ſhew, that the religion of the Fir-bolg differed from that of the Caledonians, as we never find the latter inquiring of the ſpirits of their deceaſed anceſtors.

[m] The characters of Foldath and Malthos are well ſuſtained. They were both dark and ſurly, but each in a different way. Foldath was impetuous and cruel. Malthos ſtubborn and incredulous. Their attachment to the family of Atha was equal; their bravery in battle the ſame. Foldath was vain and oſtentatious: Malthos unindulgent but generous. His behaviour here towards his enemy Foldath, ſhews, that a good heart often lies concealed under a gloomy and ſullen character.

[n] Moma was the name of a country in the ſouth of Connaught, once famous for being the reſidence of an Archdruid. The cave of Moma was thought to be inhabited by the ſpirits of the chiefs of the Fir-bolg, and their poſterity ſent to inquire there, as to an oracle, concerning the iſſue of their wars.

[o] Dal-ruath, parched or ſandy field. The etymology of Dardu-lena is uncertain. The daughter of Foldath was, probably, ſo called, from a place in Ulſter, where her father had defeated part of the adherents of Artho, king of Ireland. Dordu-lena; the dark wood of Moi-lena. As Foldath was proud and oſtentatious, it would appear, that he transferred the name of a place, where he himſelf had been victorious, to his daughter.

[p] Theſe ſudden tranſitions from the ſubject are not uncommon in the compoſitions of Oſſian. That in this place has a peculiar beauty and propriety. The ſuſpence, in which the mind of the reader is left, conveys the idea of Fillan's danger more forcibly home, than any deſcription that that the poet could introduce. There is a ſort of eloquence in ſilence with propriety. A minute detail of the circumſtances of an important ſcene is generally cold and inſipid. The human mind, free and fond of thinking for itſelf, is diſguſted to find every thing done by the poet. It is therefore, his buſineſs only to mark the moſt ſtriking out-lines, and to allow the imaginations of his readers to finiſh the figure for themſelves.

This book ends in the afternoon of the third day, from the opening of the poem.

BOOK VI.

[a] The ſpear of Temora was that which Oſcar had received, in a preſent, from Cormac, the ſon of Artho, king of Ireland. It was of it that Cairbar made the pretext for quarrelling with Oſcar, at the feaſt, in the firſt book.

[b] Clu-ba, winding bay; an arm of the ſea in Inis-huna, or the weſtern coaſt of South-Britain. It was in this bay that Cathmor was wind-bound when Sul-malla came, in the diſguiſe of a young warrior, to accompany him in his voyage to Ireland. Conmor, the father of Sul-malla, as we learn from her ſoliloquy, at the cloſe of the fourth book, was dead before the departure of his daughter.

[c] Lutha was the name of a valley in Morven, in the days of Oſſian. There dwelt Toſcar the ſon of Conloch, the father of Malvina, who, upon that account, is often called the maid of Lutha. Lutha ſignifies ſwift ſtream.

[d] A dialogue between Clatho the mother, and Bos-mina the ſiſter, of that hero.

Clatho. "Daughter of Fingal, ariſe: thou light between thy looks. Lift thy fair head from reſt, ſoft-gliding ſunbeam of Selma! I beheld thy arms, on thy breaſt, white-

toſſed

toſſed amidſt thy wandering locks: when the ruſtling breeze of the morning came from the deſart of ſtreams. Haſt thou ſeen thy fathers, Bos-mina, deſcending in thy dreams? Ariſe, daughter of Clatho; dwells there aught of grief in thy ſoul?

Bos-mina. A thin form paſſed before me, fading as it flew: like the darkening wave of a breeze, along a field of graſs. Deſcend, from thy wall, O harp, and call back the ſoul of Bos-mina, it has rolled away like a ſtream. I hear thy pleaſant ſound. I hear thee, O harp, and my voice ſhall riſe.

How often ſhall ye ruſh to war, ye dwellers of my ſoul? Your paths are diſtant, kings of men, in Erin of blue ſtreams. Lift thy wing, thou ſouthern breeze, from Clona's darkening heath; ſpread the ſails of Fingal towards the bays of his land.

But who is that, in his ſtrength, darkening in the preſence of war? His arm ſtretches to the foe, like the beam of the ſickly ſun; when his ſide is cruſted with darkneſs; and he rolls his diſmal courſe through the ſky. Who is it, but the father of Bos-mina? Shall he return till danger is paſt!

Fillan, thou art a beam by his ſide; beautiful, but terrible, is thy light. Thy ſword is before thee, a blue fire of night. When ſhalt thou return to thy roes; to the ſtreams of thy ruſhy fields? When ſhall I behold thee from Mora, while winds ſtrew my long locks on moſs! But ſhall a young eagle return from the field, where the heroes fall!

Clatho. Soft, as the ſong of Loda, is the voice of Selma's maid. Pleaſant to the ear of Clatho is the name of the breaker of ſhields. Behold, the king comes from ocean: the ſhield of Morven is borne by bards. The foe has fled before before him, like the departure of miſt. I hear not the ſounding wings of my eagle; the ruſhing forth of the ſon of Clatho. Thou art dark, O Fingal; ſhall he not return! * * * *

[e] Here the ſentence is deſignedly left unfiniſhed by the poet. The ſenſe is, that he was reſolved, like a deſtroying fire, to conſume Cathmor, who had killed his brother. In the midſt of this reſolution, the ſituation of Fingal ſuggeſts itſelf to him, in a very ſtrong light. He reſolves to return to aſſiſt the king in proſecuting the war. But then his ſhame for not defending his brother, recurs to him. He it determined again to go and find out Cathmor. We may conſider him, as in the act of advancing towards the enemy, when the horn of Fingal ſounded on Mora, and called back his people to his preſence. This ſoliloquy is natural: the reſolutions which ſo ſuddenly follow one another, are expreſſive of a mind extremely agitated with ſorrow and conſcious ſhame; yet the behaviour of Oſſian, in his execution of the commands of Fingal, is ſo irreprehenſible, that it is not eaſy to determine where he failed in his duty. The truth is, that when men fail in deſigns which they ardently wiſh to accompliſh, they naturally blame themſelves as the chief cauſe of their diſappointment.

[f] This ſcene is ſolemn. The poet always places his chief character amidſt objects which favour the ſublime. The face of the country, the night, the broken remains of a defeated army, and, above all, the attitude and ſilence of Fingal himſelf, are circumſtances calculated to impreſs an awful idea on the mind. Oſſian is moſt ſucceſsful in his night deſcriptions. Dark images ſuited the melancholy temper of his mind. His poems were all compoſed after the active part of his life was over, when he was blind, and had had ſurvived all the companions of his youth: we therefore find a veil of melancholy thrown over the whole.

[5] The abaſhed behaviour of the army of Fingal proceeds rather from ſhame than fear. The king was not of a tyrannical diſpoſition: He, as he profeſſes himſelf in the fifth book, never was a dreadful form in their preſence, darkened into wrath. His voice was no thunder to their ears: his eyes ſent forth no death. The firſt ages of ſociety are not the times of arbitrary power. As the wants of mankind are few, they retain their independence. It is an advanced ſtate of civilization that moulds the mind to that ſubmiſſion to government, of which ambitious magiſtrates take advantage, and raiſe themſelves into abſolute power.

It is a vulgar error, that the common Highlanders lived, in abject ſlavery, under their chiefs. Their high ideas of, and attachment to, the heads of their families, probably, led the unintelligent into this miſtake. When the honour of the tribe was concerned, the commands of the chief were obeyed, without reſtriction: but, if individuals were oppreſſed, they threw themſelves into the arm of a neighbouring clan, aſſumed a new name, and were encouraged and protected. The fear of this deſertion, no doubt, made the chiefs cautious in their government. As their conſequence, in the eyes of others, was in proportion to the number of their people, they took care to avoid every thing that tended to diminiſh it.

It was but very lately that the authority of the laws extended to the Highlands. Before that time the clans were governed, in civil affairs, not by the verbal commands of the chief, but by what they called Clechda, or the traditional precedents of their anceſtors. When differences happened between individuals, ſome of the oldeſt men in the tribes tribe were choſen umpires between the parties, to decide according to the Clechda. The chief interpoſed his authority, and, invariably, enforced the deciſion. In their wars, which were frequent, on account of family-feuds, the chief was leſs reſerved in the execution of his authority; and even then he ſeldom extended it to the taking the life of any of his tribe. No crime was capital except murder; and that was very unfrequent in the highlands. No corporal puniſhment, of any kind, was inflicted. The memory of an affront of this ſort would remain, for ages in a family, and they would ſeize every opportunity to be revenged, unleſs it came immediately from the hands of the chief himſelf; in that caſe it was taken, rather as a fatherly correction, than a legal puniſhment for offences.

[h] This rock of Cormul is often mentioned in the preceding part of the poem. It was on it Fingal and Oſſian ſtood to view the battle. The cuſtom of retiring from the army, on the night prior to their engaging in battle, was univerſal among the kings of the Caledonians. Trenmor, the moſt renowned of the anceſtors of Fingal, is mentioned as the firſt who inſtituted this cuſtom. Succeeding bards attributed it to a hero of a later period. In an old poem, which begins with Mac Arcath nan ceud ſrol, the cuſtom of retiring from the army, before an engagement, is numbered, among the wiſe inſtitutions of Fergus, the ſon of Arc or Arcath, the firſt king of Scots. I ſhall here tranſlate the paſſage, in ſome other note I may, probably, give all that remains of the poem. Fergus of the hundred ſtreams, ſon of Arcath who fought of old: thou didſt firſt retire at night; when the foe rolled before thee, in echoing fields. Nor bending in reſt is the king: he gathers battle in his ſoul. Fly, ſon of the ſtranger; with morn he ſhall ruſh abroad. When, or by whom, this poem was writ is uncertain.

i This circumſtance, concerning Bran, the favourite dog of Fingal, is, perhaps, one of the moſt affecting paſſages in the poem. I remember to have met with an old poem, compoſed long after the time of Oſſian, wherein a ſtory of this ſort is very happily introduced. In one of the invaſions of the Danes, Ullin-clundu, a conſiderable chief, on the weſtern coaſt of Scotland, was killed in a rencounter with a flying party of the enemy, who had landed, at no great diſtance, from the place of his reſidence. The few followers who attended him were alſo ſlain. The young wife of Ullin-clundu, who had not heard of his fall, fearing the worſt, on account of his long delay, alarmed the reſt of the tribe, who went in ſearch of him along the ſhore. They did not find him; and the beautiful widow became diſconſolate. At length he was diſcovered, by means of his dog, who ſat on a rock beſide the body, for ſome days. The poem is not juſt now in my hands; otherwiſe its poetical merit might induce me to preſent the reader with a tranſlation of it. The ſtanza concerning the dog, whoſe name was Du-chos, or Blackfoot, is very deſcriptive.

"Dark-ſided Du-chos! feet of wind! cold is thy ſeat on rocks. He (the dog) ſees the roe; his ears are high; and half he bounds away. He looks around; but Ullin ſleeps; he droops again his head. The winds come paſt; dark Du-chos, thinks, that Ullin's voice is there. But ſtill he beholds him ſilent, laid amidſt the waving heath. Dark-ſided Du-chos, his voice no more ſhall ſend thee over the heath!"

k In order to illuſtrate this paſſage, it is proper to lay before the reader the ſcene of the two preceding battles.

Between

Between the hills of Mora and Lona lay the plain of Moilena, through which ran the river Lubar. The firſt battle, wherein Gaul, the ſon of Morni, commanded on the Caledonian ſide, was fought on the banks of Lubar. As there was little advantage obtained, on either ſide, the armies, after the battle, retained their former poſitions.

In the ſecond battle, wherein Fillan commanded, the Iriſh, after the fall of Foldath, were driven up the hill of Lona; but, upon the coming of Cathmor to their aid, they regained their former ſituation, and drove back the Caledonians, in their turn; ſo that Lubar winded again in their hoſt.

[l] Borbar-duthul, the father of Cathmor, was the brother of that Colc-ulla who is ſaid, in the beginning of the fourth book, to have rebelled againſt Cormac king of Ireland. Borbar-duthul ſeems to have retained all the prejudice of his family againſt the ſucceſſion of the poſterity of Conar, on the Iriſh throne. From this ſhort epiſode we learn ſome facts which tend to throw light on the hiſtory of the times. It appears, that, when Swaran invaded Ireland, he was only oppoſed by the Cael, who poſſeſſed Ulſter, and the north of that iſland. Calmar, the ſon of Matha, whoſe gallant behaviour and death are related in the third book of Fingal, was the only chief of the race of the Fir-bolg, that joined the Cael, or Iriſh Caledonians, during the invaſion of Swaran. The indecent joy, which Borbar-duthul expreſſed, upon the death of Calmar, is well ſuited with that ſpirit of revenge, which ſubſiſted, univerſally, in every country where the feudal ſyſtem was eſtabliſhed. It would appear that ſome perſon had carried to Borbar-duthul that weapon, with which, it was pretended, Calmar had been killed.

[m] The voices of Erin, a poetical expreſſion for the bards of Ireland.

[n] Not only the kings, but every petty chief, had their bards attending them, in the field, in the days of Oſſian; and theſe bards, in proportion to the power of the chiefs, who retained them, had a number of inferior bards in their train. Upon ſolemn occaſions, all the bards, in the army, would join in one chorus; either when they celebrated their victories, or lamented the death of a perſon, worthy and renowned, ſlain in the war. The words were of the compoſition of the arch-bard, retained by the king himſelf, who generally attained to that high office on account of his ſuperior genius for poetry. As the perſons of the bards were ſacred, and the emoluments of their office conſiderable, the order, in ſucceeding times, became very numerous and inſolent. It would appear, that after the introduction of Chriſtianity, ſome ſerved in the double capacity of bards and clergymen. It was, from this circumſtance, that they had the name of Chlere, which is, probably, derived from the Latin Clericus. The Chlere, be their name derived from what it will, became, at laſt, a public nuiſance; for, taking advantage of their ſacred character, they went about, in great bodies, and lived, at diſcretion, in the houſes of the chiefs; till another party, of the ſame order, drove them away by mere dint of ſatire. Some of the indelicate diſputes of theſe worthy poetical combatants are handed down, by tradition, and ſhew how much the bards, at laſt, abuſed the privileges, which the admiration of their countrymen had conferred on the order. It was this inſolent behaviour that induced the chiefs to retrench their number, and to take away thoſe privileges which they were no longer worthy to enjoy. Their indolence, and diſpoſition ſition to lampoon, extinguiſhed all the poetical fervour, which diſtinguiſhed their predeceſſors, and makes us the leſs regret the extinction of the order.

[o] Clun-galo, white-knee, the wife of Conmor, king of Inis-huna, and the mother of Sul-malla. She is here repreſented, as miſſing her daughter, after ſhe had fled with Cathmor.

[p] Sul-malla replies to the ſuppoſed queſtions of her mother. Towards the middle of this paragraph ſhe calls Cathmor the ſon of her ſoul, and continues the metaphor throughout. This book ends, we may ſuppoſe, about the middle of the third night, from the opening of the poem.

BOOK VII.

[a] As the miſt, which roſe from the lake of Lego, occaſioned diſeaſes and death, the bards feigned, as here, that it was the reſidence of the ghoſts of the deceaſed, during the interval between their death and the pronouncing of the funeral elegy over their tombs; for it was not allowable, without that ceremony was performed, for the ſpirits of the dead to mix with their anceſtors, in their airy halls. It was the buſineſs of the ſpirit of the neareſt relation to the deceaſed, to take the miſt of Lego, and pour it over the grave. We find here Conar, the ſon of Trenmor, the firſt king of Ireland, according to Oſſian, performing this office for Fillan, as it was in the cauſe of the family of Conar, that that hero was killed.

[b] The night deſcriptions of Oſſian were in high repute among ſucceeding bards. One of them delivered a ſentiment, in a diſtich, more favourable to his taſte for poetry, than to his gallantry towards the ladies. I ſhall here give a tranſlation of it.

" More pleaſant to me is the night of Cona, dark-ſtreaming from Oſſian's harp; more pleaſant it is to me, than a white-boſomed dweller between my arms: than a fair-handed daughter of heroes, in the hour of reſt."

Though tradition is not very ſatisfactory concerning the hiſtory of this poet, it has taken care to inform us, that he was very old when he wrote the diſtich. He lived (in what age is uncertain) in one of the weſtern iſles, and his name was Turloch Ciab-glas, or Turloch of the gray locks.

[c] It was the opinion of the times, that, on the night preceding the death of a perſon worthy and renowned, the harps of thoſe bards, who were retained by his family, emitted melancholy ſounds. This was attributed, to uſe Oſſian's expreſſion, to the light touch of ghoſts: who were ſuppoſed to have a fore-knowledge of events. The ſame opinion prevailed long in the north, and the particular ſound was called, the warning voice of the dead. The voice of deaths, mentioned in the preceding ſentence, was of a different kind. Each perſon was ſuppoſed to have an attendant ſpirit, who aſſumed his form and voice, on the night preceding his death, and appeared to ſome, in the attitude, in which the perſon was to die. The voices of death were the foreboding ſhrieks of thoſe ſpirits.

[d] Fingal is ſaid to have never been overcome in battle. From this proceeded that title of honour which is always beſtowed on him in tradition, Fion-ghal na buai', FINGAL OF VICTORIES. In a poem, juſt now in my hands, which celebrates ſome of the great actions of Arthur the famous Britiſh hero, that appellation is often beſtowed on him. The poem, from the phraſeology, appears to be ancient; and is, perhaps, though that is not mentioned, a tranſlation from the Welſh language.

[e] Claon-mal, crooked eye-brow. From the retired life of this perſon, it appears, that he was of the Druids; which ſuppoſition is not, at all, invalidated by the appellation of king of harps, here beſtowed on him; for all agree that the bards were of the number of the Druids originally.

[f] Son-mor, tall handſome man. He was the father of Borbar-duthal, chief of Atha, and grandfather to Cathmor himſelf.

[g] Cluan-er, man of the field. This chief was killed in battle by Cormac Mac-Conar, king of Ireland, the father of Roſcrana, the firſt wife of Fingal. The ſtory is alluded to in other poems.

[h] Suil-alluin, beautiful eye, the wife of Son-mor.

[i] To avoid multiplying notes, I ſhall give here the ſignification of the names of the ſtars engraved on the ſhield. Cean-mathon, head of the bear. Col-derna, ſtant and ſharp beam. Ul-oicho, ruler of night. Cathlin, beam of the wave. Reu-durath, ſtar of the twilight. Berthin, fire of the hill. Tonthena, meteor of the waves. Theſe etymologies, excepting that of Cean-mathon, are pretty exact. Of it I am not ſo certain; for it is not very probable, that the Fir-bolg had diſtinguiſhed a conſtellation, ſo very early as the days of Larthon, by the name of the bear.

[k] To travel on the winds, a poetical expreſſion for ſailing.

[l] Larthon is compounded of Lear, ſea, and thon, wave. This name was given to the chief of the firſt colony of the Fir-bolg, who ſettled in Ireland, on account of his knowledge in navigation. A part of an old poem is ſtill extant, concerning this hero. The author of it, probably, took the hint from the epiſode in this book, relating to the firſt diſcovery of Ireland by Larthon. It abounds with thoſe romantic romantic fables of giants and magicians, which diſtinguiſh the compoſitions of the leſs ancient bards. The deſcriptions, contained in it, are ingenious and proportionable to the magnitude of the perſons introduced; but, being unnatural, they are inſipid and tedious. Had the bard kept within the bounds of probability, his genius was far from being contemptible. The exordium of his poem is not deſtitute of merit; but it is the only part of it, that I think worthy of being preſented to the reader.

"Who firſt ſent the black ſhip, through the ocean, like a whale through the burſting of foam? Look, from thy darkneſs, on Cronath, Oſſian of the harps of old! Send thy light on the blue-rolling waters, that I may behold the king. I ſee him dark in his own ſhell of oak! ſea-toſſed Larthon, thy ſoul is fire. It is careleſs as the wind of thy ſails; as the wave that rolls by thy ſide. But the ſilent green iſle is before thee, with its ſons, who are tall as woody Lumon; Lumon which ſends, from its top, a thouſand ſtreams, white-wandering down its ſides."

It may, perhaps, be for the credit of this bard, to tranſlate no more of this poem, for the continuation of his deſcription of the Iriſh giants betrays his want of judgment.

[m] Lumon, as I have remarked in a preceding note, was a hill, in Inis-huna, near the reſidence of Sul-malla. This epiſode has an immediate connection with what is ſaid of Larthon, in the deſcription of Cathmor's ſhield.

[n] Samla, apparitions, ſo called from the viſion of Larthon, concerning his poſterity.

[o] Flathal, heavenly, exquiſitely beautiful. She was the wife of Larthon.

[p] The original of this lyric ode is one of the moſt beautiful paſſages of the poem. The harmony and vareity of its verſification verſification prove, that the knowledge of muſic was conſiderably advanced in the days of Oſſian. See the ſpecimen of the original.

BOOK VIII.

[a] Ferad-artho was the ſon of Cairbar Mac-Cormac king of Ireland. He was the only one remaining of the race of Conar, the ſon of Trenmor, the firſt Iriſh monarch, according to Oſſian. In order to make this paſſage thoroughly underſtood, it may not be improper to recapitulate ſome part of what has been ſaid in preceding notes. Upon the death of Conar the ſon of Trenmor, his ſon Cormac ſucceeded on the Iriſh throne. Cormac reigned long. His children were, Cairbar, who ſucceeded him, and Ros-crano, the firſt wife of Fingal. Cairbar, long before the death of his father Cormac, had taken to wife Bos-gala, the daughter of Colgar, one of the moſt powerful chiefs in Connaught, and had, by her, Artho, afterwards king of Ireland. Soon after Artho arrived at man's eſtate, his mother Bos-gala died, and Cairbar took to wife Beltanno, the daughter of Conachar of Ullin, who brought him a ſon, whom he called Ferad-artho, i. e. a man in the place of Arth. The occaſion of the name was this. Artho, when his brother was born, was abſent, on an expedition in the ſouth of Ireland. A falſe report was brought to his father that he was killed. Cairbar, to uſe the words of the poem on the ſubject, darkened for his fair-haired ſon. He turned to the young beam of light, the ſon of Beltanno of Conachar. Thou ſhalt be Ferad-artho, he ſaid, a fire before thy race. Cairbar, ſoon after, died, nor did Artho long ſurvive him. Artho was ſucceeded, in the Iriſh throne, by his ſon Cormac, who, in his minority, was murdered by Cairbar, the ſon of Borbar-duthal. Ferad-artho, ſays tradition, was very young, when the expedition of Fingal, to ſettle him on the throne of Ireland, happened. During the ſhort reign of young Cormac, Ferad-artho lived at the royal palace of Temora. Upon the murder of the king, Condan, the bard, conveyed Ferad-artho, privately, to the cave of Cluna, behind the mountain of Crommal, in Ulſter, where they both lived concealed, during the uſurpation of the family of Atha. All theſe particulars, concerning Ferad-artho, may be gathered from the compoſitions of Oſſian: A bard, leſs ancient, has delivered the whole hiſtory, in a poem juſt now in my poſſeſſion. It has little merit, if we except the ſcene between Ferad-artho, and the meſſengers of Fingal, upon their arrival, in the valley of Cluna. After hearing of the great actions of Fingal, the young prince propoſes the following queſtions concerning him, to Gaul and Dermid. "Is the king tall as the rock of my cave? Is his ſpear a fir of Cluna? Is he a rough-winged blaſt, on the mountain, which takes the green oak by the head, and tears it from his hill? Glitters Lubar within his ſtrides, when he ſends his ſtately ſteps along? Nor is he tall, ſaid Gaul, as that rock: nor glitter ſtreams within his ſtrides, but his ſoul is a mighty flood, like the ſtrength of Ullin's ſeas."

[b] It is ſuppoſed Malvina ſpeaks the following ſoliloquy. "Malvina is like the bow of the ſhower, in the ſecret valley of ſtreams; it is bright, but the drops of heaven roll on its blended light. They ſay, that I am fair within my locks, but, on my brightneſs, is the wandering of tears. Darkneſs flies over my ſoul, as the duſky wave of the breeze, along the graſs of Lutha. Yet have not the roes failed me, when I moved between the hills. Pleaſant, beneath neath my white hand, aroſe the ſound of harps. What then, daughter of Lutha, travels over thy ſoul, like the dreary path of a ghoſt, along the nightly beam? Should the young warrior fall, in the roar of his troubled fields! Young virgins of Lutha ariſe, call back the wandering thoughts of Malvina. Awake the voice of the harp, along my echoing vale. Then ſhall my ſoul come forth, like a light from the gates of the morn when clouds are rolled around them, with their broken ſides.

" Dweller of my thoughts, by night, whoſe form aſcends in troubled fields, why doſt thou ſtir up my ſoul, thou far diſtant ſon of the king! Is that the ſhip of my love, its dark courſe through the ridges of ocean? How art thou ſo ſudden, Oſcar, from the heath of ſhields?"

The reſt of this poem, it is ſaid, conſiſted, of a dialogue between Ullin and Malvina, wherein the diſtreſs of the latter is carried to the higheſt pitch.

[c] The Iriſh compoſitions concerning Fingal invariably ſpeak of him as a giant. Of theſe Hibernian poems there are now many in my hands. From the language, and alluſions to the times in which they were writ, I ſhould fix the date of their compoſition in the fifteenth and ſixteenth centuries. In ſome paſſages, the poetry is far from wanting merit, but the fable is unnatural, and the whole conduct of the pieces injudicious. I ſhall give one inſtance of the extravagant fictions of the Iriſh bards, in a poem, which they, moſt unjuſtly, aſcribed to Oſſian. The ſtory of it is this. Ireland being threatened with an invaſion from ſome part of Scandinavia, Fingal ſent Oſſian, Oſcar, and Ca-olt, to watch the bay, in which it was expected, the enemy was to land. Oſcar, unluckily, fell aſleep, before the Scandavians appeared; and, great as he was, ſays the Iriſh bard, he had one bad property, that no leſs could waken him, before his time, than cutting off one of his fingers, or throwing a great ſtone againſt his head; and it was dangerous to come near him, on thoſe occaſions, till he had recovered himſelf, and was fully awake. Ca-olt, who was employed by Oſſian to waken his ſon, made choice of throwing the ſtone againſt his head, as the leaſt dangerous expedient. The ſtone, rebounding from the hero's head, ſhook, as it rolled along, the hill for three miles round. Oſcar roſe in rage, fought bravely, and, ſingly, vanquiſhed a wing of the enemy's army. Thus the bard goes on till Fingal put an end to the war, by the total rout of the Scandinavians. Pueril, and even deſpicable, as theſe fictions are, yet Keating and O'Flaherty have no better authority than the poems which contain them, for all that they write concerning Fion Mac-comnal, and the pretended militia of Ireland.

[d] Tla-min, mildly ſoft. The loves of Clonar and Tlamin were rendered famous in the north, by a fragment of a Lyric poem, ſtill preſerved, which is aſcribed to Oſſian. It is a dialogue between Clonar and Tla-min. She begins with a ſoliloquy, which he overhears.

Tlamin. "Clonar, ſon of Conglas of I-mor, young hunter of dun-ſided roes! where art thou laid, amidſt ruſhes, beneath the paſſing wing of the breeze? I behold thee, my love, in the plain of thy own dark ſtreams! The clung thorn is rolled by the wind, and ruſtles along his ſhield. Bright in his locks he lies: the thoughts of his dreams fly, darkening, over his face. Thou thinkeſt of the battles of Oſſian, young ſon of the echoing iſle!

"Half-

" Half-hid, in the grove, I ſit down. Fly back, ye miſts of the hill. Why ſhould ye hide her love from the blue eyes of Tla-min of harps?

Clonar. " As the ſpirit, ſeen in a dream, flies off from our opening eyes, we think, we behold his bright path between the cloſing hills; ſo fled the daughter of Clun-gal, from the ſight of Clonar of ſhields. Ariſe, from the gathering of trees; blue-eyed Tlamin ariſe.

Tlamin. " I turn me away from his ſteps. Why ſhould he know of my love! My white breaſt is heaving over ſighs, as foam on the dark courſe of ſtreams. But he paſſes away, in his arms! Son of Conglas, my ſoul is ſad.

Clonar. " It was the ſhield of Fingal! the voice of kings from Selma of harps! My path is towards green Erin. Ariſe, fair light, from thy ſhades. Come to the field of my ſoul, there is the ſpreading of hoſts. Ariſe, on Clonar's troubled ſoul, young daughter of blue-ſhielding Clungal."

Clungal was the chief of I-mor, one of the Hebrides.

[e] Fingal and Cathmor. The conduct of the poet, in this paſſage, is remarkable. His numerous deſcriptions of ſingle combats had already exhauſted the ſubject. Nothing new, nor adequate to our high idea of the kings could be ſaid. Oſſian, therefore, throws a column of miſt over the whole, and leaves the combat to the imagination of the reader. Poets have almoſt univerſally failed in their deſcriptions of this ſort. Not all the ſtrength of Homer could ſuſtain, with dignity, the minutiæ of a ſingle combat. The throwing of a ſpear, and the braying of a ſhield, as ſome of our own poets moſt elegantly expreſs it, convey no grand ideas. Our imagination ſtretches beyond, and, conſequently, deſpiſes, the deſcription. It were, therefore, well, for ſome poets, in my opinion, (though it is, perhaps, ſomewha what ſingular) to have, ſometimes, like Oſſian, thrown miſt over their ſingle combats.

[f] Fingal is very much celebrated, in tradition, for his knowledge in the virtues of herbs. The Iriſh poems, concerning him, often repreſent him, curing the wounds which his chiefs received in battle. They fable concerning him, that he was in poſſeſſion of a cup, containing the eſſence of herbs, which inſtantaneouſly healed wounds. The knowledge of curing the wounded, was, till of late, univerſal among the highlanders. We hear of no other diſorder, which required the ſkill of phyſic. The wholeſomeneſs of the climate, and an active life, ſpent in hunting, excluded diſeaſes.

[g] The hoſpitable diſpoſition of Cathmor was unparalleled. He reflects, with pleaſure, even in his laſt moments, on the relief he had afforded to ſtrangers. The very tread of their feet was pleaſant in his ear. His hoſpitality was not paſſed unnoticed by ſucceeding bards; for, with them, it became a proverb, when they deſcribed the hoſpitable diſpoſition of a hero, that he was like Cathmor of Atha, the friend of ſtrangers. It will ſeem ſtrange, that, in all the Iriſh traditions, there is no mention made of Cathmor. This muſt be attributed to the revolutions and domeſtic confuſions which happened in that iſland, and utterly cut off all the real traditions concerning ſo ancient a period. All that we have related of the ſtate of Ireland before the fifth century is of late invention, and the work of ill informed ſenachies and injudicious bards.

[h] We ſee from this paſſage, that, even in the times of Oſſian, and, conſequently, before the introduction of Chriſtianity, they had ſome idea of rewards and puniſhments after death. Thoſe who behaved, in life, with bravery and virtue, were received, with joy, to the airy halls of their fathers: but the dark in ſoul, to uſe the expreſſion of the poet, were ſpurned away from the habitation of heroes, to wander on all the winds. Another opinion, which prevailed in thoſe times, tended not a little to make individuals emulous to excel one another in martial atchievements. It was thought, that in the hall of clouds, every one had a ſeat, raiſed above others, in proportion as he excelled them, in valour, when he lived.

i There are ſome ſtones ſtill to be ſeen in the north, which were erected, as memorials of ſome remarkable tranſactions between the ancient chiefs. There are generally found, beneath them, ſome piece of arms, and a bit of half-burnt wood. The cauſe of placing the laſt there is not mentioned in tradition.

k The erecting of his ſtandard on the bank of Lubar, was the ſignal, which Fingal, in the beginning of the book, promiſed to give to the chiefs, who went to conduct Feradartho to the army, ſhould he himſelf prevail in battle. This ſtandard here (and in every other part of Oſſian's poems, where it is mentioned) is called, the ſun-beam. The reaſon, of this appellation, is given more than once, in notes preceding.

l The poet changes the ſcene to the valley of Lona, whither Sul-malla had been ſent, by Cathmor, before the battle. Clonmal, an aged bard, or rather Druid, as he ſeems here to be endued with a preſcience of events, had long dwelt there, in a cave. This ſcene is awful and ſolemn, and calculated to throw a melancholy gloom over the mind.

m Cathmor had promiſed, in the ſeventh book, to come to the cave of Clonmal, after the battle was over.

h Tradition

[n] Tradition relates, that Offian, the next day after the deciſive battle between Fingal and Cathmor, went to find out Sul-malla, in the valley of Lona. His addreſs to her, which is ſtill preſerved, I here lay before the reader.

" Awake, thou daughter of Conmor, from the fern-ſkirted cavern of Lona. Awake, thou ſun-beam in deſarts; warriors one day muſt fail. They move forth, like terrible lights; but, often, their cloud is near. Go to the valley of ſtreams, to the wandering of herds, on Lumon; there dwells, in his lazy miſt, the man of many days. But he is unknown, Sul-malla, like the thiſtle of the rocks of roes; it ſhakes its gray beard, in the wind, and falls, unſeen of our eyes. Not ſuch are the kings of men, their departure is a meteor of fire, which pours its red courſe, from the deſart, over the boſom of night.

" He is mixed with the warriors of old, thoſe fires that have hid their heads. At times ſhall they come forth in ſong. Not forgot has the warrior failed. He has not ſeen, Sul-malla, the fall of a beam of his own: no fair-haired ſon, in his blood, young troubler of the field. I am lonely, young branch of Lumon, I may hear the voice of the feeble, when my ſtrength ſhall have failed in years, for young Oſcar has ceaſed on his field.—* * *

Sul-malla returned to her own country, and makes a conſiderable figure in the poem which immediately follows; her behaviour in that piece accounts for that partial regard with which the poet ſpeaks of her throughout Temora.

[o] Before I finiſh my notes, it may not be altogether improper to obviate an objection, which may be made to the credibility of the ſtory of Temora, as related by Offian. It may be aſked, whether it is probable, that Fingal could perform perform ſuch actions as are aſcribed to him in this book, at an age when his grandſon, Oſcar, had acquired ſo much reputation in arms. To this it may be anſwered, that Fingal was but very young [Book IV] when he took to wife Roscrana, who ſoon after became the mother of Oſſian. Oſſian was alſo extremely young when he married Ever-allin, the mother of Oſcar. Tradition relates, that Fingal was but eighteen years old at the birth of his ſon Oſſian; and that Oſſian was much about the ſame age, when Oſcar, his ſon, was born. Oſcar, perhaps, might be about twenty, when he was killed, in the battle of Gabhra, [Book I.] ſo the age of Fingal, when the deciſive battle was fought between him and Cathmor, was juſt fifty-ſix years. In thoſe times of activity and health, the natural ſtrength and vigour of a man was little abated, at ſuch an age; ſo that there is nothing improbable in the actions of Fingal, as related in this book.

CATHLIN OF CLUTHA:

A POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

An addreſs to Malvina, the daughter of Toſcar. The poet relates the arrival of Cathlin in Selma to ſolicit aid againſt Duth-carmor of Cluba, who had killed Cathmol, for the ſake of his daughter Lanul. Fingal declining to make a choice among his heroes, who were all claiming the command of the expedition; they retired each to his hill of ghoſts; to be determined by dreams. The ſpirit of Trenmor appears to Oſſian and Oſcar: they ſail, from the bay of Carmona, and, on the fourth day, appear off the valley of Rath-col, in Inis-huna, where Duth-carmor had fixed his reſidence. Oſſian diſpatches a bard to Duth-carmor to demand battle. Night comes on. The diſtreſs of Cathlin of Clutha. Oſſian devolves the command on Oſcar, who, according to the cuſtom of the kings of Morven, before battle, retired to a neighbouring hill. Upon the coming on of day, the battle joins. Oſcar and Duth-carmor meet. The latter falls. Oſcar carries the mail and helmet of Duth-carmor to Cathlin, who had retired from the field. Cathlin is diſcovered to be the daughter of Cathmol, in diſguiſe, who had been carried off, by force, by, and made her eſcape from, Duth-carmor.

COME [a], thou beam thou art lonely, from watching in the night! the ſqually winds are around thee, from all their echoing hills.

Red,

Red, over my hundred ſtreams, are the light-covered paths of the dead. They rejoice, on the eddying winds, in the ſtill ſeaſon of night. Dwells there no joy in ſong, white hand of the harps of Lutha? Awake the voice of the ſtring, and roll my ſoul to me. It is a ſtream that has failed. Malvina pour the ſong.

I hear thee, from thy darkneſs, in Selma, thou that watcheſt, lonely, by night! Why didſt thou with-hold the ſong, from Oſſian's failing ſoul? As the falling brook to the ear of the hunter, deſcending from his ſtorm-covered hill; a ſun-beam rolls the echoing ſtream; he hears, and ſhakes his dewy locks: ſuch is the voice of Lutha, to the friend of the ſpirits of heroes. My ſwelling boſom beats high. I look back on the days that are paſt. Come, thou beam that art lonely, from the watching of night.

In the echoing bay of Carmona[b] we ſaw, one day, the bounding ſhip. On high, hung a broken ſhield; it was marked with wandering blood. Forward came a youth, in armour, and ſtretched his pointleſs ſpear. Long, over his tearful eyes, hung looſe his diſordered locks. Fingal gave the ſhell of kings. The words of the ſtranger aroſe.

In his hall lies Cathmol of Clutha, by the winding of his own dark ſtreams. Duth-carmor ſaw white boſomed Lanul [c], and pierced her father's ſide. In the ruſhy deſart were my ſteps. He fled in the ſeaſon of night. Give thine aid to Cathlin to revenge his father. I ſought thee not as a beam, in a land of clouds. Thou, like that ſun, art known, king of echoing Selma.

Selma's king looked around. In his preſence, we roſe in arms. But who ſhould lift the ſhield? for all had claimed the war. The night came down; we ſtrode, in ſilence; each to his hill of ghoſts: that ſpirits might deſcend, in our dreams, to mark us for the field.

We ſtruck the ſhield of the dead, and raiſed the hum of ſongs. We thrice called the ghoſts of our fathers. We laid us down in dreams. Trenmor came, before mine eyes, the tall form of other years. His blue hoſts were behind him in half-diſtinguiſhed rows. Scarce ſeen is their ſtrife in miſt, or their ſtretching forward to deaths. I liſtened; but no ſound was there. The forms were empty wind.

I ſtarted from the dream of ghoſts. On a ſudden blaſt flew my whiſtling hair. Low-ſounding, in the oak, is the departure of the dead. I took my ſhield from its bough. On-ward came the rattling of ſteel. It was Oſcar [d] of Lego. He had ſeen his fathers.

As

As ruſhes forth the blaſt, on the boſom of whitening waves; ſo careleſs ſhall my courſe be, through ocean, to the dwelling of foes. I have ſeen the dead, my father. My beating ſoul is high. My fame is bright before me, like the ſtreak of light on a cloud, when the broad ſun comes forth, red traveller of the ſky.

Grandſon of Branno, I ſaid; not Oſcar alone ſhall meet the foe. I ruſh forward, through ocean, to the woody dwelling of heroes. Let us contend, my ſon, like eagles, from one rock; when they lift their broad wings, againſt the ſtream of winds. We raiſed our ſails in Carmona. From three ſhips, they marked my ſhield on the wave, as I looked on nightly Tonthena [e], red wanderer between the clouds. Four days came the breeze abroad. Lumon came forward in miſt. In winds were its hundred groves. Sun-beams marked, at times, its brown ſide. White, leapt the foamy ſtreams from all its echoing rocks.

A green field, in the boſom of hills, winds ſilent with its own blue-ſtream. Here, midſt the waving of oaks, were the dwellings of kings of old. But ſilence, for many dark-brown years, had ſettled in graſſy Rath-col [f], for the race of heroes had failed, along the pleaſant vale. Duth-carmor was here, with his people, dark rider of the wave.

Ton-thena had hid her head in the ſky. He bound his white-boſomed ſails. His courſe is on the hills of Rath-col, to the ſeats of roes.

We came. I ſent the bard, with ſongs, to call the foe to fight. Duth-carmor heard him, with joy. The king's ſoul was a beam of fire; a beam of fire, marked with ſmoke, ruſhing, varied, through the boſom of night. The deeds of Duth-carmor were dark, though his arm was ſtrong.

Night came, with the gathering of clouds. By the beam of the oak we ſat down. At a diſtance ſtood Cathlin of Clutha. I ſaw the changing ſoul of the ſtranger [g]. As ſhadows fly over the field of graſs, ſo various is Cathlin's cheek. It was fair, within locks, that roſe on Rathcol's wind. I did not ruſh, amidſt his ſoul, with my words. I bade the ſong to riſe.

Oſcar of Lego, I ſaid, be thine the ſecret hill [h], to-night. Strike the ſhield, like Morven's kings. With day, thou ſhalt lead in war. From my rock, I ſhall ſee thee, Oſcar, a dreadful form aſcending in fight, like the appearance of ghoſts, amidſt the ſtorms they ariſe. Why ſhould mine eyes return to the dim times of old, ere yet the ſong had burſted forth, like the ſudden riſing of winds. But the years, that are paſt, are marked with mighty deeds. As the nightly rider of waves looks up to Ton-the-

na of beams: ſo let us turn our eyes to Trenmor, the father of kings.

Wide, in Caracha's echoing field, Carmal had poured his tribes. They were a dark ridge of waves; the gray-haired bards were like moving foam on their face. They kindled the ſtrife around with their red-rolling eyes. Nor alone were the dwellers of rocks; a ſon of Loda was there; a voice, in his own dark land, to call the ghoſts from high. On his hill, he had dwelt, in Lochlin, in the midſt of a leafleſs grove. Five ſtones lifted, near, their heads. Loud-roared his ruſhing ſtream. He often raiſed his voice to winds, when meteors marked their nightly wings; when the dark-cruſted moon was rolled behind her hill.

Nor unheard of ghoſts was he! They came with the ſound of eagle-wings. They turned battle, in fields, before the kings of men.

But, Trenmor, they turned not from battle; he drew forward the troubled war; in its dark ſkirt was Trathal, like a riſing light. It was dark; and Loda's ſon poured forth his ſigns, on night. The feeble were not before thee, ſon of other lands!

Then roſe the ſtrife of kings, about the hill of night; but it was ſoft as two ſummer gales, ſhaking their light wings, on a lake. Trenmor yielded to his ſon; for the fame of the king was heard.

Trathal

Trathal came forth before his father, and the foes failed, in echoing Caracha. The years that are paſt, my ſon, are marked with mighty deeds [k].

* * * * * * * *

In clouds roſe the eaſtern light. The foe came forth in arms. The ſtrife is mixed at Rath-col, like the roar of ſtreams. Behold the contending of kings! They meet beſide the oak. In gleams of ſteel the dark forms are loſt; ſuch is the meeting of meteors, in a vale by night: red light is ſcattered round, and men foreſee the ſtorm. Duth-carmor is low in blood. The ſon of Oſſian overcame. Not harmleſs in battle was he, Malvina hand of harps!

Nor, in the field, are the ſteps of Cathlin. The ſtranger ſtood by a ſecret ſtream, where the foam of Rath-col ſkirted the moſſy ſtones. Above, bends the branchy birch, and ſtrews its leaves, on winds. The inverted ſpear of Cathlin touched, at times, the ſtream. Oſcar brought Duth-carmor's mail: his helmet with its eagle-wing He placed them before the ſtranger, and his words were heard. "The foes of thy father have failed. They are laid in the field of ghoſts. Renown returns to Morven, like a riſing wind. Why art thou dark, chief of Clutha? Is there cauſe for grief?"

Son

Son of Oſſian of harps, my ſoul is darkly ſad. I behold the arms of Cathmol, which he raiſed in war. Take the mail of Cathlin, place it high in Selma's hall; that thou mayeſt remember the hapleſs in thy diſtant land.

From white breaſts deſcended the mail. It was the race of kings; the ſoft-handed daughter of Cathmol, at the ſtreams of Clutha. Duth-carmor ſaw her bright in the hall; he came, by night, to Clutha. Cathmol met him, in battle, but the warrior fell. Three days dwelt the foe, with the maid. On the fourth ſhe fled in arms. She remembered the race of kings, and felt her burſting ſoul.

Why, maid of Toſcar of Lutha, ſhould I tell how Cathlin failed? Her tomb is at ruſhy Lumon, in a diſtant land. Near it were the ſteps of Sulmalla, in the days of grief. She raiſed the ſong, for the daughter of ſtrangers, and touched the mournful harp.

Come, from the watching of night, Malvina, lonely beam!

NOTES ON

CATHLIN OF CLUTHA.

[a] The traditions, which accompany this poem, inform us, that both it, and the ſucceeding piece, went, of old, under the name of Laoi-Oi-lutha; i. e. the hymns of the maid of Lutha. They pretend alſo to fix the time of its compoſition to the third year after the death of Fingal; that is, during the expedition of Fergus the ſon of Fingal, to the banks of Uiſca duthon. In ſupport of this opinion, the Highland ſenachies have prefixed to this poem, an addreſs of Oſſian, to Congal the young ſon of Fergus, which I have rejected, as having no manner of connection with the reſt of the piece. It has poetical merit; and, probably, it was the opening of one of Oſſian's other poems, though the bards injudiciouſly transferred it to the piece now before us.

" Congal ſon of Fergus of Durath, thou light between thy lock, aſcend to the rock of Selma, to the oak of the breaker of ſhields. Look over the boſom of night, it is ſtreaked with the red paths of the dead: look on the night of ghoſts, and kindle, O Congal, thy ſoul. Be not, like the moon on a ſtream, lonely in the midſt of clouds; darkneſs cloſes around it; and the beam departs. Depart not, ſon of Fergus, ere thou markeſt the field with thy ſword. Aſcend to the rock of Selma; to the oak of the breaker of ſhields."

[b] Car-mona, bay of the dark brown hills, an arm of the ſea, in the neighbourhood of Selma. In this paragraph are mentioned the ſignals preſented to Fingal, by thoſe who came came to demand his aid. The ſuppliants held, in one hand a ſhield covered with blood, and, in the other, a broken ſpear; the firſt a ſymbol of the death of their friends, the laſt an emblem of their own helpleſs ſituation. If the king choſe to grant ſuccours, which generally was the caſe, he reached to them the ſhell of feaſts, as a token of his hoſpitality and friendly intentions towards them.

It may not be diſagreeable to the reader to lay here before him the ceremony of the Cran-tara, which was of a ſimilar nature, and, till very lately, uſed in the Highlands. When the news of an enemy came to the reſidence of the chief, he immediately killed a goat with his own ſword, dipped the end of an half-burnt piece of wood in the blood, and gave it to one of his ſervants, to be carried to the next hamlet. From hamlet to hamlet this teſſera was carried with the utmoſt expedition, and in the ſpace of a few hours, the whole clan were in arms, and convened in an appointed place; the name of which was the only word that accompanied the delivery of the Cran-tara. This ſymbol was the manifeſto of the chief, by which he threatened fire and ſword to thoſe of his clan, that did not immediately appear at his ſtandard.

[c] Lanul, full-eyed, a ſurname which, according to tradition, was beſtowed on the daughter of Cathmol, on account of her beauty; this tradition, however, may have been founded on that partiality, which the bards have ſhewn to Cathlin of Clutha; for, according to them, no falſehood could dwell in the ſoul of the lovely.

[d] Oſcar is here called Oſcar of Lego, from his mother being the daughter of Branno, a powerful chief, on the banks of that lake. It is remarkable that Oſſian addreſſes no poem to Malvina, in which her lover Oſcar was not one of the principal actors. His attention to her, after the death of his ſon, ſhews that delicacy of ſentiment is not confined, as ſome fondly imagine, to our own poliſhed times.

[e] Ton-thena, fire of the wave, was that remarkable ſtar, which as has been mentioned in the ſeventh book of Temora, directed the courſe of Larthon to Ireland. It ſeems to have been well known to thoſe, who ſailed on that ſea, which divides Ireland from South-Britain. As the courſe of Oſſian was along the coaſt of Inis-huna, he mentions with propriety, that ſtar which directed the voyage of the colony from that country to Ireland.

[f] Rath-col, woody field, does not appear to have been the reſidence of Duth-carmor: he ſeems rather to have been forced thither by a ſtorm: at leaſt I ſhould think that to be the meaning of the poet, from his expreſſion, that Ton-thena had hid her head, and that he bound his white-boſomed ſails; which is as much as to ſay, that the weather was ſtormy, and that Duth-carmor put in to the bay of Rath-col for ſhelter.

[g] From this circumſtance, ſucceeding bards feigned that Cathlin, who is here in the diſguiſe of a young warrior, had fallen in love with Duth-carmor at a feaſt, to which he had been invited by her father. Her love was converted into deteſtation for him, after he had murdered her father. But as thoſe rain-bows of heaven are changeful, ſay my authors, ſpeaking of women, ſhe felt the return of her former paſſion, upon the approach of Duth-carmor's danger. I myſelf, who think more favourably of the ſex, muſt attribute the agitation of Cathlin's mind to her extreme ſenſibility to the injuries done her by Duth-carmor; and this opinion is favoured by the ſequel of the ſtory.

h This paſſage alludes to the well known cuſtom among the ancient kings of Scotland, to retire from their army on the night preceding a battle. The ſtory which Oſſian introduces in the next paragraph, concerns the fall of the Druids, of which I have given ſome account in the Diſſertation. It is ſaid in many old poems, that the Druids, in the extremity of their affairs, had ſolicited, and obtained aid from Scandinavia. Among the auxiliaries there came many pretended magicians, which circumſtance Oſſian alludes to, in his deſcription of the ſon of Loda. Magic and incantation could not, however, prevail: for Trenmor, aſſiſted by the valour of his ſon Trathal, entirely broke the power of the Druids.

i Trenmor and Trathal. Oſſian introduced this epiſode, as an example to his ſon, from ancient times.

k Thoſe who deliver down this poem in tradition, lament that there is a great part of it loſt. In particular they regret the loſs of an epiſode, which was here introduced, with the ſequel of the ſtory of Carmal and his Druids. Their attachment to it was founded on the deſcriptions of magical inchantments which it contained.

SUL-MALLA:

SUL-MALLA OF LUMON:

A POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

This poem, which, properly ſpeaking, is a continuation of the laſt, opens with an addreſs to Sul-malla, the daughter of the king of Inis-huna, whom Oſſian met, at the chaſe, as he returned from the battle of Rath-col. Sul-malla invites Oſſian and Oſcar to a feaſt, at the reſidence of her father, who was then abſent in the wars. Upon hearing their name and family, ſhe relates an expedition of Fingal into Inis-huna. She caſually mentioning Cathmor, chief of Atha, (who then aſſiſted her father againſt his enemies) Oſſian introduces the epiſode of Culgorm and Surandronio, two Scandinavian kings, in whoſe wars Oſſian himſelf and Cathmor were engaged on oppoſite ſides. The ſtory is imperfect, a part of the original being loſt. Oſſian, warned, in a dream, by the ghoſt of Trenmor, ſets ſail from Inis-huna.

WHO moves ſo ſtately, on Lumon, at the roar of the foamy waters? Her hair falls upon her heaving breaſt. White is her arm behind, as ſlow ſhe bends the bow. Why doſt thou wander in deſarts, like a light through a cloudy field? The young roes are panting, by their ſecret rocks. Return, thou daughter of kings; the cloudy night is near.

It

It was the young branch of Lumon, Sul-malla of blue eyes. She ſent the bard from her rock, to bid us to her feaſt. Amidſt the ſong we ſat down, in Conmor's echoing hall. White moved the hands of Sul-malla, on the trembling ſtrings. Half-heard, amidſt the ſound, was the name of Atha's king; he that was abſent in battle for her own green land. Nor abſent from her ſoul was he; he came midſt her thoughts by night: Ton-thena looked in, from the ſky, and ſaw her toſſing arms.

The ſound of the ſhell had ceaſed. Amidſt long locks, Sul-malla roſe. She ſpoke with bending eyes, and aſked of our courſe through ſeas[b]." Not unknown, I ſaid, at his ſtreams is he, the father of our race. Fingal has been heard of at Cluba, blue-eyed daughter of kings. Nor only, at Cona's ſtream, is Oſſian and Oſcar known. Foes trembled at our voice, and ſhrunk in other lands.

Not unmarked, ſaid the maid, by Sul-malla, is the ſhield of Morven's king. It hangs high, in Conmor's hall, in memory of the paſt; when Fingal came to Cluba, in the days of other years. Loud roared the boar of Culdarnu, in the midſt of his rocks and woods. Inis-huna ſent her youths, but they failed; and virgins wept over tombs. Careleſs went the king to Culdarnu. On his ſpear rolled the ſtrength of the woods. He was bright, they ſaid, in his locks, the firſt of mortal men. Nor at the feaſt were heard his words. His deeds paſſed from his ſoul of fire, like the rolling of vapours from the face of the wandering ſun. Not careleſs looked the blue eyes of Cluba on his ſtately ſteps. In white boſoms roſe the king of Selma, in midſt of their thoughts by night. But the winds bore the ſtranger to the echoing vales of his roes. Nor loſt to other lands was he, like a meteor that ſinks in a cloud. He came forth, at times, in his brightneſs, to the diſtant dwelling of foes. His fame came, like the ſound of winds, to Cluba's woody vale [c].

Darkneſs dwells in Cluba of harps: the race of kings is diſtant far; in battle is Conmor of ſpears; and Lormor [d] king of ſtreams. Nor darkening alone they; a beam, from other lands, is nigh: the friend [e] of ſtrangers in Atha, the troubler of the field. High, from their miſty hill, look forth the blue eyes of Erin, for he is far away, young dweller of their ſouls. Nor, harmleſs, white hands of Erin! is he in the ſkirts of war; he rolls ten thouſand before him, in his diſtant field.

Not unſeen by Oſſian, I ſaid, ruſhed Cathmor from his ſtreams, when he poured his ſtrength on I-thorno [f], iſle of many waves. In ſtrife met two kings in I-thorno, Culgorm and Suran-dronlo: each each from his echoing iſle, ſtern hunters of the boar!

They met a boar, at a foamy ſtream: each pierced it with his ſteel. They ſtrove for the fame of the deed: and gloomy battle roſe. From iſle to iſle they ſent a ſpear, broken and ſtained with blood, to call the friends of their fathers, in their ſounding arms. Cathmor came, from Bolga, to Culgorm, red-eyed king: I aided Suran-dronlo, in his land of boars.

We ruſhed on either ſide of a ſtream, which roared through a blaſted heath. High broken rocks were round, with all their bending trees. Near are two circles of Loda, with the ſtone of power; where ſpirits deſcended, by night, in dark-red ſtreams of fire. There, mixed with the murmur of waters, roſe the voice of aged men, they called the forms of night, to aid them in their war.

Heedleſs [g] I ſtood, with my people, where fell the foamy ſtream from rocks. The moon moved red from the mountain. My ſong, at times, aroſe. Dark on the other ſide, young Cathmor heard my voice; for he lay, beneath the oak, in all his gleaming arms. Morning came; we ruſhed to fight: from wing to wing in the rolling of ſtrife. They fell, like the thiſtle head, beneath autumnal winds.

In armour came a ſtately form: I mixed my ſtrokes with the king. By turns our ſhields are pierced: loud rung our ſteely mails. His helmet fell to the ground. In brightneſs ſhone the foe. His eyes, two pleaſant flames, rolled between his wandering locks. I knew the king of Atha, and threw my ſpear on earth. Dark, we turned, and ſilent paſſed to mix with other foes.

Not ſo paſſed the ſtriving kings [h]. They mixed in echoing fray; like the meeting of ghoſts, in the dark wing of winds. Through either breaſt ruſhed the ſpears; nor yet lay the foes on earth. A rock received their fall; and half-reclined they lay in death. Each held the lock of his foe; and grimly ſeemed to roll his eyes. The ſtream of the rock leapt on their ſhields, and mixed below with blood.

The battle ceaſed in I-thorno. The ſtrangers met in peace: Cathmor from Atha of ſtreams, and Oſſian, king of harps. We placed the dead in earth. Our ſteps were by Runar's bay. With the bounding boat, afar, advanced a ridgy wave. Dark was the rider of ſeas, but a beam of light was there, like the ray of the ſun, in Stromlo's rolling ſmoke. It was the daughter [i] of Suran-dronlo, wild in brightened looks. Her eyes were wandering flames, amidſt diſordered locks. Forward is her white arm, with the ſpear; her high-heaving breaſt is ſeen, white as foamy waves that riſe, by turns, amidſt rocks. They are beautiful, but they are terrible, and mariners call the winds.

Come, ye dwellers of Loda! Carchar, pale in the midſt of clouds! Sluthmor, that ſtrideſt in airy halls! Corchtur, terrible in winds! Receive from his daughters ſpear, the foes of Suran-dronlo.

No ſhadow, at his roaring ſtreams; no mildly-looking form was he! When he took up his ſpear, the hawks ſhook their ſounding wings: for blood was poured around the ſteps of dark-eyed Suran-dronlo.

He lighted me, no harmleſs beam, to glitter on his ſtreams. Like meteors, I was bright, but I blaſted the foes of Suran-dronlo——* * * * * * * * *

Nor unconcerned heard Sul-malla, the praiſe of Cathmor of ſhields. He was within her ſoul, like a fire in ſecret heath, which awakes at the voice of the blaſt, and ſends its beam abroad. Amidſt the ſong removed the daughter of kings, like the ſoft ſound of a ſummer breeze; when it lifts the heads of flowers, and curls the lakes and ſtreams.

By night came a dream to Oſſian; without form ſtood the ſhadow of Trenmor. He ſeemed to ſtrike the dim ſhield, on Selma's ſtreamy rock. I roſe, in my rattling ſteel; I knew that war was near. Before the winds our ſails were ſpread; when Lumon ſhewed its ſtreams to the morn.

Come from the watching of night, Malvina, lonely beam!

NOTES ON SUL-MALLA OF LUMON.

[a] The expedition of Oſſian to Inis-huna, happened a ſhort time before Fingal paſſed over into Ireland, to dethrone Cairbar the ſon of Borbar-duthul. Cathmor, the brother of Cairbar, was aiding Conmor, king of Inis-huna, in the wars, at the time that Oſſian defeated Duth-carmor, in the valley of Rath-col. The poem is more intereſting, that it contains ſo many particulars concerning thoſe perſonages, who make ſo great a figure in Temora.

The exact correſpondence in the manners and cuſtoms of Inis-huna, as here deſcribed to thoſe of Caledonia, leaves no room to doubt, that the inhabitants of both were originally the ſame people. Some may alledge, that Oſſian might tranſfer, in his poetical deſcriptions, the manners of his own nation to foreigners. The objection is eaſily anſwered; for had Oſſian uſed that freedom in this paſſage, there is no reaſon why he ſhould paint the manners of the Scandinavians ſo different from thoſe of the Caledonians. We find, however, the former very different in their cuſtoms and ſuperſtitions from the nations of Britain and Ireland. The Scandinavian manners are remarkably barbarous and fierce, and ſeem to mark out a nation much leſs advanced advanced in civil ſociety, than the inhabitants of Britain were in the times of Oſſian.

[b] Sul-malla here diſcovers the quality of Oſſian and Oſcar from their ſtature and ſtately gait. Among nations not far advanced in civilization, a ſuperior beauty and ſtatelineſs of perſon were inſeparable from nobility of blood. It was from theſe qualities, that thoſe of family were known by ſtrangers, not from tawdry trappings of ſtate injudiciouſly thrown round them. The cauſe of this diſtinguiſhing property, muſt, in ſome meaſure, be aſcribed to their unmixed blood. They had no inducement to intermarry with the vulgar: and no low notions of intereſt made them deviate from their choice, in their own ſphere. In ſtates, where luxury has been long eſtabliſhed, I am told, that beauty of perſon is, by no means, the characteriſtic of antiquity of family. This muſt be attributed to thoſe enervating vices, which are inſeparable from luxury and wealth. A great family, (to alter a little the words of the hiſtorian) it is true, like a river, becomes conſiderable from the length of its courſe, but, as it rolls on, hereditary diſtempers, as well as property, flow ſucceſſively into it.

[c] Too partial to our own times, we are ready to mark our remote antiquity, as the region of ignorance and barbariſm. This, perhaps, is extending our prejudices too far. It has been long remarked, that knowledge, in a great meaſure, is founded on a free intercourſe between mankind; and that the mind is enlarged in proportion to the obſervations it has made upon the manners of different men and nations. If we look, with attention, into the hiſtory of Fingal, as delivered by Oſſian, we ſhall find that he was not altogether a poor ignorant hunter, confined to the narrow corner of an iſland. His expeditions to all parts of

Scandinavia,

Scandinavia, to the north of Germany, and the different ſtates of Great Britain and Ireland, were very numerous, and performed under ſuch a character, and at ſuch times, as gave him an opportunity to mark the undiſguiſed manners of mankind. War, and an active life, as they call forth, by turns, all the powers of the ſoul, preſent to us the different characters of men; in times of peace and quiet, for want of objects to exert them, the powers of the mind lie concealed, in a great meaſure, and we ſee only artificial paſſions and manners. It is from this conſideration I conclude, that a traveller of penetration could gather more genuine knowledge from a tour of ancient Gaul, than from the minuteſt obſervation of all the artificial manners, and elegant refinements of modern France.

[d] Lormor was the ſon of Conmor, and the brother of Sul-malla. After the death of Conmor, Lormor ſucceeded him in the throne.

[e] Cathmor, the ſon of Borbar-duthul. It would appear, from the partiality with which Sul-malla ſpeaks of that hero, that ſhe had ſeen him, previous to his joining her father's army; though tradition poſitively aſſerts, that it was, after his return, that ſhe fell in love with him.

[f] I-thorno, ſays tradition, was an iſland of Scandinavia. In it, at a hunting party, met Culgorm and Surun-dronlo, the kings of two neighbouring iſles. They differed about the honour of killing a boar; and a war was kindled between them. From this epiſode we may learn, that the manners of the Scandinavians were much more ſavage and cruel, than thoſe of Britain. It is remarkable, that the names, introduced in this ſtory, are not of Galic original, which circumſtance affords room to ſuppoſe, that it had its foundation in true hiſtory.

[g] From

[g] From the circumſtance of Oſſian not being preſent at the rites deſcribed in the preceding paragraph, we may ſuppoſe that he held them in contempt. This difference of ſentiment, with regard to religion, is a ſort of argument, that the Caledonians were not originally a colony of Scandinavians, as ſome have imagined. Concerning ſo remote a period, mere conjecture muſt ſupply the place of argument and poſitive proofs.

[h] Culgorm and Suran-dronlo. The combat of the kings and their attitude in death are highly picturesque, and expreſſive of that ferocity of manners, which diſtinguiſhed the northern nations.

[i] Tradition has handed down the name of this princeſs. The bards call her Runo-forlo, which has no other ſort of title for being genuine, but its not being of Galic original; a diſtinction, which the bards had not the art to preſerve when they feigned names for foreigners. The highland ſenachies, who very often endeavoured to ſupply the deficiency, they thought they found in the tales of Oſſian, have given us the continuation of the ſtory of the daughter of Suran-dronlo. The cataſtrophe is ſo unnatural, and the circumſtances of it ſo ridiculouſly pompous, that for the ſake of the inventors, I ſhall conceal them.

The wildly beautiful appearance of Runo-forlo, made a deep impreſſion on a chief, ſome ages ago, who was himſelf no contemptible poet. The ſtory is romantic, but not incredible, if we make allowances for the lively imagination of a man of genius. Our chief ſailing, in a ſtorm, along one of the iſlands of Orkney, ſaw a woman, in a boat, near the ſhore, whom he thought, as he expreſſes it himſelf, as beautiful as a ſudden ray of the ſun, on the dark heaving deep. The verſes of Oſſian, on the attitude of Runo-forlo, which which was ſo ſimilar to that of the woman in the boat, wrought ſo much on his fancy, that he fell deſperately in love. The winds, however, drove him from the coaſt, and, after a few days, he arrived at his reſidence in Scotland. There his paſſion increaſed to ſuch a degree, that two of his friends, fearing the conſequence, ſailed to the Orkneys, to carry to him the object of his deſire. Upon inquiry they ſoon found the nymph, and carried her to the enamoured chief: but mark his ſurpriſe, when, inſtead of a ray of the ſun, he ſaw a ſkinny fiſher woman, more than middle aged, appearing before him. Tradition here ends the ſtory: but it may be eaſily ſuppoſed that the paſſion of the chief ſoon ſubſided.

A POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

Fingal, in one of his voyages to the Orkney iſlands, was driven, by ſtreſs of weather, into a bay of Scandinavia, near the reſidence of Starno, king of Lochlin. Starno invites Fingal to a feaſt. Fingal, doubting the faith of the king, and mindful of his former breach of hoſpitality, (Fingal, B. III.) refuſes to go. Starno gathers together his tribes; Fingal reſolves to defend himſelf. Night coming on, Duth-maruno propoſes to Fingal, to obſerve the motions of the enemy. The king himſelf undertakes the watch. Advancing towards the enemy, he, accidentally, comes to the cave of Turthor, where Starno had confined Conban-carglas, the captive daughter of a neighbouring chief. Her ſtory is imperfect, a part of the original being loſt. Fingal comes to a place of worſhip, where Starno, and his ſon Swaran, conſulted the ſpirit of Loda, concerning the iſſue of the war. The rencounter of Fingal and Swaran. The Duan concludes, with a deſcription of the airy hall of Cruth-loda, ſuppoſed to be the Odin of Scandinavia.

DUAN[a] FIRST.

A TALE of the times of old! Why, thou wanderer unſeen, that bendeſt the thiſtle of Lora, why, thou breeze of the valley, haſt thou left mine ear? I hear no diſtant roar of ſtreams, no ſound of the harp, from the rocks! Come, thou huntreſs of Lutha, ſend back his ſoul to the bard.

I look forward to Lochlin of lakes, to the dark, ridgy bay of U-thorno, where Fingal deſcended from ocean, from the roar of winds. Few are the heroes of Morven, in a land unknown! Starno ſent a dweller of Loda, to bid Fingal to the feaſt: but the king remembered the paſt, and all his rage aroſe.

Nor Gormal's moſſy towers; nor Starno ſhall Fingal behold. Deaths wander, like ſhadows, over his fiery ſoul. Do I forget that beam of light, the white-handed daughter[b] of kings? Go, ſon of Loda; his words are but blaſts to Fingal: blaſts, that, to and fro, roll the thiſtle in autumnal vales.

Duth-maruno[c], arm of death! Cromma-glas, of iron ſhields! Struthmor, dweller of battle's wing! Cormar, whoſe ſhips bound on ſeas, careleſs as the courſe of a meteor, on dark ſtreaming clouds! Ariſe, around me, children of heroes, in a land unknown. Let each look on his ſhield, like Trenmor, the ruler of battles. "Come down, ſaid the king, thou dweller between the harps. Thou ſhalt roll this ſtream away, or dwell with me in earth."

Around

Around him they roſe in wrath. No words came forth: they ſeized their ſpears. Each ſoul is rolled into itſelf. At length the ſudden clang is waked, on all their echoing ſhields. Each took his hill, by night; at intervals, they darkly ſtood. Unequal burſts the hum of ſongs, between the roaring wind. Broad over them roſe the moon. In his arms, came tall Duth-maruno; he from Croma-charn of rocks, ſtern hunter of the boar. In his dark boat he roſe on waves, when Crumthormoth [d] awaked its woods. In the chaſe he ſhone, among his foes: No fear was thine, Duth-maruno.

Son of Comhal, he ſaid, my ſteps ſhall be forward through night. From this ſhield I ſhall view them, over their gleaming tribes. Starno, of lakes, is before me, and Swaran, the foe of ſtrangers. Their words are not in vain, by Loda's ſtone of power. If Duth-maruno returns not, his ſpouſe is lonely, at home, where meet two roaring ſtreams, on Crathmo-craulo's plain. Around are hills, with their woods: the ocean is rolling near. My ſon looks on ſcreaming ſea-fowl, young wanderer of the field. Give the head of a boar to Candona [e], tell him of his father's joy, when the briſtly ſtrength of I-thorno rolled on his lifted ſpear.

Not forgetting my fathers, ſaid Fingal, I have bounded over ridgy ſeas: theirs was the times of danger, in the days of old. Nor gathers darkneſs on me, before foes, though I am young, in my locks. Chief of Crathmo-craulo, the field of night is mine.

He ruſhed, in all his arms, wide-bounding over Turthor's ſtream, that ſent its ſullen roar, by night, through Gormal's miſty vale. A moon-beam glittered on a rock: in the midſt, ſtood a ſtately form; a form with floating locks, like Lochlin's white-boſomed maid. Unequal are her ſteps, and ſhort: ſhe throws a broken ſong on wind. At times ſhe toſſes her white arms: for grief is in her ſoul.

Torcul-torno [f], of aged locks! where now are thy ſteps, by Lulan? thou haſt failed, at thine own dark ſtreams, father of Conban-carglas! But I behold thee, chief of Lulan. Sporting by Loda's hall, when the dark-ſkirted night is poured along the ſky.

Thou, ſometimes, hideſt the moon, with thy ſhield. I have ſeen her dim, in heaven. Thou kindleſt thy hair into meteors, and faileſt along the night. Why am I forgot in my cave, king of ſhaggy boars? Look from the hall of Loda, on lonely Conban-carglas.

"Who art thou, ſaid Fingal, voice of night?" She trembling, turned away. "Who art thou, in thy thy darkneſs?" She ſhrunk into the cave. The king looſed the thong from her hands; he aſked about her fathers.

Torcul-torno, ſhe ſaid, once dwelt at Lulan's foamy ſtream: he dwelt—but, now, in Loda's hall, he ſhakes the ſounding ſhell. He met Starno of Lochlin, in battle; long fought the dark-eyed kings. My father fell, at length, blue-ſhielded Torcul-torno.

By a rock, at Lulan's ſtream, I had pierced the bounding roe. My white hand gathered my hair, from off the ſtream of winds. I heard a noiſe. Mine eyes were up. My ſoft breaſt roſe on high. My ſtep was forward, at Lulan, to meet thee, Torcul-torno!

It was Starno, dreadful king! His red eyes rolled on Conban-carglas. Dark waved his ſhaggy brow, above his gathered ſmile. Where is my father, I ſaid, he that was mighty in war? Thou art left alone among foes, daughter of Torcul-torno!

He took my hand. He raiſed the ſail. In this cave he placed me dark. At times, he comes, a gathered miſt. He lifts before me, my father's ſhield. Often paſſes a beam of youth, far-diſtant from my cave. He dwells lonely in the ſoul of the daughter of Torcul-torno.

Daughter

Daughter of Lulan, ſaid Fingal, white-handed Conban-carglas; a cloud, marked with ſtreaks of fire, is rolled along thy ſoul. Look not to that dark-robed moon; nor yet to thoſe meteors of heaven; my gleaming ſteel is around thee, daughter of Torcul-torno.

It is not the ſteel of the feeble, nor of the dark in ſoul. The maids are not ſhut in our [h] caves of ſtreams; nor toſſing their white arms alone. They bend, fair within their locks, above the harps of Selma. Their voice is not in the deſart wild, young light of Torcul-torno.

Fingal again, advanced his ſteps, wide through the boſom of night, to where the trees of Loda ſhook amidſt ſqually winds. Three ſtones, with heads of moſs, are there; a ſtream, with foaming courſe; and dreadful, rolled around them, is the dark-red cloud of Loda. From its top looked forward a ghoſt, half-formed of the ſhadowy ſmoke. He poured his voice, at times, amidſt the roaring ſtream. Near, bending beneath a blaſted tree, two heroes received his words: Swaran of the lakes, and Starno foe of ſtrangers. On their dun ſhields, they darkly leaned: their ſpears are forward in night.

night. Shrill ſounds the blaſt of darkneſs, in Starno's floating beard.

They heard the tread of Fingal. The warriors roſe in arms. "Swaran, lay that wanderer low, ſaid Starno, in his pride. Take the ſhield of thy father; it is a rock in war." Swaran threw his gleaming ſpear; it ſtood fixed in Loda's tree. Then came the foes forward, with ſwords. They mixed their rattling ſteel. Through the thongs of Swaran's ſhield ruſhed the blade [i] of Luno. The ſhield fell rolling on earth. Cleft the helmet [k] fell down. Fingal ſtopt the lifted ſteel. Wrathful ſtood Swaran unarmed. He rolled his ſilent eyes, and threw his ſword on earth. Then, ſlowly ſtalking over the ſtream, he whiſtled as he went.

Nor unſeen of his father is Swaran. Starno turned away in wrath. His ſhaggy brows waved dark, above his gathered rage. He ſtruck Loda's tree, with his ſpear; he raiſed the hum of ſongs. They came to the hoſt of Lochlin, each in his own dark path; like two foam-covered ſtreams, from two rainy vales.

To Turthor's plain Fingal returned. Fair roſe the beam of the eaſt. It ſhone on the ſpoils of Lochlin in the hand of the king. From her cave came forth, in her beauty, the daughter of Torcul-torno. She gathered her hair from wind; and wildly wildly raiſed her ſong. The ſong of Lulan of ſhells where once her father dwelt.

She ſaw Starno's bloody ſhield. Gladneſs roſe, a light, on her face. She ſaw the cleft helmet of Swaran[1]; ſhe ſhrunk, darkened, from the king. "Art thou fallen, by thy hundred ſtreams, O love of Conban-carglas!"

U-thorno, that riſeſt in waters; on whoſe ſide are the meteors of night! I behold the dark moon deſcending behind thy echoing woods. On thy top dwells the miſty Loda, the houſe of the ſpirits of men. In the end of his cloudy hall bends forward Cruth-loda of ſwords. His form is dimly ſeen, amidſt his wavy miſt. His right-hand is on his ſhield: in his left is the half-viewleſs ſhell. The roof of his dreadful hall is marked with nightly fires.

The race of Cruth-loda advance, a ridge of formleſs ſhades. He reaches the ſounding ſhell, to thoſe who ſhone in war; but, between him and the feeble, his ſhield riſes, a cruſt of darkneſs. He is a ſetting meteor to the weak in arms. Bright, as a rainbow on ſtreams, came white-armed Conban-carglas.

DUAN FIRST.

[a] The bards diſtinguiſhed thoſe compoſitions, in which the narration is often interrupted, by epiſodes and apoſtrophes, by the name of Duan. Since the extinction of the order of the bards, it has been a general name for all ancient compoſitions in verſe. The abrupt manner in which the ſtory of this poem begins, may render it obſcure to ſome readers; it may not therefore be improper, to give here the traditional preface, which is generally prefixed to it. Two years after he took to wife Ros-crana, the daughter of Cormac, king of Ireland, Fingal undertook an expedition into Orkney, to viſit his friend Cathulla, king of Iniſtore. After ſtaying a few days at Carric-thura, the reſidence of Cathulla, the king ſet ſail, to return to Scotland; but a violent ſtorm ariſing, his ſhips were driven into a bay of Scandinavia, near Gormal, the ſeat of Starno, king of Lochlin, his avowed enemy. Starno, upon the appearance of ſtrangers on his coaſt, ſummoned together the neighbouring tribes, and advanced, in a hoſtile manner, towards the bay of Uthorno, where Fingal had taken ſhelter. Upon diſcovering who the ſtrangers were, and fearing the valour of Fingal, which he had, more than once, experienced before, he reſolved to accompliſh by treachery, what he was afraid he ſhould fail in by open force. He invited, therefore, Fingal to a feaſt, at which he intended to aſſaſſinate him. The king prudently declined to go, and Starno betook himſelf to arms. The ſequel of the ſtory may be learned from the poem itſelf.

[b] Agandecca, the daughter of Starno, whom her father killed, on account of her diſcovering to Fingal, a plot laid againſt his life. Her ſtory is related at large, in the third book of Fingal.

[c] Duth-maruno is a name very famous in tradition. Many of his great actions are handed down, but the poems which contained the detail of them, are long ſince loſt. He lived, it is ſuppoſed, in that part of the north of Scotland, which is over againſt Orkney. Duth-maruno, Cromma-glas Strouthmor, and Cormar, are mentioned, as attending Comhal, in his laſt battle againſt the tribe of Morni, in a poem, which is ſtill preſerved. It is not the work of Oſſian; the phraſeology betrays it to be a modern compoſition. It is ſomething like thoſe trivial compoſitions, which the Iriſh bards forged, under the name of Oſſian, in the fifteenth and ſixteenth centuries. Duth-maruno ſignifies, black and ſteady; Cromma-glas, bending and ſwarthy; Struthmor, roaring ſtream; Cormar, expert at ſea.

[d] Crumthormoth, one of the Orkney or Shetland iſlands. The name is not of Galic original It was ſubject to its own petty king, who is mentioned in one of Oſſian's poems.

[e] Cean-daona, head of the people, the ſon of Duth-maruno. He became afterwards famous, in the expeditions of Oſſian, after the death of Fingal. The traditional tales concerning him are very numerous, and, from the epithet, in them, beſtowed on him (Candona of boars) it would appear, that he applied himſelf to that kind of hunting, which his father, in this paragraph, is ſo anxious to recommend to him. As I have mentioned the traditional tales of the Highlands, it may not be improper here, to give ſome account account of them. After the expulſion of the bards from the houſes of the chiefs, they being an indolent race of men, owed all their ſubſiſtence to the generoſity of the vulgar, whom they diverted with repeating the compoſitions of their predeceſſors, and running up the genealogies of their entertainers to the family of their chiefs. As this ſubject was, however, ſoon exhauſted, they were obliged to have recourſe to invention, and form ſtories having no foundation in fact, which were ſwallowed, with great credulity, by an ignorant multitude. By frequent repeating, the fables grew upon their hands, and, as each threw in whatever circumſtance he thought conducive to raiſe the admiration of his hearers, the ſtory became, at laſt, ſo devoid of all probability, that even the vulgar themſelves did not believe it. They, however, liked the tales ſo well, that the bards found their advantage in turning profeſſed tale-makers. They then launched out into the wildeſt regions of fiction and romance. I firmly believe there are more ſtories of giants, inchanted caſtles, dwarfs, and palfreys, in the Highlands, than in any country in Europe. Theſe tales, it is certain, like other romantic compoſitions, have many things in them unnatural, and, conſequently, diſguſtful to true taſte; but, I know not how it happens, they command attention more than any other fictions I ever met with. The extreme length of theſe pieces is very ſurpriſing, ſome of them requiring many days to repeat them, but ſuch hold they take of the memory, that few circumſtances are ever omitted by thoſe who have received them only from oral tradition: What is more amazing, the very language of the bards is ſtill preſerved. It is curious to ſee, that the deſcriptions of magnificence, introduced in theſe tales, is even ſuperior to all the pompous oriental fictions of the kind.

f Torcul-torno, according to tradition, was king of Crathlun, a diſtrict in Sweden. The river Lulan ran near the reſidence of Torcul-torno. There is a river in Sweden ſtill called Lula, which is probably the ſame with Lulan. The war between Starno and Torcul-torno, which terminated in the death of the latter, had its riſe, at a hunting party. Starno being invited, in a friendly manner, by Torcul-torno, both kings, with their followers, went to the mountains of Stivamor, to hunt. A boar ruſhed from the wood before the kings, and Torcul-torno killed it. Starno thought this behaviour a breach upon the privilege of gueſts who were always honoured, as tradition expreſſes it, with the danger of the chaſe. A quarrel aroſe, the kings came to battle, with all their attendants, and the party of Torcul-torno were totally defeated, and he himſelf ſlain. Starno purſued his victory, laid waſte the diſtrict of Crathlun, and coming to the reſidence of Torcul-torno, carried off, by force, Conban-carglas, the beautiful daughter of his enemy. Her he confined in a cave, near the palace of Gormal, where, on account of her cruel treatment, ſhe became diſtracted.

The paragraph juſt now before us, is the ſong of Conban-carglas, at the time ſhe was diſcovered by Fingal. It is in Lyric meaſure, and ſet to muſic, which is wild and ſimple, and ſo inimitably ſuited to the ſituation of the unhappy lady, that few can hear it without tears.

g By the beam of youth, it afterwards appears, that Conban-carglas means Swaran, the ſon of Starno, with whom, during her confinement, ſhe had fallen in love.

h From this contraſt, which Fingal draws, between his own nation, and the inhabitants of Scandinavia, we may learn, that the former were much leſs barbarous than the latter.

latter This diſtinction is ſo much obſerved throughout the poems of Oſſian, that there can be no doubt, that he followed the real manners of both nations in his own time. At the cloſe of the ſpeech of Fingal, there is a great part of the original loſt.

[i] The ſword of Fingal, ſo called from its maker, Luno of Lochlin.

[k] The helmet of Swaran. The behaviour of Fingal is always conſiſtent with that generoſity of ſpirit which belongs to a hero. He takes no advantage of a foe diſarmed.

[l] Conban-carglas, from ſeeing the helmet of Swaran bloody in the hands of Fingal, conjectured, that the hero was killed. A part of the original is loſt. It appears, however, from the ſequel of the poem, that the daughter of Torcul-torno did not long ſurvive her ſurpriſe, occaſioned by the ſuppoſed death of her lover. The deſcription of the airy hall of Loda (which is ſuppoſed to be the ſame with that of Odin, the deity of Scandinavia) is more picturesque and deſcriptive, than any in the Edda, or other works of the northern Scalders.

CATH-LODA:

A POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

Fingal returning, with day, devolves the command of the army on Duth-maruno, who engages the enemy, and drives them over the ſtream of Turthor. Fingal, after recalling his people, congratulates Duth-maruno on his ſucceſs, but diſcovers that the hero was mortally wounded in the engagement. Duth-maruno dies. Ullin, the bard, in honour of the dead, introduces the epiſode of Colgorm and Strina-dona, with which the Duan concludes.

DUAN SECOND.

WHERE art thou, ſon of the king, ſaid dark-haired Duth-maruno? Where haſt thou failed, young beam of Selma? He returns not from the boſom of night! Morning is ſpread on U-thorno: in his miſt is the ſun, on his hill. Warriors, lift the ſhields, in my preſence. He muſt not fall, like a fire from heaven, whoſe place is not marked on the ground. He comes like an eagle, from the ſkirt of his ſqually wind! In his hand are the ſpoils of foes. King of Selma, our ſouls were ſad.

Near

Near us are the foes, Duth-maruno. They come forward, like waves in miſt, when their foamy tops are ſeen, at times, above the low-ſailing vapour. The traveller ſhrinks on his journey, and knows not whether to fly. No trembling travellers are we! Sons of heroes, call forth the ſteel. Shall the ſword of Fingal ariſe, or ſhall a warrior lead?

The [2] deeds of old, ſaid Duth-maruno, are like paths to our eyes, O Fingal. Broad-ſhielded Trenmor is ſtill ſeen, amidſt his own dim years. Nor feeble was the ſoul of the king. There, no dark deed wandered in ſecret. From their hundred ſtreams came the tribes, to graſſy Colglan-crona. Their chiefs were before them. Each ſtrove to lead the war. Their ſwords were often half unſheathed. Red rolled their eyes of rage. Separate they ſtood, and hummed their ſurly ſongs. "Why ſhould they yield to each other? their fathers were equal in war."

Trenmor was there, with his people, ſtately in youthful locks. He ſaw the advancing foe. The grief of his ſoul aroſe. He bade the chiefs to lead, by turns: they led, but they were rolled away. From his own moſſy hill, blue-ſhielded Trenmor came down. He led wide-ſkirted battle, and the ſtrangers failed. Around him the dark-browed warriors warriors came: they ſtruck the ſhield of joy. Like a pleaſant gale, the words of power ruſhed forth from Selma of kings. But the chiefs led, by turns, in war, till mighty danger roſe: then was the hour of the king to conquer in the field.

"Not unknown, ſaid Cromma-glas[b] of ſhields, are the deeds of our fathers. But who ſhall now lead the war, before the race of kings? Miſt ſettles on theſe four dark hills: within it let each warrior ſtrike his ſhield. Spirits may deſcend in darkneſs, and mark us for the war." They went, each to his hill of miſt. Bards marked the ſounds of the ſhields. Loudeſt rung thy boſs, Duth-maruno. Thou muſt lead in war.

Like the murmur of waters, the race of U-thorno came down. Starno led the battle, and Swaran of ſtormy iſles. They looked forward from iron ſhields, like Cruth-loda fiery-eyed, when he looks from behind the darkened moon, and ſtrews his ſigns on night.

The foes met by Turthor's ſtream. They heaved like ridgy waves. Their echoing ſtrokes are mixed. Shadowy death flies over the hoſts. They were clouds of hail, with ſqually winds in their ſkirts. Their ſhowers are roaring together. Below them ſwells the dark-rolling deep.

Strife

Strife of gloomy U-thorno, why ſhould I mark thy wounds? Thou art with the years that are gone: thou fadeſt on my ſoul. Starno brought forward his ſkirt of war, and Swaran his own dark wing. Nor a harmleſs fire is Duth-maruno's ſword. Lochlin is rolled over her ſtreams. The wrathful kings are folded in thoughts. They roll their ſilent eyes, over the flight of their land. The horn of Fingal was heard; the ſons of woody Albion returned. But many lay, by Turthor's ſtream, ſilent in their blood.

Chief of Crom-charn, ſaid the king, Duth-maruno, hunter of boars! not harmleſs returns my eagle, from the field of foes. For this white-boſomed Lanul ſhall brighten at her ſtreams; Candona ſhall rejoice, at rocky Crathmo-craulo.

Colgorm [c], replied the chief, was the firſt of my race in Albion; Colgorm, the rider of ocean, through its watry vales. He ſlew his brother in I-thorno: he left the land of his fathers. He choſe his place, in ſilence, by rocky Crathmo-craulo. His race came forth, in their years; they came forth to war, but they always fell. The wound of my fathers is mine, king of echoing iſles!

He drew an arrow from his ſide. He fell pale, in a land unknown. His ſoul came forth to his fathers, to their ſtormy iſle. There they purſued boars of miſt, along the ſkirts of winds. The chiefs ſtood ſilent around, as the ſtones of Loda, on their hill. The traveller ſees them through the twilight, from his lonely path. He thinks them the ghoſts of the aged, forming future wars.

Night came down on U-thorno. Still ſtood the chiefs in their grief. The blaſt hiſſed, by turns, through every warrior's hair. Fingal, at length, burſted forth from the thoughts of his ſoul. He called Ullin of harps, and bade the ſong to riſe. No falling fire, that is only ſeen, and then retires in night; no departing meteor was Crathmo-craulo's chief. He was like the ſtrong-beaming ſun, long rejoicing on his hill. Call the names of his fathers, from their dwellings of old.

I-thorno [d], ſaid the bard, that riſeſt midſt ridgy ſeas! Why is thy head ſo gloomy, in the ocean's miſt? From thy vales came forth a race fearleſs as thy ſtrong winged eagles; the race of Colgorm of iron ſhields, dwellers of Loda's hall.

In Tormoth's reſounding iſle, aroſe Lurthan, ſtreamy hill. It bent its woody head above a ſilent vale. There, at foamy Cruruth's ſource, dwelt Rurmar, hunter of boars. His daughter was fair as a ſun-beam, white-boſomed Strinadona!

Many a king of heroes, and hero of iron ſhields; many a youth of heavy locks came to Rurmar's echoing echoing hall. They came to woo the maid, the ſtately huntreſs of Tormoth wild. But thou look-eſt careleſs from thy ſteps, high-boſomed Strina-dono!

If on the heath ſhe moved, her breaſt was whiter than the down of Cana [e]; if on the ſea-beat ſhore, than the foam of the rolling ocean. Her eyes were two ſtars of light; her face was heaven's bow in ſhowers; her dark hair flowed round it, like the ſtreaming clouds. Thou wert the dweller of ſouls, white-handed Strina-dona!

Colgorm came, in his ſhip, and Corcul-Suran, king of ſhells. The brothers came, from I-thorno, to woo the ſun-beam of Tormoth's iſle. She ſaw them in their echoing ſteel. Her ſoul was fix-ed on blue-eyed Colgorm. Ul-lochlin's [f] nightly eye looked in, and ſaw the toſſing arms of Strina-dona.

Wrathful the brothers frowned. Their flaming eyes, in ſilence, met. They turned away. They ſtruck their ſhields. Their hands were trembling on their ſwords. They ruſhed into the ſtrife of heroes, for long-haired Strinadona.

Corcul-Suran fell in blood. On his iſle, raged the ſtrength of his father. He turned Colgorm, from I-thorno, to wander on all the winds. In Crathmo-craulo's rocky field, he dwelt by a foreign ſtream. Nor darkened the king alone, that beam of light was near, the daughter of echoing Tormoth, white-armed Strina-dona. [g]

CATH-LODA.

DUAN SECOND.

[a] In this ſhort epiſode we have a very probable account given us, of the origin of monarchy in Caledonia. The Cael, or Gauls, who poſſeſſed the countries to the north of the Firth of Edinburgh, were, originally, a number of diſtinct tribes, or clans, each ſubject to its own chief, who was free and independent of any other power. When the Romans invaded them, the common danger might, perhaps, have induced thoſe reguli to join together, but, as they were unwilling to yield to the command of one of their own number, their battles were ill-conducted, and, conſequently, unſucceſsful. Trenmor was the firſt who repreſented to the chiefs, the bad conſequences of carrying on their wars in this irregular manner, and adviſed, that they themſelves ſhould alternately lead in battle. They did ſo, but they were unſucceſsful. When it came to Trenmor's turn, he totally defeated the enemy, by his ſuperior valour and conduct, which gained him ſuch an intereſt among the tribes, that he, and his family after him, were regarded as kings; or, to uſe the poets expreſſion, the words of power ruſhed forth from Selma of kings. The regal gal authority, however, except in time of war, was but inconſiderable; for every chief, within his own diſtrict, was abſolute and independent. From the ſcene of th. battle in this epiſode (which was in the valley of Crona, a little to the north of Agricola's wall) I ſhould ſuppoſe that the enemies of the Caledonians were the Romans, or provincial Britons.

[b] In tradition, this Cromma-glas makes a great figure in that battle which Comhal loſt, together with his life, to the tribe of Morni. I have juſt now, in my hands, an Iriſh compoſition, of a very modern date, as appears from the language, in which all the traditions, concerning that deciſive engagement, are jumbled together. In juſtice to the merit of the poem, I ſhould have here preſented to the reader a tranſlation of it, did not the bard mention ſome circumſtances very ridiculous, and others altogether indecent. Morna, the wife of Comhal, had a principal hand in all the tranſactions, previous to the defeat and death of her huſband; ſhe, to uſe the words of the bard, who was the guiding ſtar of the women of Erin. The bard, it is to be hoped, miſrepreſented the ladies of his country, for Morna's behaviour was, according to him, ſo void of all decency, and virtue, that it cannot be ſuppoſed, they had choſen her for their guiding ſtar. The poem conſiſts of many ſtanzas. The language is figurative, and the numbers harmonious; but the piece is ſo full of anachoniſms, and ſo unequal in its compoſition, that the author, moſt undoubtedly, was either mad, or drunk, when he wrote it. It is worthy of being remarked, that Comhal is, in this poem, very often called, Comhal na h' Albin, or Comhal of Albion. Which ſufficiently demonſtrates, that the allegations of Keating and O'Flaherty, concerning Fion Mac-Connal, are but of late invention.

[c] The family of Duth-maruuo, it appears, came originally from Scandinavia, or, at leaſt, from ſome of the northern iſles, ſubject in chief, to the kings of Lochlin. The Highland ſenachies, who never miſſed to make their comments on, and additions to, the works of Oſſian, have given us a long liſt of the anceſtors of Duth-maruno, and a particular account of their actions, many of which are of the marvellous kind. One of the tale-makers of the north has choſen for his hero, Starnmor, the father of Duth-maruno, and, conſidering the adventures through which he has led him, the piece is neither diſagreeable, nor abounding with that kind of fiction, which ſhocks credibility.

[d] This epiſode is, in the original, extremely beautiful. It is ſet to that wild kind of muſic, which ſome of the Highlanders diſtinguiſh, by the title of Fon Oio-Marra, or, the Song of Mermaids. Some part of the air is abſolutely infernal, but there are many returns in the meaſure, which are inexpreſſibly wild and beautiful. From the genius of the muſic, I ſhould think it came originally from Scandinavia, for the fictions delivered down concerning the Oi-marra, (who are reputed the authors of the muſic) exactly correſpond with the notions of the northern nations, concerning their diræ, or goddeſſes of death. Of all the names in this epiſode, there is none of a Galic original, except Strina-dona, which ſignifies, the ſtrife of heroes.

[e] The Cana is a certain kind of graſs, which grows plentifully in the heathy moraſſes of the north. Its ſtalk is of the reedy kind, and it carries a tuft of down, very much reſembling cotton. It is exceſſively white, and, conſequently, often introduced by the bards, in their ſimilies concerning the beauty of women.

[f] Ul-lochlin, the guide to Lochlin; the name of a ſtar.

[g] The continuation of this epiſode is juſt now in my hands: but the language is ſo different from, and the ideas ſo unworthy of, Oſſian, that I have rejected it, as an interpolation by a modern bard.

CATH-LODA:

A POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

Oſſian, after ſome general reflections, deſcribes the ſituation of Fingal, and the poſition of the army of Lochlin. The converſation of Starno and Swaran. The epiſode of Cormar-trunar and Foinar-bragal. Starno, from his own example, recommends to Swaran, to ſurpriſe Fingal, who had retired alone to a neighbouring hill. Upon Swaran's refuſal, Starno undertakes the enterpriſe himſelf, is overcome, and taken priſoner, by Fingal. He is diſmiſſed, after a ſevere reprimand for his cruelty.

DUAN THIRD.

WHENCE is the ſtream of years? Whither do thy roll along? Where have they hid, in miſt, their many-coloured ſides? I look into the times of old, but they ſeem dim to Oſſian's eyes, like reflected moon beams, on a diſtant lake. Here riſe the red beams of war! There, ſilent, dwells a feeble race! They mark no years with their deeds, as ſlow they paſs along. Dweller between the ſhields; thou that awakeſt the failing ſoul, deſcend from thy wall, harp of Cona, with thy voices three!

Come

Come with that which kindles the paſt: rear the forms of old, on their own dark-brown years!

U-thorno [a], hill of ſtorms, I behold my race on thy ſide. Fingal is bending, in night, over Duthmaruno's tomb. Near him are the ſteps of his heroes, hunters of the boar. By Turthor's ſtream the hoſt of Lochlin is deep in ſhades. The wrathful kings ſtood on two hills; they looked forward from their boſſy ſhields. They looked forward on the ſtars of night, red-wandering in the weſt. Cruthloda bends from high, like a formleſs meteor in the clouds. He ſends abroad the winds, and marks them, with his ſigns. Starno foreſaw, that Morven's king was never to yield in war.

He twice ſtruck the tree in wrath. He ruſhed before his ſon. He hummed a ſurly ſong; and heard his hair in wind. Turned [b] from one another, they ſtood, like two oaks, which different winds had bent; each hangs over its own loud rill, and ſhakes its boughs in the courſe of blaſts.

Annir, ſaid Starno of lakes, was a fire that conſumed of old. He poured death from his eyes, along the ſtriving fields. His joy was in the fall of men. Blood to him, was a ſummer ſtream, that brings joy to withered vales, from its own moſſy rock. He came forth to the lake Luth-cormo, to meet the tall Corman-trunar, he from Urlor of ſtreams, dweller of battle's wing.

The chief of Urlor had come to Gormal, with his dark-boſomed ſhips; he ſaw the daughter of Annir, white-armed Foinar-bragal. He ſaw her: nor careleſs rolled her eyes, on the rider of ſtormy waves. She fled to his ſhip in darkneſs, like a moon-beam through a nightly vale. Annir purſued along the deep; he called the winds of heaven. Nor alone was the king; Starno was by his ſide. Like U-thorno's young eagle, I turned my eyes on my father.

We came to roaring Urlor. With his people came tall Corman-trunar. We fought; but the foe prevailed. In his wrath ſtood Annir of lakes. He lopped the young trees, with his ſword. His eyes rolled red in his rage. I marked the ſoul of the king, and I retired in night. From the field I took a broken helmet: a ſhield that was pierced with ſteel: pointleſs was the ſpear in my hand. I went to find the foe.

On a rock ſat tall Corman-trunar, beſide his burning oak; and near him, beneath a tree, ſat deep-boſomed Foinar-bragal. I threw my broken ſhield before her; and ſpoke the words of peace. Beſide his rolling ſea, lies Annir of many lakes. The king was pierced in battle; and Starno is to raiſe raiſe his tomb. Me, a ſon of Loda, he ſends to white-handed Foinar-bragal, to bid her ſend a lock from her hair, to reſt with her father, in earth. And thou king of roaring Urlor, let the battle ceaſe, till Annir receive the ſhell, from fiery-eyed Cruth-loda.

Burſting [c] into tears, ſhe roſe, and tore a lock from her hair; a lock, which wandered, in the blaſt, along her heaving breaſt. Corman-trunar gave the ſhell; and bade me to rejoice before him. I reſted in the ſhade of night; and hide my face in my helmet deep. Sleep deſcended on the foe. roſe, like a ſtalking ghoſt. I pierced the ſide of Corman-trunar. Nor did Foinar-bragal eſcape. She rolled her white boſom in blood. Why then, daughter of heroes, didſt thou wake my rage? Morning roſe. The foe were fled, like the departure of miſt. Annir ſtruck his boſſy ſhield. He called his dark-haired ſon. I came, ſtreaked with wandering blood: thrice roſe the ſhout of the king, like the burſting forth of a ſquall of wind, from a cloud, by night. We rejoiced, three days, above the dead, and called the hawks of heaven. They came, from all their winds, to feaſt on Annir's foes. Swaran! Fingal is alone [d], on his hill of night. Let thy ſpear pierce the king in ſecret; like Annir, my ſoul ſhall rejoice.

Son of Annir of Gormal, Swaran ſhall not ſlay in ſhades. I move forth in light: the hawks ruſh from all their winds. They are wont to trace my courſe: it is not harmleſs through war.

Burning roſe the rage of the king. He thrice raiſed his gleaming ſpear. But ſtarting, he ſpared his ſon; and ruſhed into the night. By Turthor's ſtream a cave is dark, the dwelling of Conban-carglas. There he laid the helmet of kings, and called the maid of Lulan, but ſhe was diſtant far, in Loda's reſounding hall.

Swelling with rage, he ſtrode, to where Fingal lay alone. The king was laid on his ſhield, on his own ſecret hill. Stern hunter of ſhaggy boars, no feeble maid is laid before thee: no boy, on his ferny bed, by Turthmor's murmuring ſtream. Here is ſpread the couch of the mighty, from which they riſe to deeds of death. Hunter of ſhaggy boars awaken not the terrible.

Starno came murmuring on. Fingal aroſe in arms. "Who art thou, ſon of night?" Silent he threw the ſpear. They mixed their gloomy ſtrife. The ſhield of Starno fell, cleft in twain. He is bound to an oak. The early beam aroſe. Then Fingal beheld the king of Gormal. He rolled awhile his ſilent eyes. He thought of other days, when white-boſomed Agandecca moved like the muſic muſic of ſongs. He looſed the thong from his hands. Son of Annir, he ſaid, retire. Retire to Gormal of ſhells: a beam that was ſet returns. I remember thy white-boſomed daughter; dreadful king away! Go to thy troubled dwelling, cloudy foe of the lovely! Let the ſtranger ſhun thee, thou gloomy in the hall!

A TALE of the times of old!

NOTES ON

CATH-LODA.

DUAN THIRD.

[a] The bards, who were always ready to ſupply what they thought deficient in the poems of Oſſian, have inſerted a great many incidents between the ſecond and third Duan of Cath-loda. Their interpolations are ſo eaſily diſtinguiſhed from the genuine remains of Oſſian, that it took me very little time to mark them out, and totally to reject them. If the modern Scots and Iriſh bards have ſhewn any judgement, it is in aſcribing their own compoſitions to names of antiquity, for, by that means, they themſelves have eſcaped that contempt, which the authors of ſuch futile performances muſt, neceſſarily, have met with, from people of true taſte. I was led into this obſervation, by an Iriſh poem, juſt now before me. It concerns a deſcent made by Swaran, king of Lochlin, on Ireland, and is the work, ſays the traditional traditional preface prefixed to it, of Offian Mac-Fion. It however appears, from ſeveral pious ejaculations, that it was rather the compoſition of ſome good prieſt, in the fifteenth or ſixteenth century, for he ſpeaks, with great devotion, of pilgrimage, and more particularly, of the blue-eyed daughters of the convent. Religious, however, as this poet was, he was not altogether decent, in the ſcenes he introduces between Swaran and the wife of Congcullion, both of whom he repreſents as giants. It happening unfortunately that Congcullion was only of a moderate ſtature, his wife, without heſitation, preferred Swaran, as a more adequate match for her own gigantic ſize. From this fatal preference proceeded ſo much miſchief, that the good poet altogether loſt ſight of his principal action, and he ends the piece, with an advice to men, in the choice of their wives, which, however good it may be, I ſhall leave concealed in the obſcurity of the original.

[b] The ſurly attitude of Starno and Swaran is well adapted to their fierce and uncomplying diſpoſition. Their characters, at firſt ſight, ſeem little different; but, upon examination, we find that the poet has dexterouſly diſtinguiſhed between them. They were both dark, ſtubborn, haughty, and reſerved; but Starno was cunning, revengeful, and cruel, to the higheſt degree; the diſpoſition of Swaran, though ſavage, was leſs bloody, and ſomewhat tinctured with generoſity. It is doing injuſtice to Oſſian, to ſay, that he has not a great variety of characters.

[c] Oſſian is very partial to the fair ſex. Even the daughter of cruel Annir, the ſiſter of the revengeful and bloody Starno, partakes not of thoſe diſagreeable characters ſo peculiar to her family. She is altogether tender and delicate. Homer, of all ancient poets, uſes the ſex with leaſt ceremony.

ny. His cold contempt is even worſe, than the downright abuſe of the moderns; for to draw abuſe implies the poſſeſſion of ſome merit.

d Fingal, according to the cuſtom of the Caledonian kings, had retired to a hill alone, as he himſelf was to reſume the command of the army the next day. Starno might have ſome intelligence of the king's retiring, which occaſions his requeſt to Swaran, to ſtab him; as he foreſaw by his art of divination, that he could not overcome him in open battle.

OINA-MORUL.

OINA-MORUL:

A POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

After an addreſs to Malvina, the daughter of Toſcar, Oſſian proceeds to relate his own expedition to Fuarfed, an iſland of Scandinavia. Mal-orchol, king of Fuarfed, being hard preſſed in war, by Tonthormod, chief of Sardronlo, (who had demanded, in vain, the daughter of Mal-orchol in marriage) Fingal ſent Oſſian to his aid. Oſſian, on the day after his arrival, came to battle with Ton-thormod, and took him priſoner. Mal-orchol offers his daughter Oina-morul to Oſſian; but he, diſcovering her paſſion for Ton-thormod, generouſly ſurrenders her to her lover, and brings about a reconciliation between the two kings.

AS flies the unconſtant ſun, over Larmon's graſſy hill; ſo paſs the tales of old, along my ſoul, by night. When bards are removed to their place; when harps are hung in Selma's hall; then comes a voice to Oſſian, and awakes his ſoul. It is the voice of years that are gone: they roll before me, with all their deeds. I ſeize the tales, as they paſs, and pour them forth in ſong. Nor a troubled ſtream is the ſong of the king, it is like the riſing

OINA-MORUL.

I gave the long haired maid

riſing of muſic from Lutha of the ſtrings. Lutha, of many ſtrings, not ſilent are thy ſtreamy rocks, when the white hands of Malvina move upon the harp. Light of the ſhadowy thoughts, that fly acroſs my ſoul, daughter of Toſcar of helmets, wilt thou not hear the ſong! We call back, maid of Lutha, the years that have rolled away.

It was in the days of the king [a], while yet my locks were young, that I marked Con-cathlin [b], on high, from ocean's nightly wave. My courſe was towards the iſle of Fuarfed, woody dweller of ſeas. Fingal had ſent me to the aid of Mal-orchol, king of Fuarfed wild: for war was around him, and our fathers had met, at the feaſt.

In Col-coiled, I bound my ſails, and ſent my ſword to Mal-orchol of ſhells. He knew the ſignal of Albion, and the joy aroſe. He came from his own high hall, and ſeized my hand in grief. "Why comes the race of heroes to a falling king? Ton-thormod of many ſpears is the chief of wavy Sar-dronlo. He ſaw and loved my daughter white-boſomed Oina-morul. He fought; I denied the maid; for our fathers had been foes. He came, with battle, to Fuarfed. My people are rolled away. Why comes the race of heroes to a falling king?"

I come not, I ſaid, to look, like a boy, on the ſtrife. Fingal remembers Mal-orchol, and his hall for ſtrangers. From his waves, the warrior deſcended, on thy woody iſle. Thou wert no cloud before him. Thy feaſt was ſpread with ſongs. For this my ſword ſhall riſe; and thy foes perhaps may fail. Our friends are not forgot in their danger, though diſtant is our land.

Son of the daring Trenmor, thy words are like the voice of Cruth-loda, when he ſpeaks, from his parting cloud, ſtrong dweller of the ſky! Many have rejoiced at my feaſt; but they all have forgot Mal-orchol. I have looked towards all the winds, but no white ſails were ſeen. But ſteel [c] reſounds in my hall; and not the joyful ſhells. Come to my dwelling, race of heroes; dark-ſkirted night is near. Hear the voice of ſongs, from the maid of Fuarfed wild.

We went. On the harp aroſe the white hand of Oina-morul. She waked her own ſad tale from every trembling ſtring. I ſtood in ſilence for bright in her locks was the daughter of many iſles. Her eyes were like two ſtars, looking forward through a ruſhing ſhower. The mariner marks them on high, and bleſſes the lovely beam. With morning we ruſhed to battle, to Tormul's reſounding ſtream: the foe moved to the ſour of Tonthormod's boſſy ſhield. From wing to wing the ſtrife was mixed. I met the chief of Sardronlo. Wide flew his broken ſteel. I ſeized the king in fight. I gave his hand, bound faſt with thongs, to Mal-orchol, the giver of ſhells. Joy roſe at the feaſt of Fuarfed, for the foe had failed. Ton-thormod turned his face away, from Oina-morul of iſles.

Son of Fingal, begun Mal-orchol, not forgot ſhalt thou paſs from me. A light ſhall dwell in thy ſhip. Oina-morul of ſlow-rolling eyes. She ſhall kindle gladneſs, along thy mighty ſoul. Nor unheeded ſhall the maid move in Selma, through the dwelling of kings.

In the hall I lay in night. Mine eyes were half-cloſed in ſleep. Soft muſic came to mine ear: it was like the riſing breeze, that whirls, at firſt, the thiſtle's beard; then flies, dark-ſhadowy, over the graſs. It was the maid of Fuarfed wild: ſhe raiſed the nightly ſong; for ſhe knew that my ſoul was a ſtream, that flowed at pleaſant ſounds.

Who looks, ſhe ſaid, from his rock, on ocean's cloſing miſt? His long locks, like the raven's wing, are wandering on the blaſt. Stately are his ſteps in grief. The tears are in his eyes. His manly breaſt is heaving over his burſting ſoul. Retire, I am diſtant far; a wanderer in lands unknown. Though the race of kings are around me, yet my ſoul is dark. Why have our fathers been foes, Ton-thormod love of maids!

Soft voice of the ſtreamy iſle, why doſt thou mourn by night: the race of daring Trenmor are not the dark in ſoul. Thou ſhalt not wander, by ſtreams unknown, blue eyed Oina-morul. Within this boſom is a voice; it comes not to other ears; it bids Oſſian hear the hapleſs, in their hour of woe. Retire, ſoft ſinger by night; Ton-thormod ſhall not mourn on his rock.

With morning I looſed the king. I gave the long-haired maid. Mal-orchol heard my words, in the midſt of his echoing halls. "King of Fuarfed, wild, why ſhould Ton-thormod mourn? He is of the race of heroes, and a flame in war. Your fathers have been foes, but now their dim ghoſts rejoice in death. They ſtretch their arms of miſt to the ſame ſhell in Loda. Forget their rage, ye warriors, it was the cloud of other years."

Such were the deeds of Oſſian, while yet his locks were young: though lovelineſs, with a robe of beams, clothed the daughter of many iſles. We call back, maid of Lutha, the years that have rolled away.

NOTES

OINA-MORUL.

[a] Fingal.

[b] Con-cathlin, mild beam of the wave. What ſtar was ſo called of old is not eaſily aſcertained. Some now diſtinguiſh the pole-ſtar by that name. A ſong, which is ſtill in repute, among the ſea-faring part of the Highlanders, alludes to this paſſage of Oſſian. The author commends the knowledge of Oſſian in ſea affairs, a merit, which, perhaps, few of us moderns will allow him, or any in the age in which he lived. One thing is certain, that the Caledonians often made their way through the dangerous and tempeſtuous ſeas of Scandinavia; which is more, perhaps, than the more poliſhed nations, ſubſiſting in thoſe times, dared to venture. In eſtimating the degree of knowledge of arts among the ancients, we ought not to bring it into compariſon with the improvements of modern times. Our advantages over them proceed more from accident, than any merit of ours.

[c] There is a ſevere ſatire couched in this expreſſion, againſt the gueſts of Mal-orchol. Had his feaſt been ſtill ſpread, had joy continued in his hall, his former paraſites would not have failed to reſort to him. But as the time of feſtivity was paſt, their attendance alſo ceaſed. The ſentiments of a certain old bard are agreeable to this obſervation. He, poetically, compares a great man to a fire kindled in a deſart place. "Thoſe that pay court to him, ſays he, are rolling large around him, like the ſmoke about the fire. This ſmoke gives the fire a great appearance at a diſtance, but but it is but an empty vapour itſelf, and varying its form at every breeze. When the trunk, which fed the fire, is conſumed, the ſmoke departs on all the winds. So the flatterers forſake their chief, when his power declines." I have choſen to give a paraphraſe, rather than a tranſlation, of this paſſage, as the original is verboſe and frothy, notwithſtanding the ſentimental merit of the author. He was one of the leſs ancient bards, and their compoſitions are not nervous enough to bear a literal tranſlation.

COLNA-DONA:

COLNA-DONA:

A POEM.

THE ARGUMENT.

Fingal diſpatches Oſſian and Toſcar to raiſe a ſtone, on the banks of the ſtream of Crona, to perpetuate the memory of a victory, which he had obtained in that place. When they were employed in that work, Car-ul, a neighbouring chief, invited them to a feaſt. They went: and Toſcar fell deſperately in love with Colna-dona, the daughter of Car-ul. Colna-dona became no leſs enamoured of Toſcar. An incident, at a hunting-party, brings their loves to a happy iſſue.

COL-AMON[a] of troubled ſtreams, dark wanderer of diſtant vales, I behold thy courſe, between trees, near Car-ul's echoing halls. There dwelt bright Colna-dona, the daughter of the king. Her eyes were rolling ſtars; her arms were white as the foam of ſtreams. Her breaſt roſe ſlowly to ſight, like ocean's heaving wave. Her ſoul was a ſtream of light. Who, among the maids, was like the love of heroes?

Beneath the voice of the king, we moved to Crona[b] of the ſtreams, Toſcar of graſſy Lutha, and Oſſian, young in fields. Three bards attended with ſongs. Three boſſy ſhields were borne before us: for we were to rear the ſtone, in memory of the paſt. By Crona's moſſy courſe, Fingal had ſcattered his foes: he had rolled away the ſtrangers, like a troubled ſea. We came to the place of renown: from the mountains deſcended night. I tore an oak from its hill, and raiſed a flame on high. I bade my fathers to look down, from the clouds of their hall; for, at the fame of their race, they brighten in the wind.

I took a ſtone from the ſtream, amidſt the ſong of bards. The blood of Fingal's foes hung curdled in its ooze. Beneath, I placed, at intervals, three boſſes from the ſhields of foes, as roſe or fell the ſound of Ullin's nightly ſong. Toſcar laid a dagger in earth, a mail of ſounding ſteel. We raiſed the mould around the ſtone, and bade it ſpeak to other years.

Oozy daughter of ſtreams, that now art reared on high, ſpeak to the feeble, O ſtone, after Selma's race have failed! Prone, from the ſtormy night, the traveller ſhall lay him, by thy ſide: thy whiſtling moſs ſhall ſound in his dreams; the years that were paſt ſhall return. Battles riſe before him, blue-ſhielded kings deſcend to war: the darkened moon looks from heaven, on the troubled field. He ſhall burſt, with morning, from dreams, dreams, and ſee the tombs of warriors round. He ſhall aſk about the ſtone, and the aged will reply, "This gray ſtone was raiſed by Oſſian, a chief of other years!"

From [c] Col-amon came a bard, from Car-ul, the friend of ſtrangers. He bade us to the feaſt of kings, to the dwelling of bright Colna-dona. We went to the hall of harps. There Car-ul brightened between his aged locks, when he beheld the ſons of his friends, like two young trees with their leaves.

Sons of the mighty, he ſaid, ye bring back the days of old, when firſt I deſcended from waves, on Selma's ſtreamy vale. I purſued Duth-mocarglos, dweller of ocean's wind. Our fathers had been foes, we met by Clutha's winding waters. He fled, along the ſea, and my ſails were ſpread behind him. Night deceived me, on the deep. I came to the dwelling of kings, to Selma of high-boſomed maids. Fingal came forth with his bards, and Conloch, arm of death. I feaſted three days in the hall, and ſaw the blue eyes of Erin, Ros-crana, daughter of heroes, light of Cormac's race. Nor forgot did my ſteps depart: the kings gave their ſhields to Car-ul: they hang, on high, in Col-amon, in memory of the paſt. Sons of the daring kings, ye bring back the days of old.

Car-ul placed the oak of feaſts. He took two boſſes from our ſhields. He laid them in earth, beneath a ſtone, to ſpeak to the hero's race. "When battle, ſaid the king, ſhall roar, and our ſons are to meet in wrath; my race ſhall look, perhaps, on this ſtone, when they prepare the ſpear. Have not our fathers met in peace, they will ſay and lay aſide the ſhield?"

Night came down. In her long locks moved the daughter of Car-ul. Mixed with the harp aroſe the voice of white-armed Colna-dona. Toſcar darkened in his place, before the love of heroes. She came on his troubled ſoul, like a beam to the dark-heaving ocean: when it burſts from a cloud, and brightens the foamy ſide of a wave [d].

* * * * * * *

With morning we awaked the woods; and hung forward on the path of the roes. They fell by their wonted ſtreams. We returned through Crona's vale. From the wood a youth came forward, with a ſhield and pointleſs ſpear. "Whence, ſaid Toſcar of Lutha, is the flying beam? Dwells there peace at Col-amon, round bright Colna-dona of harps?"

By

By Col-amon of ſtreams, ſaid the youth, bright Colna-dona dwelt. She dwelt; but her courſe is now in deſarts, with the ſon of the king; he that ſeized her ſoul as it wandered through the hall.

Stranger of tales, ſaid Toſcar, haſt thou marked the warrior's courſe? He muſt fall; give thou that boſſy ſhield! In wrath he took the ſhield. Fair behind it heaved the breaſts of a maid, white as the boſom of a ſwan, riſing on ſwift-rolling waves. It was Colna-dona of harps, the daughter of the king. Her blue eyes had rolled on Toſcar, and her love aroſe.

NOTES ON COLNA-DONA.

[a] Colna-dona ſignifies the love of heroes. Col-amon, narrow river. Car-ul, dark eyed. Col-amon, the reſidence of Car-ul, was in the neighbourhood of Agricola's wall, towards the ſouth. Car-ul ſeems to have been of the race of thoſe Britons, who are diſtinguiſhed by the name of Maiatæ, by the writers of Rome. Maiatæ is derived from two Galic words, MOI, a plain, and AITICH, inhabitants; ſo that the ſignification of Maiatæ is, the inhabitants of the plain country; a name given to the Britons, who were ſettled in the Low-lands, in contradiſtinction to the Caledonians, (i. e. CAEL-DON, the Gauls of the hills) who were poſſeſſed of the more mountainous diviſion of North-Britain.

[b] Crona, murmuring, was the name of a ſmall ſtream, which diſcharged itſelf in the river Carron. It is often mentioned by Oſſian, and the ſcenes of many of his poems are on its banks. The enemies, whom Fingal defeated here, are not mentioned. They were, probably, the provincial Britons. That tract of country between the Firths of Forth and Clyde has been, through all antiquity, famous for battles and rencounters, between the different nations, who were poſſeſſed of North and South Britain. Stirling, a town ſituated there, derives its name from that very circumſtance. It is a corruption of the Gallic name, STRILA, i. e. the hill, or rock of contention.

[c] The manners of the Britons and Caledonians were ſo ſimilar, in the days of Oſſian, that there can be no doubt, that they were originally the ſame people, and deſcended from thoſe Gauls who firſt poſſeſſed themſelves of South-Britain, and gradually migrated to the north. This hypotheſis is more rational than the idle fables of ill informed ſenachies, who bring the Caledonians from diſtant countries. The bare opinion of Tacitus, (which, by-the-bye, was only founded on a ſimilarity of the perſonal figure of the Caledonians to the Germans of his own time) though it has ſtaggered ſome learned men, is not ſufficient to make us believe, that the ancient inhabitants of North-Britain were a German colony. A diſcuſſion of a point like this might be curious, but could never be ſatisfactory. Periods ſo diſtant are ſo involved in obſcurity, that nothing certain can be now advanced concerning them. The light which the Roman writers hold forth is too feeble to guide us to the truth, through the darkneſs which has ſurrounded it.

[d] Here an epiſode is entirely loſt; or at leaſt, handed down ſo imperfectly, that it does not deſerve a place in the poem.

THE DEATH OF OSCAR:

A POEM.

INTRODUCTION.

One of the Fragments of Ancient Poetry lately publiſhed, gives a different account of the death of Oſcar, the ſon of Oſſian. The tranſlator, though he well knew the more probable tradition concerning that hero, was unwilling to reject a poem, which, if not really of Oſſian's compoſition, has much of his manner, and conciſe turn of expreſſion. A more correct copy of that fragment, which has ſince come to the tranſlator's hands, has enabled him to correct the miſtake, into which a ſimilarity of names had led thoſe who handed down the poem by tradition. The heroes of the piece are Oſcar the ſon of Caruth, and Dermid the ſon of Diaran. Oſſian, or perhaps his imitator, opens the poem with a lamentation for Oſcar, and afterwards, by an eaſy tranſition, relates the ſtory of Oſcar the ſon of Caruth, who ſeems to have bore the ſame character, as well as name, with Oſcar the ſon of Oſſian. Though the tranſlator thinks he has good reaſon to reject the fragment as the compoſition of Oſſian, yet as it is, after all, ſtill ſomewhat doubtful whether it is or not, he has here ſubjoined it.

WHY openeſt thou afreſh the ſpring of my grief, O ſon of Alpin, inquiring how Oſcar fell? My eyes are blind with tears; but memory beams on my heart. How can I relate the mournful death of the head of the people! Chief of the warriors, Oſcar, my ſon, ſhall I ſee thee no more!

He fell as the moon in a ſtorm; as the ſun from the midſt of his courſe, when clouds riſe from the waſte of the waves, when the blackneſs of the ſtorm inwraps the rocks of Ardannider. I, like an ancient oak on Morven, I moulder alone in my place. The blaſt hath lopped my branches away; and I tremble at the wings of the north. Chief of the warriors, Oſcar, my ſon! ſhall I ſee thee no more!

But, ſon of Alpin, the hero fell not harmleſs as the graſs of the field; the blood of the mighty was on his ſword, and he travelled with death through the ranks of their pride. But Oſcar, thou ſon of Caruth, thou haſt fallen low! No enemy fell by thy hand. Thy ſpear was ſtained with the blood of thy friend.

Dermid and Oſcar were one: They reaped the battle together. Their friendſhip was ſtrong as their ſteel; and death walked between them to the field. They came on the foe like two rocks falling from the brows of Ardven. Their ſwords were ſtained with the blood of the valiant: warriors fainted at their names. Who was equal to Oſcar, but Dermid? and who to Dermid, but Oſcar!

They

They killed mighty Dargo in the field; Dargo who never fled in war. His daughter was fair as the morn; mild as the beam of night. Her eyes, like two ſtars in a ſhower; her breath, the gale of ſpring: her breaſts, as the new fallen ſnow floating on the moving heath. The warriors ſaw her, and loved; their ſouls were fixed on the maid. Each loved her as his fame; each muſt poſſeſs her, or die. But her ſoul was fixed on Oſcar; the ſon of Caruth was the youth of her love. She forgot the blood of her father; and loved the hand that ſlew him.

Son of Caruth, ſaid Dermid, I love; O Oſcar, I love this maid. But her ſoul cleaveth unto thee; and nothing can heal Dermid. Here, pierce this boſom, Oſcar; relieve me, my friend, with thy ſword.

My ſword, ſon of Diaran, ſhall never be ſtained with the blood of Dermid.

Who then is worthy to ſlay me, O Oſcar ſon of Caruth? Let not my life paſs away unknown. Let none but Oſcar ſlay me. Send me with honour to the grave, and let my death be renowned.

Dermid, make uſe of thy ſword; ſon of Diaran, wield thy ſteel. Would that I fell with thee! that my death came from the hand of Dermid!

They

They fought by the brook of the mountain, by the ſtreams of Branno. Blood tinged the running water, and curdled round the moſſy ſtones. The ſtately Dermid fell; he fell, and ſmiled in death.

And falleſt thou, ſon of Diaran, falleſt thou by Oſcar's hand! Dermid who never yielded in war, thus do I ſee thee fall! He went, and returned to the maid of his love; he returned, but ſhe perceived his grief.

Why that gloom, ſon of Caruth? what ſhades thy mighty ſoul?

Though once renowned for the bow, O maid, I have loſt my fame. Fixed on a tree by the brook of the hill, is the ſhield of the valiant Gormur, whom I ſlew in battle. I have waſted the day in vain, nor could my arrow pierce it.

Let me try, ſon of Caruth, the ſkill of Dargo's daughter. My hands were taught the bow: my father delighted in my ſkill.

She went. He ſtood behind the ſhield. Her arrow flew, and pierced his breaſt.

Bleſſed be that hand of ſnow; and bleſſed that bow of yew! Who but the daughter of Dargo was worthy to ſlay the ſon of Caruth? Lay me in the earth, my fair one; lay me by the ſide of Dermid.

Oſcar! the maid replied, I have the ſoul of the mighty Dargo. Well pleaſed I can meet death.

My

My ſorrow I can end. She pierced her white boſom with the ſteel. She fell; ſhe trembled; and died.

By the brook of the hill their graves are laid; a birch's unequal ſhade covers their tomb Often on their green earthen tombs the branchy ſons of the mountain feed, when mid-day is all in flames, and ſilence over all the hills.

POEMS OF OSSIAN.

THE hiſtory of thoſe nations which originally poſſeſſed the north of Europe, is little known. Deſtitute of the uſe of letters, they themſelves had not the means of tranſmitting their great actions to remote poſterity. Foreign writers ſaw them only at a diſtance, and therefore their accounts are partial and indiſtinct. The vanity of the Romans induced them to conſider the nations beyond the pale of their empire as barbarians; and conſequently their hiſtory unworthy of being inveſtigated. Some men, otherwiſe of great merit among ourſelves, give into this confined opinion. Having early imbibed their idea of exalted manners from the Greek and Roman writers, they ſcarcely ever afterwards had the fortitude to allow any dignity of character to any other ancient people.

Without derogating from the fame of Greece and Rome, we may conſider antiquity beyond the pale of their empire worthy of ſome attention. The nobler paſſions of the mind never ſhoot forth more free and unreſtrained than in theſe times we call barbarous. That irregular manner of life, and thoſe manly purſuits from which barbarity takes its name, are highly favourable to a ſtrength of mind unknown in poliſhed times. In advanced ſociety the characters of men are more uniform and diſguiſed. The human paſſions lie in ſome degree concealed behind forms, and artificial manners; manners; and the powers of the ſoul, without an opportunity of exerting them, loſe their vigour. The times of regular government, and poliſhed manners, are therefore to be wiſhed for by the feeble and weak in mind. An unſettled ſtate, and thoſe convulſions which attend it, is the proper field for an exalted character, and the exertion of great parts. Merit there riſes always ſuperior; no fortuitous event can raiſe the timid and mean into power. To thoſe who look upon antiquity in this light, it is an agreeable proſpect; and they alone can have real pleaſure in tracing nations to their ſource.

The eſtabliſhment of the Celtic ſtates, in the north of Europe, is beyond the reach of their written annals. The traditions and ſongs to which they truſted their hiſtory, were loſt, or altogether corrupted in their revolutions and migrations, which were ſo frequent and univerſal, that no kingdom in Europe is now poſſeſſed by its original inhabitants. Societies were formed, and kingdoms erected, from a mixture of nations, who, in proceſs of time, loſt all knowledge of their own origin.

If tradition could be depended upon, it is only among a people, from all time free of intermixture with foreigners. We are to look for theſe among the mountains and inacceſſible parts of a country: places, on account of their barrenneſs, uninviting to an enemy, or whoſe natural ſtrength enabled the natives to repel invaſions. Such are the inhabitants of the mountains of Scotland. We, accordingly, find, that they differ materially from thoſe who poſſeſs the low and more fertile part of the kingdom. Their language is pure and original, and their manners are thoſe of an ancient and unmixed race of men. Conſcious of their own antiquity, they long deſpiſed others, as a new and mixed people. As they lived in a country only fit for paſture, they were free of that toil and buſineſs, which engroſs the attention of a commercial people. Their amuſement conſiſted in hearing or repeating their ſongs and traditions, and theſe intirely turned on the antiquity of their nation, and the exploits of their forefathers. It is no wonder, therefore, that there are more remains of antiquity among them, than among any other people in Europe. Traditions, however, concerning remote periods, are only to be regarded, in ſo far as they co-incide with cotemporary writers of undoubted credit and veracity.

No writers began their accounts from a more early period, than the hiſtorians of the Scots nation. Without records, or even tradition itſelf, they give a long liſt of ancient kings, and a detail of their tranſactions, with a ſcrupulous exactneſs. One might naturally ſuppoſe, that, when they had no authentic annals, they ſhou d, at leaſt, have recourſe to the traditions of their country, and have reduced them into a regular ſyſtem of hiſtory. Of both they ſeem to have been equally deſtitute. Born in the low country, and ſtrangers to the ancient language of their nation, they contented themſelves with copying from one another, and retailing the ſame fictions, in a new colour and dreſs.

John Fordun was the firſt who collected thoſe fragments of the Scots hiſtory, which had eſcaped the brutal policy of Edward I. and reduced them into order. His accounts, in ſo far as they concerned recent tranſactions, deſerved credit: beyond a certain period, they were fabulous and unſatisfactory. Some time before Fordun wrote, the king of England, in a letter to the Pope, had run up the antiquity of his nation to a very remote æra. Fordun, poſſeſſed of all the national prejudice of the age, was unwilling that his country ſhould yield, in point of antiquity, to a people, then its rivals and enemies. Deſtitute of annals in Scotland,

he had recourſe to Ireland, which, according to the vulgar errors of the times, was reckoned the firſt habitation of the Scots. He found, there, that the Iriſh bards had carried their pretenſions to antiquity as high, if not beyond any nation in Europe. It was from them he took thoſe improbable fictions, which form the firſt part of his hiſtory.

The writers that ſucceeded Fordun implicitly followed his ſyſtem, though they ſometimes varied from him in their relations of particular tranſactions, and the order of ſucceſſion of their kings. As they had no new lights, and were, equally with him, unacquainted with the traditions of their country, their hiſtories contain little information concerning the origin of the Scots. Even Buchanan himſelf, except the elegance and vigour of his ſtyle, has very little to recommend him. Blended with political prejudices, he ſeemed more anxious to turn the fictions of his predeceſſors to his own purpoſes, than to detect their miſrepreſentations, or inveſtigate truth amidſt the darkneſs which they had thrown round it. It therefore appears, that little can be collected from their own hiſtorians, concerning the firſt migration of the Scots into Britain.

That this iſland was peopled from Gaul admits of no doubt. Whether colonies came afterwards from the north of Europe is a matter of mere ſpeculation. When South-Britain yielded to the power of the Romans, the unconquered nations to the north of the province were diſtinguiſhed by the name of Caledonians. From their very name, it appears, that they were of thoſe Gauls, who poſſeſſed themſelves originally of Britain. It is compounded of two Celtic words, Cael ſignifying Celts, or Gauls, and Dun, or Don a hill; ſo that Cael-don, or Caledonians, is as much as to ſay, the Celts of the hill country. The Highlanders to this day, call themſelves, Cael, their language Gaelic or Galic, and their country Caeldoch, which the Romans ſoftened into Caledonia. This, of itſelf, is ſufficient to demonſtrate, that they are the genuine deſcendents of the ancient Caledonians, and not a pretended colony of Scots, who ſettled firſt in the north, in the third or fourth century.

From the double meaning of the word Cael, which ſignifies ſtrangers, as well as Gauls, or Celts ſome have imagined, that the anceſtors of the Caledonians were of a different race from the reſt of the Britons, and that they received their name upon that account. This opinion, ſay they, is ſupported by Tacitus, who, from ſeveral circumſtances, concludes that the Caledonians were of German extraction. A diſcuſſion of a point ſo intricate, at this diſtance of time, could neither be ſatisfactory nor important.

Towards the latter end of the third, and beginning of the fourth century, we meet with the Scots in the north. Porphyrius * makes the firſt mention of them about that time. As the Scots were not heard of before that period, moſt writers ſuppoſed them to have been a colony, newly come to Britain, and that the Picts were the only genuine deſcendents of the ancient Caledonians. This miſtake is eaſily removed. The Caledonians, in proceſs of time, became naturally divided into two diſtinct nations, as poſſeſſing parts of the country, entirely different in their nature and ſoil. The weſtern coaſt of Scotland is hilly and barren; towards the eaſt the country is plain, and fit for tillage. The inhabitants of the mountains, a roving and uncontrouled race of men, lived by feeding of cattle, and what they killed in hunting. Their employment did not fix them to one place. They removed from one heath to another, as ſuited beſt with their convenience or inclination. They were not, therefore, improperly called, by their neighbours neighbours SCUITE or the wandering nation; which is evidently the origin of the Roman name of Scoti.

On the other hand, the Caledonians, who poſſeſſed the eaſt coaſt of Scotland, as the diviſion of the country was plain and fertile, applied themſelves to agriculture and raiſing of corn. It was from this, that the Galic name of the Picts proceeded; for they are called, in that language, Cruithnich, i. e. the wheat or corn-eaters. As the Picts lived in a country ſo different in its nature from that poſſeſſed by the Scots, ſo their national character ſuffered a material change. Unobſtructed by mountains, or lakes, their communication with one another was free and frequent. Society, therefore, became ſooner eſtabliſhed among them, than among the Scots, and, conſequently, they were much ſooner governed by civil magiſtrates and laws. This, at laſt, produced ſo great a difference in the manners of the two nations, that they began to forget their common origin, and almoſt continual quarrels and animoſities ſubſiſted between them. Theſe animoſities, after ſome ages, ended in the ſubverſion of the Pictiſh kingdom, but not in the total extirpation of the nation, according to moſt of the Scots writers, who ſeemed to think it more for the honour of their countrymen to annihilate, than reduce a rival people under their obedience. It is certain, however, that the very name of the Picts was loſt, and thoſe that remained were ſo completely incorporated with their conquerors, that they ſoon loſt all memory of their own origin.

The end of the Pictiſh government is placed ſo near that period, to which authentic annals reach, that it is matter of wonder, that we have no monuments of their language or hiſtory remaining. This favours the ſyſtem I have laid down. Had they originally been of a different race from the Scots, their language of courſe would be different.

The

The contrary is the caſe. The names of places in the Pictiſh dominions, and the very names of their kings, which are handed down to us, are of Galic original, which is a convincing proof, that the two nations were, of old, one and the ſame, and only divided into two governments, by the effect which their ſituation had upon the genius of the people.

The name of Picts was, perhaps, given by the Romans to the Caledonians who poſſeſſed the eaſt coaſt of Scotland, from their painting their bodies. This circumſtance made ſome imagine, that the Picts were of Britiſh extract, and a different race of men from the Scots. That more of the Britons, who fled northward from the tyranny of the Romans, ſettled in the low country of Scotland, than among the Scots of the mountains, may be eaſily imagined, from the very nature of the country. It was they who introduced painting among the Picts. From this circumſtance proceeded the name of the latter, to diſtinguiſh them from the Scots, who never had that art among them, and from the Britons, who diſcontinued it after the Roman conqueſt.

The Caledonians, moſt certainly, acquired a conſiderable knowledge in navigation, by their living on a coaſt interſected with many arms of the ſea, and, in iſlands, divided, one from another, by wide and dangerous firths. It is, therefore, highly probable, that they, very early, found their way to the north of Ireland, which is within ſight of their own country. That Ireland was firſt peopled from Britain is certain. The vicinity of the two iſlands; the exact correſpondence of the ancient inhabitants of both, in point of manners and language, are ſufficient proofs, even if we had not the teſtimony of authors of undoubted veracity * to confirm it. The abettors of the moſt romantic ſyſtems of Iriſh

Iriſh antiquities allow it; but they place the colony from Britain in an improbable and remote æra. I ſhall eaſily admit, that the colony of the Firbolg, confeſſedly the Belgæ of Britain, ſettled in the ſouth of Ireland, before the Cael, or Caledonians, diſcovered the north: but it is not at all likely, that the migration of the Firbolg to Ireland happened many centuries before the Chriſtian æra.

Oſſian, in the poem of Temora, [Book II.] throws conſiderable light on this ſubject. His accounts agree ſo well with what the ancients have delivered, concerning the firſt population and inhabitants of Ireland, that every unbiaſſed perſon will confeſs them more probable, than the legends handed down, by tradition, in that country. From him, it appears, that, in the days of Trathal, grandfather to Fingal, Ireland was poſſeſſed by two nations; the Firbolg or Belgæ of Britain, who inhabited the ſouth, and the Cael, who paſſed over from Caledonia and the Hebrides to Ulſter. The two nations, as is uſual among an unpoliſhed and lately ſettled people, were divided into ſmall dynaſties, ſubject to petty kings, or chiefs, independent of one another. In this ſituation, it is probable, they continued long, without any material revolution in the ſtate of the iſland, until Crothar, Lord of Atha, a country in Connaught, the moſt potent chief of the Firbolg, carried away Conlama, the daughter of Cathmin, a chief of the Cael, who poſſeſſed Ulſter.

Conlama had been betrothed, ſome time before, to Turloch, a chief of their own nation. Turloch reſented the affront offered him by Crothar, made an irruption into Connaught, and killed Cormul, the brother of Crothar, who came to oppoſe his progreſs. Crothar himſelf then took arms, and either killed or expelled Turloch. The war, upon this, became general, between the two nations: and the Cael were reduced to the laſt extremity. In this ſituation, they applied, for aid, to Trathal king of Morven, who ſent his brother Conar, already famous for his great exploits, to their relief. Conar, upon his arrival in Ulſter, was choſen king, by the unanimous conſent of the Caledonian tribes, who poſſeſſed that country. The war was renewed with great vigour and ſucceſs; but the Firbolg appear to have been rather repelled than ſubdued. In ſucceeding reigns, we learn from epiſodes in the ſame poem, that the chiefs of Atha made ſeveral efforts to become monarchs of Ireland, and to expel the race of Conar.

To Conar ſucceeded his ſon Cormac, [Book III.] who appears to have reigned long. In his latter days he ſeems to have been driven to the laſt extremity, by an inſurrection of the Firbolg, who ſupported the pretenſions of the chiefs of Atha to the Iriſh throne. Fingal, who then was very young, came to the aid of Cormac, totally defeated Colculla, chief of Atha, and re-eſtabliſhed Cormac in the ſole poſſeſſion of all Ireland. [Book IV.] It was then he fell in love with, and took to wife, Ros-crana, the daughter of Cormac, who was the mother of Oſſian.

Cormac was ſucceeded in the Iriſh throne by his ſon, Cairbre; Cairbre by Artho, his ſon, who was the father of that Cormac, in whoſe minority the invaſion of Swaran happened, which is the ſubject of the poem of Fingal. The family of Atha who had not relinquiſhed their pretenſions to the Iriſh throne, rebelled in the minority of Cormac, defeated his adherents, and murdered him in the palace of Temora. [Book I.] Cairbar, lord of Atha, upon this, mounted the throne. His uſurpation ſoon ended with his life; for Fingal made an expedition into Ireland, and reſtored, after various viciſſitudes of fortune, the family of Conar to the poſſeſſion of the kingdom. This war is the ſubject of Temora; the events, though certainly heightened, and embelliſhed by poetry, ſeem, notwithſtanding, to have their foundation in true hiſtory.

Oſſian has not only preſerved the hiſtory of the firſt migration of the Caledonians into Ireland, but has alſo delivered ſome important facts, concerning the firſt ſettlement of the Firbolg, or Belgæ of Britain, in that kingdom, under their leader Larthon, who was anceſtor to Cairbar and Cathmor, who ſucceſſively mounted the Iriſh throne, after the death of Cormac, the ſon of Artho. I forbear to tranſcribe the paſſage, on account of its length. [Book VII.] It is the ſong of Fonar, the bard; towards the latter end of the ſeventh book of Temora. As the generations from Larthon to Cathmor, to whom the epiſode is addreſſed, are not marked, as are thoſe of the family of Conar, the firſt king of Ireland, we can form no judgment of the time of the ſettlement of the Firbolg. It is, however, probable, it was ſome time before the Cael, or Caledonians, ſettled in Ulſter. One important fact may be gathered from this hiſtory of Oſſian, that the Iriſh had no king before the latter end of the firſt century. Fingal lived, it is certain, in the third century; ſo Conar, the firſt monarch of the Iriſh, who was his grand-uncle, cannot be placed farther back than at the cloſe of the firſt. The eſtabliſhing of this fact, lays, at once, aſide the pretended antiquities of the Scots and Iriſh, and cuts off the long liſt of kings which the latter give us for a millennium before.

Of the affairs of Scotland, it is certain, nothing can be depended upon, prior to the reign of Fergus, the ſon of Erc, who lived in the fifth century. The true hiſtory of Ireland begins ſomewhat later than that period. Sir James Ware,* who was indefatigable in his reſearches after the antiquities of his country, rejects, as mere fiction and idle romance, all that is related of the ancient Iriſh, before the time of St Patrick, and the reign of Leogaire. It is from this conſideration, that he begins his hiſtory at the introduction of Chriſtianity, remarking, that all that is delivered down, concerning the times of Paganiſm, were tales of late invention, ſtrangely mixed with anachroniſms and inconſiſtencies. Such being the opinion of Ware, who had collected with uncommon induſtry and zeal, all the real and pretendedly ancient manuſcripts, concerning the hiſtory of his country, we may, on his authority, reject the improbable and ſelf-condemned tales of Keating and O Flaherty. Credulous and puerile to the laſt degree, they have diſgraced the antiquities they meant to eſtabliſh. It is to be wiſhed, that ſome able Iriſhman, who underſtands the language and records of his country, may redeem, ere it is too late, the genuine antiquities of Ireland, from the hands of theſe idle fabuliſts.

By comparing the hiſtory preſerved by Oſſian with the legends of the Scots and Iriſh writers, and, by afterwards examining both by the teſt of the Roman authors, it is eaſy to diſcover which is the moſt probable. Probability is all that can be eſtabliſhed on the authority of tradition, ever dubious and uncertain. But when it favours the hypotheſis laid down by cotemporary writers of undoubted veracity, and, as it were, finiſhes the figure of which they only drew the out-lines, it ought, in the judgment of ſober reaſon, to be preferred to accounts framed in dark and diſtant periods, with little judgment, and upon no authority.

Concerning the period of more than a century, which intervenes between Fingal and the reign of Fergus, the ſon of Erc or Arcath, tradition is dark and contradictory. Some trace up the family of Fergus to a ſon of Fingal of that name, who makes a conſiderable figure in Oſſian's poems.

The

The three elder ſons of Fingal, Oſſian, Fillan, and Ryno, dying without iſſue, the ſucceſſion, of courſe, devolved upon Fergus, the fourth ſon and his poſterity. This Fergus, ſay ſome traditions, was the father of Congal, whoſe ſon was Arcath, the father of Fergus, properly called the firſt king of Scots, as it was in his time the Cael, who poſſeſſed the weſtern coa of Scotland, began to be diſtinguiſhed by foreigners, by the name of Scots From thence forward, the Scots and Picts as diſtinct nations, became objects of attention to the hiſtorians of other countries. The internal ſtate of the two Caledonian kingdoms has always continued, and ever muſt remain, in obſcurity and fable.

It is in this epoch we muſt fix the beginning of the decay of that ſpecies of heroiſm, which ſubſiſted in the days of Oſſian. There are three ſtages in human ſociety. The firſt is the reſult of conſanguinity, and the natural affection of the members of a family to one another. The ſecond begins when property is eſtabliſhed, and men enter into aſſociations for mutual defence, againſt the invaſions and injuſtice of neighbours. Mankind ſubmit, in the third, to certain laws and ſubordinations of government, to which they truſt the ſafety of their perſons and property. As the firſt is formed on nature, ſo, of courſe, it is the moſt diſintereſted and noble. Men, in the laſt, have leiſure to cultivate the mind, and to reſtore it, with reflection, to a primæval dignity of ſentiment. The middle ſtate is the region of complete barbariſm and ignorance. About the beginning of the fifth century, the Scots and Picts were advanced into the ſecond ſtage, and, conſequently, into thoſe circumſcribed ſentiments, which always diſtinguiſh barbarity. The events which ſoon after happened did not at all contribute to enlarge their ideas, or mend their national character.

About

About the year 426, the Romans, on account of domeſtic commotions, entirely forſook Britain, finding it impoſſible to defend ſo diſtant a frontier. The Picts and Scots, ſeizing this favourable opportunity, made incurſions into the deſerted province. The Britons, enervated by the ſlavery of ſeveral centuries, and thoſe vices, which are inſeparable from an advanced ſtate of civility, were not able to withſtand the impetuous, though irregular attacks of a barbarous enemy. In the utmoſt diſtreſs, they applied to their old maſters, the Romans, and (after the unfortunate ſtate of the empire could not ſpare aid) to the Saxons, a nation equally barbarous and brave, with the enemies of whom they were ſo much afraid. Though the bravery of the Saxons repelled the Caledonian nations for a time, yet the latter found means to extend themſelves, conſiderably, towards the ſouth. It is, in this period, we muſt place the origin of the arts of civil life among the Scots. The ſeat of government was removed from the mountains to the plain and more fertile provinces of the ſouth, to be near the common enemy, in caſe of ſudden incurſions.

Inſtead of roving through unfrequented wilds, in ſearch of ſubſiſtence, by means of hunting, men applied to agriculture, and raiſing of corn. This manner of life was the firſt means of changing the national character. The next thing which contributed to it was their mixture with ſtrangers.

In the countries which the Scots had conquered from the Britons, it is probable the moſt of the old inhabitants remained. Theſe incorporating with the conquerors, taught them agriculture, and other arts, which they themſelves had received from the Romans. The Scots, however, in number as well as power, being the moſt predominant, retained ſtill their language, and as many of the cuſtoms of their anceſtors, ceſtors, as ſuited with the nature of the country they poſſeſſed. Even the union of the two Caledonian kingdoms did not much affect the national character. Being originally deſcended from the ſame ſtock, the manners of the Picts and Scots were as ſimilar as the different natures of the countries they poſſeſſed permitted.

What brought about a total change in the genius of the Scots nation, was their wars, and other tranſactions with the Saxons. Several counties in the ſouth of Scotland were alternately poſſeſſed by the two nations. They were ceded in the ninth age, to the Scots, and, it is probable, that moſt of the Saxons remained in poſſeſſion of their lands. During the ſeveral conqueſts and revolutions in England, many fled, for refuge, into Scotland, to avoid the oppreſſion of foreigners, or the tyranny of domeſtic uſurpers; in ſo much, that the Saxon race formed perhaps near one half of the Scottiſh kingdom. The Saxon manners and language daily gained ground, on the tongue and cuſtoms of the ancient Caledonians, till, at laſt, the latter were entirely relegated to inhabitants of the mountains, who were ſtill unmixed with ſtrangers.

It was after the acceſſion of territory which the Scots received, upon the retreat of the Romans from Britain, that the inhabitants of the Highlands were divided into clans. The king, when he kept his court in the mountains, was conſidered, by the whole nation, as the chief of their blood. Their ſmall number, as well the preſence of their prince, prevented thoſe diviſions, which, afterwards ſprung forth into ſo many ſeparate tribes. When the ſeat of government was removed to the ſouth, thoſe who remained in the Highlands were, of courſe, neglected. They naturally formed themſelves into ſmall ſocieties, independent of one another. Each ſociety had its own regulus, who either was, or in the ſucceſſion of a few generations, was regarded as chief of their blood. The nature of the country favoured an inſtitution of this ſort. A few vallies, divided from one another by extenſive heaths and impaſſible mountains, form the face of the Highlands. In theſe vallies the chiefs fixed their reſidence. Round them, and almoſt within ſight of their dwellings, were the habitations of their relations and dependents.

The ſeats of the Highland chiefs were neither diſagreeable nor inconvenient. Surrounded with mountains and hanging woods, they were covered from the inclemency of the weather. Near them generally ran a pretty large river, which diſcharging itſelf not far off, into an arm of the ſea, or extenſive lake, ſwarmed with variety of fiſh. The woods were ſtocked with wild-fowl; and the heaths and mountains behind them were the natural ſeat of the red-deer and roe. If we may make allowance for the backward ſtate of agriculture, the vallies were not unfertile; affording, if not all the conveniencies, at leaſt the neceſſaries of life. Here the chief lived, the ſupreme judge and law-giver of his own people; but his ſway was neither ſevere nor unjuſt. As the populace regarded him as the chief of their blood, ſo he, in return, conſidered them as members of his family. His commands, therefore, though abſolute and deciſive, partook more of the authority of a father, than of the rigour of a judge. Though the whole territory of the tribe was conſidered as the property of the chief, yet his vaſſals made him no other conſideration for their lands than ſervices, neither burdenſome nor frequent. As he ſeldom went from home, he was at no expence. His table was ſupplied by his own herds, and what his numerous attendants killed in hunting.

In this rural kind of magnificence, the Highland chiefs lived, for many ages. At a diſtance from the ſeat of government, vernment, and ſecured, by the inacceſſibleneſs of their country, they were free and independent. As they had little communication with ſtrangers, the cuſtoms of their anceſtors remained among them, and their language retained its original purity. Naturally fond of military fame, and remarkably attached to the memory of their anceſtors, they delighted in traditions and ſongs, concerning the exploits of their nation, and eſpecially of their own particular families. A ſucceſſion of bards was retained in every clan, to hand down the memorable actions of their forefathers. As the æra of Fingal, on account of Oſſian's poems, was the moſt remarkable, and his chiefs the moſt renowned names in tradition, the bards took care to place one of them in the genealogy of every great family. The part of the poems, which concerned the hero who was regarded as anceſtor, was preſerved, as an authentic record of the antiquity of the family, and was delivered down, from race to race, with wonderful exactneſs.

The bards themſelves, in the mean time, were not idle. They erected their immediate patrons into heroes, and celebrated them in their ſongs. As the circle of their knowledge was narrow, their ideas were confined in proportion. A few happy expreſſions, and the manners they repreſent, may pleaſe thoſe who underſtand the language; their obſcurity and inaccuracy would diſguſt in a tranſlation. It was chiefly for this reaſon, that I kept wholly to the compoſitions of Oſſian, in my former and preſent publication. As he acted in a more extenſive ſphere, his ideas are more noble and univerſal; neither has he ſo many of thoſe peculiarities, which are only underſtood in a certain period or country. The other bards have their beauties, but not in that ſpecies of compoſition in which Oſſian excels. Their rhymes, only calculated to kindle a martial ſpirit among the vulgar, afford very little pleaſure to genuine taſte. This obſervation only regards their poems of the heroic kind; in every other ſpecies of poetry they are more ſucceſsful. They expreſs the tender melancholy of deſponding love, with irreſiſtible ſimplicity and nature. So well adapted are the ſounds of the words to the ſentiments, that, even without any knowledge of the language, they pierce and diſſolve the heart. Succeſsful love is expreſſed with peculiar tenderneſs and elegance. In all their compoſitions, except the heroic, which was ſolely calculated to animate the vulgar, they give us the genuine language of the heart, without any of thoſe affected ornaments of phraſeology, which, though intended to beautify ſentiments, diveſt them of their natural force. The ideas, it is confeſſed, are too local, to be admired, in another language; to thoſe who are acquainted with the manners they repreſent, and the ſcenes they deſcribe, they muſt afford the higheſt pleaſure and ſatisfaction.

It was the locality of his deſcription and ſentiment, that, probably kept Oſſian ſo long in the obſcurity of an almoſt loſt language. His ideas, though remarkably proper for the times in which he lived, are ſo contrary to the preſent advanced ſtate of ſociety, that more than a common mediocrity of taſte is required, to reliſh his poems as they deſerve. Thoſe who alone were capable to make a tranſlation were, no doubt, conſcious of this, and choſe rather to admire their poet in ſecret, than ſee him received, with coldneſs, in an Engliſh dreſs.

Theſe were long my own ſentiments, and accordingly, my firſt tranſlations, from the Galic, were merely accidental. The publication, which ſoon after followed, was ſo well received, that I was obliged to promiſe to my friends a larger collection. In a journey through the Highlands and iſles, and, by the aſſiſtance of correſpondents, ſince I left that country, all the genuine remains of the works of Oſſian have come to my hands. In the preceding volume complete poems were only given. Unfiniſhed and imperfect poems were purpoſely omitted; even ſome pieces were rejected on account of their length, and others, that they might not break in upon that thread of connection, which ſubſiſts in the leſſer compoſitions, ſubjoined to Fingal. That the comparative merit of pieces was not regarded, in the ſelection, will readily appear to thoſe who ſhall read, attentively, the preſent collection. It is animated with the ſame ſpirit of poetry, and the ſame ſtrength of ſentiment is ſuſtained throughout.

The opening of the poem of Temora made its appearance in the firſt collection of Oſſian's works. The ſecond book, and ſeveral other epiſodes, have only fallen into my hands lately. The ſtory of the poem, with which I had been long acquainted, enabled me to reduce the broken members of the piece into the order in which they now appear. For the eaſe of the reader, I have divided myſelf into books, as I had done before with the poem of Fingal. As to the merit of the poem I ſhall not anticipate the judgment of the public. My impartiality might be ſuſpected, in my accounts of a work, which, in ſome meaſure, is become my own. If the poem of Fingal met with the applauſe of perſons of genuine taſte, I ſhould alſo hope, that Temora will not diſpleaſe them.

But what renders Temora infinitely more valuable than Fingal, is the light it throws on the hiſtory of the times. The firſt population of Ireland, its firſt kings, and ſeveral circumſtances, which regard its connection of old with the ſouth and north of Britain, are preſented to us, in ſeveral epiſodes. The ſubject and cataſtrophe of the poem are founded upon facts, which regarded the firſt peopling of that country, and the conteſts between the two Britiſh nations, which originally inhabited it. In a preceding part of this Diſſertation, I have ſhewn how ſuperior the probability of Oſſian's traditions is to the undigeſted fictions of the Iriſh bards, and the more recent and regular legends of both Iriſh and Scottiſh hiſtorians. I mean not to give offence to the abetters of the high antiquities of the two nations, though I have all along expreſſed my doubts, concerning the veracity and abilities of thoſe who deliver down their ancient hiſtory. For my own part, I prefer the national fame, ariſing from a few certain facts, to the legendary and uncertain annals of ages of remote and obſcure antiquity. No kingdom now eſtabliſhed in Europe, can pretend to equal antiquity with that of the Scots, even according to my ſyſtem, ſo that it is altogether needleſs to fix their origin a fictitious millennium before.

Since the publication of the poems contained in the firſt volume, many inſinuations have been made, and doubts ariſen, concerning their authenticity. I ſhall, probably, hear more of the ſame kind after the preſent poems ſhall make their appearance. Whether theſe ſuſpicions are ſuggeſted by prejudice, or are only the effects of ignorance of facts, I ſhall not pretend to determine. To me they give no concern, as I have it always in my power to remove them. An incredulity of this kind is natural to perſons, who confine all merit to their own age and country. Theſe are generally the weakeſt, as well as the moſt ignorant, of the people. Indolently confined to a place, their ideas are narrow and circumſcribed. It is ridiculous enough to ſee ſuch people as theſe are, branding their anceſtors, with the deſpicable appellation of barbarians. Sober reaſon can eaſily diſcern, where the title ought to be fixed with more propriety.

As prejudice is always the effect of ignorance, the knowing, the men of true taſte, deſpiſe and diſmiſs it. If the poetry is good, and the characters natural and ſtriking, to them it is a matter of indifference, whether the heroes were born in the little village of Angles in Jutland, or natives of the barren heaths of Caledonia. That honour which nations derive from anceſtors, worthy, or renowned, is merely ideal. It may buoy up the minds of individuals, but it contributes very little to their importance in the eyes of others. But of all thoſe prejudices which are incident to narrow minds, that which meaſures the merit of performances by the vulgar opinion, concerning the country which produced them, is certainly the moſt ridiculous. Ridiculous, however, as it is, few have the courage to reject it; and I am thoroughly convinced, that a few quaint lines of a Roman or Greek epigrammatiſt, if dug out of the ruins of the Herculaneum would meet with more cordial and univerſal applauſe, than all the moſt beautiful and natural rhapſodies of all the Celtic bards and Scandinavian ſcalders that ever exiſted.

While ſome doubt the authenticity of the compoſitions of Oſſian, others ſtrenuouſly endeavour to appropriate them to the Iriſh nation. Though the whole tenor of the poems ſufficiently contradict ſo abſurd an opinion, it may not be improper, for the ſatisfaction of ſome, to examine the narrow foundation, on which this extraordinary claim is built.

Of all the nations deſcended from the ancient Celtæ, the Scots and Iriſh are the moſt ſimilar in language, cuſtoms, and manners. This argues a more intimate connection between them, than a remote deſcent from the great Celtic ſtock. It is evident, in ſhort, that, at ſome one period or other,

other, they formed one ſociety, were ſubject to the ſame government, and were, in all reſpects, one and the ſame people. How they became divided, which the colony, or which the mother nation, does not fall now to be diſcuſſed. The firſt circumſtance that induced me to diſregard the vulgarly-received opinion of the Hibernian extraction of the Scottiſh nation, was my obſervations on their ancient language. That dialect of the Celtic tongue, ſpoken in the north of Scotland, is much more pure, more agreeable to its mother language, and more abounding with primitives, than that now ſpoken, or even that which has been writ for ſome centuries back, amongſt the moſt unmixed part of the Iriſh nation. A Scotſman, tolerably converſant in his own language, underſtands an Iriſh compoſition, from that derivative analogy which it has to the Galic of North Britain. An Iriſhman, on the other hand, without the aid of ſtudy, can never underſtand a compoſition in the Galic tongue. This affords a proof, that the Scots Galic is the moſt original, and, conſequently the language of a more ancient and unmixed people. The Iriſh, however backward they may be to allow any thing to the prejudice of their antiquity, ſeem inadvertently to acknowledge it, by the very appellation they give to the dialect they ſpeak. They call their own language Caelic Eirinach, i. e. Caledonian Iriſh, when, on the contrary, they call the dialect of North-Britain a Chaelic or the Caledonian tongue, emphatically. A circumſtance of this nature tends more to decide which is the moſt ancient nation, than the united teſtimonies of a whole legion of ignorant bards and ſenachies, who, perhaps never dreamed of bringing the Scots from Spain to Ireland, till ſome one of them, more learned than the reſt, diſcovered, that the Romans called the firſt Iberia, and the latter Hi-

bernia. On ſuch a ſlight foundation were probably built thoſe romantic fictions, concerning the Mileſians of Ireland.

From internal proofs it ſufficiently appears, that the poems publiſhed under the name of Oſſian, are not of Iriſh compoſition. The favourite chimæra, that Ireland is the mother-country, of the Scots, is totally ſubverted and ruined. The fictions concerning the antiquities of that country, which were forming for ages, and growing as they came down, on the hands of ſucceſſive ſenachies and ſileas, are found, at laſt, to be the ſpurious brood of modern and ignorant ages. To thoſe who know how tenacious the Iriſh are, of their pretended Iberian deſcent, this alone is proof ſufficient, that poems, ſo ſubverſive of their ſyſtem, could never be produced by an Hibernian bard. But when we look to the language, it is ſo different from the Iriſh dialect, that it would be as ridiculous to think, that Milton's Paradiſe Loſt could be wrote by a Scottiſh peaſant, as to ſuppoſe, that the poems aſcribed to Oſſian were writ in Ireland.

The pretenſions of Ireland to Oſſian proceed from another quarter. There are handed down, in that country, traditional poems, concerning the Fiona, or the heroes of Fion Mac Comnal. This Fion, ſay the Iriſh annaliſts, was general of the militia of Ireland, in the reign of Cormac, in the third century. Where Keating and O'Flaherty learned that Ireland had an embodied militia ſo early, is not eaſy for me to determine. Their information certainly did not come from the Iriſh poems, concerning Fion. I have juſt now, in my hands, all that remain, of thoſe compoſitions; but, unluckily for the antiquities of Ireland, they appear to be the work of a very modern period. Every ſtanza, nay almoſt every line, affords ſtriking proofs, that they cannot be three centuries old. Their alluſions to the manners and cuſtoms of the fifteenth century, are ſo many, that it is matter matter of wonder to me, how any one could dream of their antiquity. They are entirely writ in that romantic taſte, which prevailed two ages ago. Giants, inchanted caſtles, dwarfs, palfreys, witches and magicians form the whole circle of the poet's invention. The celebrated Fion could ſcarcely move from one hillock to another, without encountering a giant, or being entangled in the circles of a magician. Witches, on broom-ſticks were continually hovering round him, like crows; and he had freed inchanted virgins in every valley in Ireland. In ſhort, Fion, great as he was, paſſed a diſagreeable life. Not only had he to engage all the miſchiefs in his own country, foreign armies invaded him, aſſiſted by magicians and witches, and headed by kings as tall as the main-maſt of a firſt rate. It muſt be owned, however, that Fion was not inferior to them in height.

A chos air Cromleach, druim-ard, Chos eile air Crom-meal dubh,
Thoga Fion le lamh mhoir
An d'uiſgeo Lubhair na fruth.
With one foot on Cromleach his brow,
The other on Crommal the dark,
Fion took up with his large hand
The water from Lubar of the ſtreams.

Cromleach and Crommal were two mountains in the neighbourhood of one another, in Ulſter, and the river Lubar ran through the intermediate valley. The property of ſuch a monſter as this Fion, I ſhould never have diſputed with any nation. But the bard himſelf, in the poem, from which the above quotation is taken, cedes him to Scotland.

FION O ALBIN, fiol nan laoich.
FION from ALBION, race of heroes!

Were it allowable to contradict the authority of a bard, at this diſtance of time, I ſhould have given as my opinion, that that this enormous Fion was of the race of the Hibernian giants, of Ruanus, or ſome other celebrated name, rather than a native of Caledonia, whoſe inhabitants, now at leaſt, are not remarkable for their ſtature.

If Fion was ſo remarkable for his ſtature, his heroes had alſo other extraordinary properties. In weight all the ſons of ſtrangers yielded to the celebrated Ton-ioſal; and for hardneſs of ſkull, and, perhaps, for thickneſs too, the valiant Oſcar ſtood unrivalled and alone. Oſſian himſelf had many ſingular and leſs delicate qualifications, than playing on the harp; and the brave Cuchullin was of ſo diminutive a ſize, as to be taken for a child of two years of age, by the gigantic Swaran. To illuſtrate this ſubject, I ſhall here lay before the reader, the hiſtory of ſome of the Iriſh poems, concerning Fion Mac Comnal. A tranſlation of theſe pieces, if well executed, might afford ſatisfaction to the public. But this ought to be the work of a native of Ireland. To draw forth, from obſcurity, the poems of my own country, has afforded ample employment to me; beſides, I am too diffident of my own abilities, to undertake ſuch a work. A gentleman in Dublin accuſed me to the public of committing blunders and abſurdities, in tranſlating the language of my own country, and that before any tranſlation of mine appeared *. How the gentleman came to

"Speedily will be publiſhed, by a gentleman of this kingdom, who hath been, for ſome time paſt, employed in tranſlating and writing Hiſtorical Notes to

FINGAL: A POEM.

Originally wrote in the Iriſh or Erſe language. In the preface ſee my blunders before I committed them, is not eaſy to determine; if it did not conclude, that, as a Scotſman, and, of courſe deſcended of the Mileſian race, I might have committed ſome of thoſe overſights, which perhaps very unjuſtly, are ſaid to be peculiar to them.

From the whole tenor of the Iriſh poems, concerning the Fiona, it appears, that Fion Mac Comnal flouriſhed in the reign of Cormac, which is placed by the univerſal conſent of the ſenachies, in the third century. They even fix the death of Fingal in the year 286, yet his ſon Oſſian is made cotemporary with St Patrick, who preached the goſpel in Ireland about the middle of the fifth age. Oſſian, though, at that time, he muſt have been two hundred and fifty years of age, had a daughter young enough to become wife to the ſaint. On account of this family connection, Patrick of the Pſalms, for ſo the apoſtle of Ireland is emphatically called in the poems; took great delight in the company of Oſſian, and in hearing the great actions of his family. The ſaint ſometimes threw off the auſterity of his profeſſion, drunk freely, and had his ſoul properly warmed with wine, in order to hear, with becoming enthuſiaſm, the poems of his father-in-law. One of the poems begins with this piece of uſeful information.

face to which, the tranſlator, who is a perfect maſter of the Iriſh tongue, will give an account of the manners and cuſtoms of the ancient Iriſh or Scots: and, therefore, moſt humbly entreats the public, to wait for his edition, which will appear in a ſhort time, as he will ſet forth all the blunders and abſurdities in the edition now printing in London, and ſhew the ignorance of the Engliſh tranſlator, in his knowledge of Iriſh grammar, not underſtanding any part of that accidence."

Lo don rabh PADRIC na mhur,
Gun Sailm air uidh, ach a gol,
Ghluais e thigh Oſſian mhic Fhion,
O ſan leis bu bhinn a ghloir.

The title of this poem is Teantach mor na Fiona. It appears to have been founded on the ſame ſtory with the battle of Lora, one of the poems of the genuine Oſſian. The circumſtances and cataſtrophe in both are much the ſame; but the Iriſh Oſſian diſcovers the age in which he lived, by an unlucky anachroniſm. After deſcribing the total route of Erragon, he very gravely concludes with this remarkable anecdote, "that none of the foe eſcaped, but a few, who were allowed to go on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land." This circumſtance fixes the date of the compoſition of the piece ſome centuries after the famous croiſade; for, it is evident, that the poet thought the time of the croiſade ſo ancient, that he confounds it with the age of Fingal. Erragon, in the courſe of this poem, is often called,

Roigh Lochlin an do ſhloigh,
King of Denmark of two nations, which alludes to the union of the kingdoms of Norway and Denmark, a circumſtance which brings down the date of the piece to an æra, not far remote. Modern, however, as this pretended Oſſian was, it is certain, he lived before the Iriſh had dreamed of appropriating Fion or Fingal, to themſelves. He concludes the poem, with this reflection.

Na fagha ſe comhthrom nan n' arm,
Erragon Mac Annir nan lann glas
'San n'ALBIN ni n' abairtair Triath Agus ghlaoite an n' Fhiona as.

"Had Erragon, ſon of Annir of gleaming ſwords, avoided the equal conteſt of arms, (ſingle combat) no chief ſhould have afterwards been numbered in ALBION, and the heroes of Fion ſhould no more be named."

The next poem that falls under our obſervation is Cath-cabhra, or, The Death of Oſcar. This piece is founded on the ſame ſtory which we have in the firſt book of Temora. So little thought the author of Cath-cabhra of making Oſcar his countryman, that, in the courſe of two hundred lines, of which the poems conſiſts, he put the following expreſſion thrice in the mouth of the hero:

ALBION an ſa d' roina m'arch.—
ALBION where I was born and bred.

The poem contains almoſt all the incidents in the firſt book of Temora. In one circumſtance the bard differs materially from Oſſian. Oſcar, after he was mortally wounded by Cairbar, was carried by his people to a neighbouring hill, which commanded a proſpect of the ſea. A fleet appeared at a diſtance, and the hero exclaims with joy,

Loingeas mo ſhean-athair at' an
'S iad a tiachd le cabhair chugain,
O ALBIN na n' ioma ſtuagh.

"It is the fleet of my grandfather, coming with aid to our field, from ALBION of many waves!" The teſtimony of this bard is ſufficient to confute the idle fictions of Keating and O'Flaherty; for, though he is far from being ancient, it is probable, he flouriſhed a full century before theſe hiſtorians. He appears, however, to have been a much better Chriſtian than chronologer; for Fion, though he is placed two centuries before St Patrick, very devoutly recommends the ſoul of his grandſon to his Redeemer.

Duan a Gharibh Mac-Starn is another Iriſh poem in high repute. The grandeur of its images, and its propriety of ſentiment, might have induced me to give a tranſlation of it, had not I ſome expectations of ſeeing it in the collection of the Iriſh Offian's poems, promiſed more than a year ſince, to the public. The author deſcends ſometimes from the region of the ſublime to low and indecent deſcription; the laſt of which, the Iriſh tranſlator, no doubt, will chooſe to leave in the obſcurity of the original. In this piece Cuchullin is uſed with very little ceremony, for he is oft called the Dog of Tara, in the county of Meath. This ſevere title of the redoubtable Cuchullin, the moſt renowned of Iriſh champions, proceeded from the poet's ignorance of etymology. Cu, voice, or commander, ſignifies alſo a dog. The poet choſe the laſt, as the moſt noble appellation for his hero.

The ſubject of the poem is the ſame with that of the epic poem of Fingal. Garibh Mac-Starn is the ſame with Offian's Swaran, the ſon of Starno. His ſingle combats with, and his victory over all the heroes of Ireland, excepting the celebrated dog of Tara, i. e. Cuchullin, afford matter for two hundred lines of tolerable poetry. Garibh's progreſs in ſearch of Cuchullin, and his intrigue with the gigantic Emir-bragal, that hero's wife, enables the poet to extend his piece to four hundred lines. This author, it is true, makes Cuchullin a native of Ireland; the gigantic Emir-bragal he calls the guiding ſtar of the women of Ireland. The property of this enormous lady I ſhall not diſpute with him, or any other. But as he ſpeaks with great tenderneſs of the daughters of the convent, and throws out ſome hints againſt the Engliſh nation, it is probable he lived in too modern a period to be intimately acquainted with the genealogy of Cuchullin.

Another Iriſh Offian, for there were many, as appears from their difference in language and ſentiment, ſpeaks very dogmatically of Fion Mac Comnal, as an Iriſhman. Little can be ſaid for the judgment of this poet, and leſs for his delicacy of ſentiment. The hiſtory of one of his epiſodes, fodes may, at once, ſtand as a ſpecimen of his want of both. Ireland, in the days of Fion, happened to be threatened with an invaſion, by three great potentates, the kings of Lochlin, Sweden, and France. It is needleſs to inſiſt upon the impropriety of a French invaſion of Ireland; it is ſufficient for me to be faithful in the language of my author. Fion, upon receiving intelligence of the intended invaſion, ſent Ca-olt, Oſſian, and Oſcar, to watch the bay, in which, it was apprehended, the enemy was to land. Oſcar was the worſt choice of a ſcout that could be made, for, brave as he was, he had the bad property of falling very oft aſleep on his poſt, nor was it poſſible to awake him, without cutting off one of his fingers, or daſhing a large ſtone againſt his head. When the enemy appeared, Oſcar, very unfortunately, was aſleep. Oſſian and Ca-olt conſulted about the method of wakening him, and they, at laſt, fixed on the ſtone, as the leſs dangerous expedient.

Gun thog Caoilte a chlach, nach gan,
Agus a n' aighai' chiean gun bhuail;
Tri mil an tulloch gun chri', &c.

"Ca-olt took up a heavy ſtone, and ſtruck it againſt the hero's head. The hill ſhook for three miles, as the ſtone rebounded and rolled away." Oſcar roſe in wrath, and his father gravely deſired him to ſpend his rage on his enemies, which he did to ſo good purpoſe, that he ſingly routed a whole wing of their army. The confederate kings advanced, notwithſtanding, till they came to a narrow paſs, poſſeſſed by the celebrated Ton-ioſal. This name is very ſignificant of the ſingular property of the hero who bore it. Ton-ioſal, though brave, was ſo heavy and unweildy, that, when he ſat down, it took the whole force of an hundred men to ſet him upright on his feet again. Luckily for the preſervation of Ireland, the hero happened to be ſtanding when

when the enemy appeared, and he gave ſo good an account of them, that Fion, upon his arrival, found little to do, but to divide the ſpoil among his ſoldiers.

All theſe extraordinary heroes, Fion, Oſſian, Oſcar, and Ca-olt, ſays the poet, were Siol ERIN na gorm lann.

The ſons of ERIN of blue ſteel.

Neither ſhall I much diſpute the matter with him: He has my conſent alſo to appropriate to Ireland the celebrated Ton-ioſal. I ſhall only ſay, that they are different perſons from thoſe of the ſame name, in the Scots poems; and that, though the ſtupenduous valour of the firſt is ſo remarkable, they have not been equally lucky with the latter, in their poet. It is extraordinary, that Fion, who lived ſome ages before St Patrick, ſwears like a very good Chriſtian.

Air an Dia do chum gach caſe.

By God, who ſhaped every caſe.

It is worthy of being remarked, that, in the line quoted, Oſſian, who lived in St Patrick's days, ſeems to have underſtood ſomething of the Engliſh, a language not then ſubſiſting. A perſon, more ſanguine for the honour of his country than I am, might argue, from this circumſtance, that this pretendedly Iriſh Oſſian was a native of Scotland; for my countrymen are univerſally allowed to have an excluſive right to the ſecond-ſight.

From the inſtances given, the reader may form a complete idea of the Iriſh compoſitions concerning the Fiona. The greateſt part of them make the heroes of Fion.

Siol ALBIN a n'nioma caoile.

The race of ALBION of many firths.

The reſt make them natives of Ireland. But, the truth is, that their authority is of little conſequence on either ſide. From the inſtances I have given, they appear to have been the work of a very modern period. The pious ejaculations they contain, their alluſions to the manners of the times, fix them to the fifteenth century. Had even the authors of theſe pieces avoided all alluſions to their own times, it is impoſſible that the poems could paſs for ancient, in the eyes of any perſon tolerably converſant with the Iriſh tongue. The idiom is ſo corrupted and ſo many words borrowed from the Engliſh, that that language muſt have made conſiderable progreſs in Ireland before the poems were written.

It remains now to ſhew, how the Iriſh bards began to appropriate Oſſian and his heroes to their own country. After the Engliſh conqueſt, many of the natives of Ireland, averſe to a foreign yoke, either actually were in a ſtate of hoſtility with the conquerors, or at leaſt, paid little regard to their government. The Scots, in thoſe ages, were often in open war, and never in cordial friendſhip with the Engliſh. The ſimilarity of manners and language, the traditions concerning their common origin, and above all, their having to do with the ſame enemy, created a free and friendly intercourſe between the Scottiſh and Iriſh nations. As the cuſtom of retaining bards and ſenachies was common to both; ſo each, no doubt, had formed a ſyſtem of hiſtory, it matters not how much ſoever fabulous, concerning their reſpective origin. It was the natural policy of the times, to reconcile the traditions of both nations together, and, if poſſible, to deduce them from the ſame original ſtock.

The Saxon manners and language had, at that time, made great progreſs in the ſouth of Scotland. The ancient language, and the traditional hiſtory of the nation, became confined entirely to the inhabitants of the Highlands, then fallen, from ſeveral concurring circumſtances, into the laſt degree of ignorance and barbariſm. The Iriſh, who, for ſome ages before the conqueſt, had poſſeſſed a competent ſhare of that kind of learning, which then prevailed in Europe, found it no difficult matter to impoſe their own fictions on the ignorant Highland ſenachies, by flattering the vanity of the Highlanders, with their long liſt of Heremonian kings and heroes; they, without contradiction, aſſumed to themſelves the character of being the mother-nation of the Scots of Britain. At this time, certainly, was eſtabliſhed that Hibernian ſyſtem of the original of the Scots, which afterwards, for want of any other, was univerſally received. The Scots of the low-country, who, by loſing the language of their anceſtors, loſt, together with it, their national traditions, received, implicitly, the hiſtory of their country, from Iriſh refugees, or from Highland ſenachies, perſuaded over into the Hibernian ſyſtem.

Theſe circumſtances, are far from being ideal. We have remaining many particular traditions, which bear teſtimony to a fact, of itſelf abundantly probable. What makes the matter inconteſtible is, that the ancient traditional accounts of the genuine origin of the Scots, have been handed down without interruption. Though a few ignorant ſenachies might be perſuaded out of their own opinion, by the ſmoothneſs of an Iriſh tale, it was impoſſible to eradicate, from among the bulk of the people, their own national traditions. Theſe traditions afterwards ſo much prevailed, that the Highlanders continue totally unacquainted with the pretended Hibernian extract of the Scots nation. Ignorant chronicle writers, ſtrangers to the ancient language of their country, preſerved only from falling to the ground, ſo improbable a ſtory.

It was, during the period I have mentioned, that the Iriſh became acquainted with, and carried into their country, the compoſitions of Oſſian. The ſcene of many of the pieces being in Ireland, ſuggeſted firſt to them a hint, of making both heroes and poet natives of that iſland. In order to do this effectually, they found it neceſſary to reject the genuine poems, as every line was pregnant with proofs of their Scottiſh original, and to dreſs up a fable, on the ſame ſubject, in their own language. So ill qualified, however, were their bards to effectuate this change, that amidſt all their deſires to make the Fiona Iriſhmen, they every now and then called them Siol Albin. It was, probably, after a ſucceſſion of ſome generations, that the bards had effrontery enough to eſtabliſh an Iriſh genealogy for Fion, and deduce him from the Mileſian race of kings. In ſome of the oldeſt Iriſh poems, on the ſubject, the great-grandfather of Fion is made a Scandinavian; and his heroes are often called SIOL LOCHLIN NA BEUM; i. e. the race of Lochlin of wounds. The only poem that runs up the family of Fion to Nuades Niveus, king of Ireland, is evidently not above a hundred and fifty years old; for, if I miſtake not, it mentions the Earl of Tyrone, ſo famous in Elizabeth's time.

This ſubject, perhaps, is purſued further than it deſerves; but a diſcuſſion of the pretenſions of Ireland to Oſſian, was become in ſome meaſure neceſſary. If the Iriſh poems, concerning the Fiona, ſhould appear ridiculous, it is but juſtice to obſerve, that they are ſcarcely more ſo than the poems of other nations, at that period. On other ſubjects, the bards of Ireland have diſplayed a genius worthy of any age or nation. It was, alone, in matters of antiquity, that they were monſtrous in their fables. Their love-ſonnets, and their elegies on the death of perſons worthy or renowned, abound with ſuch beautiful ſimplicity of ſentiment, and wild harmony of numbers, that they become more than an atonement for their errors, in every other ſpecies of poetry. But the beauty of theſe pieces, depend ſo much on a certain curioſa felicitas of expreſſion in the original, that they muſt appear much to diſadvantage in another language.

ON THE

POEMS OF OSSIAN,

THE

SON OF FINGAL.

BY HUGH BLAIR, D. D.

ONE OF THE MINISTERS OF THE HIGH-CHURCH, AND PROFESSOR OF RHETORIC AND BELLES-LETTERS IN THE UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH.

AMONG the monuments remaining of the ancient ſtate of nations, few are more valuable than their poems or ſongs. Hiſtory, when it treats of remote and dark ages, is ſeldom very inſtructive. The beginnings of ſociety, in every country, are involved in fabulous confuſion; and though they were not, they would furniſh few events worth recording. But, in every period of ſociety, human manners are a curious ſpectacle; and the moſt natural pictures of ancient manners are exhibited in the ancient poems of nations. Theſe preſent to us, what is much more valuable than the hiſtory of ſuch tranſactions as a rude age can afford, The hiſtory of human imagination and paſſion. They make us acquainted with the notions and feelings of our fellow-creatures in the moſt artleſs ages; diſcovering what objects they admired, and what pleaſures they purſued, before thoſe refinements of ſociety had taken place, which enlarge indeed, and diverſify the tranſactions, but diſguiſe the manners of mankind.

Beſides this merit, which ancient poems have with philoſophical obſervers of human nature, they have another with perſons of taſte. They promiſe ſome of the higheſt beauties of poetical writing. Irregular and unpoliſhed we may expect the productions of uncultivated ages to be; but abounding, at the ſame time, with that enthuſiaſm, that vehemence and fire, which are the ſoul of poetry. For many circumſtances of thoſe times which we call barbarous, are favourable to the poetical ſpirit. That ſtate, in which human nature ſhoots wild and free, though unfit for other improvements, certainly encourages the high exertions of fancy and paſſion.

In the infancy of ſocieties, men live ſcattered and diſperſed, in the midſt of ſolitary rural ſcenes, where the beauties of nature are their chief entertainment. They meet with many objects, to them new and ſtrange; their wonder and ſurpriſe are frequently excited; and by the ſudden changes of fortune occurring in their unſettled ſtate of life, their paſſions are raiſed to the utmoſt. Their paſſions have nothing to reſtrain them: their imagination has nothing to check it. They diſplay themſelves to one another without diſguiſe: and converſe and act in the uncovered ſimplicity of nature. As their feelings are ſtrong, ſo their language, of itſelf, aſſumes a poetical turn. Prone to exaggerate, they deſcribe every thing in the ſtrongeſt colours; which of courſe renders their ſpeech pictureſque and figurative. Figurative language owes its riſe chiefly to two cauſes; to the want of proper names for objects, and to the influence of imagination and paſſion over the form of expreſſion. Both theſe cauſes concur in the infancy of ſociety.

ciety. Figures are commonly conſidered as artificial modes of ſpeech, deviſed by orators and poets, after the world had advanced to a refined ſtate. The contrary of this is the truth. Men never have uſed ſo many figures of ſtyle, as in thoſe rude ages, when, beſides the power of a warm imagination to ſuggeſt lively images, the want of proper and preciſe terms for the ideas they would expreſs, obliged them to have recourſe to circumlocution, metaphor, compariſon, and all thoſe ſubſtituted forms of expreſſion, which give a poetical air to language. An American chief, at this day, harangues at the head of his tribe, in a more bold metaphorical ſtyle, than a modern European would adventure to uſe in an epic poem.

In the progreſs of ſociety, the genius and manners of men undergo a change more favourable to accuracy than to ſprightlineſs and ſublimity. As the world advances, the underſtanding gains ground upon the imagination; the underſtanding is more exerciſed; the imagination leſs. Fewer objects occur that are new or ſurpriſing. Men apply themſelves to trace the cauſes of things; they correct and refine one another; they ſubdue or diſguiſe their paſſions; they form their exterior manners upon one uniform ſtandard of politeneſs and civility. Human nature is pruned according to method and rule. Language advances from ſterility to copiouſneſs, and at the ſame time, from fervour and enthuſiaſm, to correctneſs and preciſion. Style becomes more chaſte; but leſs animated. The progreſs of the world in this reſpect reſembles the progreſs of age in man. The powers of imagination are moſt vigorous and predominant in youth; thoſe of the underſtanding ripen more ſlowly, and often attain not their maturity, till the imagination begin to flag. Hence, poetry, which is the child of imagination, is frequently moſt glowing and animated in the firſt ages of ſociety. As the ideas of our youth are remembered with a peculiar pleaſure on account of their livelineſs and vivacity; ſo the moſt ancient poems have often proved the greateſt favourites of nations.

Poetry has been ſaid to be more ancient than proſe: and however paradoxical ſuch an aſſertion may ſeem, yet, in a qualified ſenſe it is true. Men certainly never converſed with one another in regular numbers; but even their ordinary language would, in ancient times, for the reaſons before aſſigned, approach to a poetical ſtyle; and the firſt compoſitions tranſmitted to poſterity, beyond doubt, were, in a literal ſenſe, poems; that is, compoſitions in which imagination had the chief hand, formed into ſome kind of numbers, and pronounced with a muſical modulation or tone. Muſic or ſong has been found coæval with ſociety among the moſt barbarous nations. The only ſubjects which could prompt men, in their firſt rude ſtate, to utter their thoughts in compoſitions of any length, were ſuch as naturally aſſumed the tone of poetry; praiſes of their gods or of their anceſtors; commemorations of their own warlike exploits; or lamentations over their misfortunes. And before writing was invented, no other compoſitions, except ſongs or poems, could take ſuch hold of the imagination and memory, as to be preſerved by oral tradition, and handed down from one race to another.

Hence we may expect to find poems among the antiquities of all nations. It is probable too, that an extenſive ſearch would diſcover a certain degree of reſemblance among all the moſt ancient poetical productions, from whatever country they have proceeded. In a ſimilar ſtate of manners, ſimilar objects and paſſions operating upon the imaginations of men, will ſtamp their productions with the ſame general character. Some diverſity will, no doubt, be occaſioned occaſioned by climate and genius. But mankind never bear ſuch reſembling features, as they do in the beginnings of ſociety. Its ſubſequent revolutions give riſe to the principal diſtinctions among nations; and divert, into channels widely ſeparated, that current of human genius and manners, which deſcends originally from one ſpring. What we have been long accuſtomed to call the oriental vein of poetry, becauſe ſome of the earlieſt poetical productions have come to us from the Eaſt, is probably no more oriental than accidental; it is characteriſtical of an age rather than a country; and belongs, in ſome meaſure, to all nations at a certain period. Of this the works of Oſſian ſeem to furniſh a remarkable proof.

Our preſent ſubject leads us to inveſtigate the ancient poetical remains, not ſo much of the Eaſt, or of the Greeks and Romans, as of the Northern nations; in order to diſcover whether the Gothic poetry has any reſemblance to the Celtic or Gaïic, which we are about to conſider. Though the Goths, under which name we uſually comprehend all the Scandinavian tribes, were a people altogether fierce and martial, and noted, to a proverb, for their ignorance of the liberal arts, yet they too, from the earlieſt times, had their poets and their ſongs. Their poets were diſtinguiſhed by the title of Scalders, and their ſongs were termed Vyſes *. Saxo Grammaticus, a Daniſh hiſtorian of

* Olaus Wormius, in the Appendix to his Treatiſe de Literatura Runica, has given a particular account of the Gothic poetry, commonly called Runic, from Runes, which ſignifies the Gothic letters. He informs us that there were no fewer than one hundred and thirty-ſix different kinds of meaſure or verſe uſed in their Vyſes; and though we are accuſtomed to call rhyme a Gothic invention, he ſays expreſsly, that among all theſe meaſures, rhymes, or correſpondence of final ſyllables, was never employed. He analyſes the ſtructure of one of theſe kinds of verſe, that in which the of conſiderable note, who flouriſhed in the thirteenth century, informs us that very many of theſe ſongs, containing the ancient traditionary ſtories of the country, were found engraven upon rocks in the old Runic character; ſeveral of which he has tranſlated into Latin, and inſerted into his hiſtory. But his verſions are plainly ſo paraphraſtical, and forced into ſuch an imitation of the ſtyle and the meaſures of the poem of Lodbrog, afterwards quoted, is written; which exhibits a very ſingular ſpecies of harmony, if it can be allowed that name, depending neither upon rhyme nor upon metrical feet, or quantity of ſyllables, but chiefly upon the number of the ſyllables, and the diſpoſition of the letters. In every ſtanza was an equal number of lines; in every line ſix ſyllables. In each diſtich, it was requiſite that three words ſhould begin with the ſame letter; two of the correſponding words placed in the firſt line of the diſtich, the third, in the ſecond line. In each line were alſo required two ſyllables, but never the final ones formed either of the ſame conſonants, or ſame vowels. As an example of this meaſure, Olaus gives us theſe two Latin lines conſtructed exactly according to the above rules of Runic verſe:

Chriſtus caput noſtrum
Coronet te bonis.

The initial letters of Chriſtus, Caput and Coronet, make the three correſponding letters of the diſtich. In the firſt line, the firſt ſyllables of Chriſtus and of noſtrum; in the ſecond line, the on in coronet and in bonis make the requiſite correſpondence of ſyllables. Frequent inverſions and tranſpoſitions were permitted in this poetry; which would naturally follow from ſuch laborious attention to the collocation of words.

The curious on this ſubject may conſult likewiſe Dr Hicks's Theſaurus Linguarum Septentrionalium; particularly the 23d chapter of his Grammatica Anglo Saxonica et Mæſo Gothica; where they will find a full account of the ſtructure of the Anglo-Saxon verſe, which nearly reſembled the Gothic. They will find alſo ſome ſpecimens both of Gothic and Saxon poetry. An extract, which Dr Hicks has given from the work of one of the Daniſh Scalders, intitled, Hervarer Saga, containing an evocation from the dead, may be found in the 6th volume of Miſcellany Poems, publiſhed by Mr Dryden.

of the Roman poets, that one can form no judgment from them of the native ſpirit of the original. A more curious monument of the true Gothic poetry is preſerved by Olaus Wormius in his book de Literatura Runica. It is an Epicedium, or funeral ſong, compoſed by Regner Lodbrog; and tranſlated by Olaus, word for word, from the original. This Lodbrog was a king of Denmark, who lived in the eighth century, famous for his wars and victories; and at the ſame time an eminent Scalder or poet. It was his misfortune to fall at laſt into the hands of one of his enemies, by whom he was thrown into priſon, and condemned to be deſtroyed by ſerpents. In this ſituation he ſolaced himſelf with rehearſing all the exploits of his life. The poem is divided into twenty-nine ſtanzas, of ten lines each; and every ſtanza begins with theſe words, Pugnavimus Enſibus, "We have fought with our ſwords." Olaus's verſion is in many places ſo obſcure as to be hardly intelligible. I have ſubjoined the whole below, exactly as he has publiſhed it, and ſhall tranſlate as much as may give the Engliſh reader an idea of the ſpirit and ſtrain of this kind of poetry *.

plentifully we feaſted the eagle in that ſlaughter. The warm ſtream of wounds ran into the ocean. The army fell before us. When we ſteered our ſhips into the mouth of the Viſtula, we ſent the Helſingians to the hall of Odion. Then did the ſword bite. The waters were all one wound. The earth was dyed red with the warm ſtream. The ſword rung upon the coats of mail, and clove the bucklers in twain. None fled on that day, till among his ſhips Heraudus fell. Than him no braver baron cleaves the ſea with ſhips; a chearful heart did he ever bring to the combat. Then the hoſt threw away their ſhields, when the uplifted ſpear flew at the breaſts of heroes. The ſword bit the Scarfian rocks; bloody was the ſhield in battle, until Rafno the king was ſlain. From the heads of warriors the warm ſweat ſtreamed down their armour. The crows around the Indirian iſlands had ample prey. It were difficult to ſingle out one among ſo many deaths. At the riſing of the ſun I beheld the ſpears piercing the bodies of foes, and the bows throwing forth their ſteel-pointed arrows. Loud roared the ſwords in the plains of Lano. The virgin long bewailed the ſlaughter of that morning." In this ſtrain the poet continues to deſcribe ſeveral other military exploits. The images are not much varied; the noiſe of arms, the ſtreaming of blood, and the feaſting the birds of prey, often recurring. He mentions the death of two of his ſons in battle; and the lamentation he deſcribes as made for one of them is very ſingular. A Grecian or Roman poet would have introduced the virgins or nymphs of the wood, bewailing the untimely fall of a young hero. But, ſays our Gothic poet, " when Rogvaldus was ſlain, for him mourned all the hawks of of heaven," as lamenting a benefactor who had ſo liberally ſupplied them with prey; "for boldly," as he adds, "in the ſtrife of ſwords, did the breaker of helmets throw the ſpear of blood."

The poem concludes with ſentiments of the higheſt bravery and contempt of death. "What is more certain to the brave man than death, though amidſt the ſtorm of ſwords, he ſtands always ready to oppoſe it? He only regrets this life who hath never known diſtreſs. The timorous man allures the devouring eagle to the field of battle. The coward, wherever he comes, is uſeleſs to himſelf. This I eſteem honourable, that the youth ſhould advance to the combat fairly matched one againſt another; nor man retreat from man. Long was this the warrior's higheſt glory. He who aſpires to the love of virgins, ought always to be foremoſt in the roar of arms. It appears to me of truth, that we are led by the fates. Seldom can any overcome the appointment of deſtiny. Little did I foreſee that Ella * was to have my life in his hands, in that day when fainting I concealed my blood, and puſhed forth my ſhips into the waves; after we had ſpread a repaſt for the beaſts of prey throughout the Scottiſh bays. But this makes me always rejoice that in the halls of our father Balder (or Odin) I know there are ſeats prepared, where, in a ſhort time, we ſhall be drinking ale out of the hollow ſkulls of our enemies. In the houſe of the mighty Odin, no brave men lament death. I come not with the voice of deſpair to Odin's hall. How eagerly would all the ſons of Aſlauga now ruſh to war, did they know the diſtreſs of their father, whom a multitude of venomous ſerpents tear? I have given to my children a mother who hath filled their hearts with valour.

valour. I am faſt approaching to my end. A cruel death awaits me from the viper's bite. A ſnake dwells in the midſt of my heart. I hope that the ſword of ſome of my ſons ſhall yet be ſtained with the blood of Ella. The valiant youths will wax red with anger, and will not ſit in peace. Fifty and one times have I reared the ſtandard in battle. In my youth I learned to dye the ſword in blood; my hope was then, that no king among men would be more renowned than me. The goddeſſes of death will now ſoon call me; I muſt not mourn my death. Now I end my ſong. The goddeſſes invite me away; they whom Odin has ſent to me from his hall. I will ſit upon a lofty ſeat, and drink ale joyfully with the goddeſſes of death. The hours of my life are run out. I will ſmile when I die."

This is ſuch poetry as we might expect from a barbarous nation. It breathes a moſt ferocious ſpirit. It is wild, harſh, and irregular; but at the ſame time animated and ſtrong; the ſtyle, in the original, full of inverſions, and, as we learn from ſome of Olaus's notes, highly metaphorical and figured.

But when we open the works of Oſſian, a very different ſcene preſents itſelf. There we find the fire and enthuſiaſm of the moſt early times, combined with an amazing degree of regularity and art. We find tenderneſs, and even delicacy of ſentiment, greatly predominant over fierceneſs and barbarity. Our hearts are melted with the ſofteſt feelings, and at the ſame time elevated with the higheſt ideas of magnanimity, generoſity, and true heroiſm. When we turn from the poetry of Lodbrog to that of Oſſian it is like paſſing from a ſavage deſart, into a fertile and cultivated country. How is this to be accounted for? Or by what means to be reconciled with the remote antiquity attributed to theſe poems? This is a curious point; and requires to be illuſtrated.

That the ancient Scots were of Celtic original, is paſt all doubt. Their conformity with the Celtic nations in language, manners, and religion, proves it to a full demonſtration. The Celtæ, a great and mighty people, altogether diſtinct from the Goths and Teutones, once extended their dominion over all the weſt of Europe; but ſeem to have had their moſt full and complete eſtabliſhment in Gaul. Wherever the Celtæ or Gauls are mentioned by ancient writers, we ſeldom fail to hear of their Druids and their Bards; the inſtitution of which two orders, was the capital diſtinction of their manners and policy. The Druids were their philoſophers and prieſts; the Bards, their poets and recorders of heroic actions: And both theſe orders of men, ſeem to have ſubſiſted among them, as chief members of the ſtate from time immemorial *. We muſt not therefore imagine the Celtæ to have been altogether a groſs and rude nation. They poſſeſſed from very remote ages a formed ſyſtem of diſcipline and manners, which appears to have had a deep and laſting influence. Ammianus Marcellinus gives them this expreſs teſtimony, that there flouriſhed among them the ſtudy of the moſt laudable arts; introduced by the Bards, whoſe office it was to ſing in heroic verſe, the gallant actions of illuſtrious men; and by the Druids,

* There are three tribes who are reſpected in different degrees, viz. the Bards, the Prieſts, and the Druids. The Bards are the poets, and thoſe who record the actions of their heroes. Strabo, B. IV.

There are likewiſe among them the compoſers of poems, whom they call Bards; and theſe, with inſtruments like the lyre, celebrate the praiſes of ſome, and rail againſt others. Diod. Sicul. B. V.

And thoſe who are called Bards, are their oracles, and theſe bards are poets who ſing praiſes in odes. Poſidonius ap. Athenæum, B. VI.

Druids, who lived together in colleges or ſocieties, after the Pythagorian manner, and philoſophiſing upon the higheſt ſubjects, aſſerted the immortality of the human ſoul *. Though Julius Cæſar, in his account of Gaul, does not expreſsly mention the Bards, yet it is plain that under the title of Druids, he comprehends that whole college or order; of which the Bards, who, it is probable, were the diſciples of the Druids, undoubtedly made a part. It deſerves remark, that according to his account, the Druidical inſtitution firſt took riſe in Britain, and paſſed from thence into Gaul; ſo that they who aſpired to be thorough maſters of that learning were wont to reſort to Britain. He adds too, that ſuch as were to be initiated among the Druids, were obliged to commit to their memory a great number of verſes, inſomuch that ſome employed twenty years in this courſe of education; and that they did not think it lawful to record theſe poems in writing, but ſacredly handed them down by tradition from race to race †.

So ſtrong was the attachment of the Celtic nations to their poetry and their bards, that amidſt all the changes of their government and manners, even long after the order of the Druids was extinct, and the national religion altered, the Bards continued to flouriſh; not as a ſet of ſtrolling ſongſters, like the Greek Ἀοιδοὶ or Rhapſodiſts, in Homer's time, but as an order of men highly reſpected in the ſtate, and ſupported by a public eſtabliſhment. We find them, according to the teſtimonies of Strabo and Diodorus, before the age of Auguſtus Cæſar; and we find them remaining under the ſame name, and exerciſing the ſame functions as of old, in Ireland, and in the north of Scotland, almoſt down to our own times. It is well known that in both theſe countries, every Regulus or chief had his own bard, who was conſidered as an officer of rank in his court; and had lands aſſigned him, which deſcended to his family. Of the honour in which the bards were held, many inſtances occur in Oſſian's poems. On all important occaſions, they were the ambaſſadors between contending chiefs; and their perſons were held ſacred. "Cairbar feared to ſtretch his ſword to the bards, though his ſoul was dark. Looſe the bards, ſaid his brother Cathmor, they are the ſons of other times. Their voice ſhall be heared in other ages, when the kings of Temora have failed."

From all this, the Celtic tribes clearly appear to have been addicted in ſo high a degree to poetry, and to have made it ſo much their ſtudy from the earlieſt times, as may remove our wonder at meeting with a vein of higher poetical refinement among them, than was at firſt ſight to have been expected among nations, whom we are accuſtomed to call barbarous. Barbarity, I muſt obſerve, is a very equivocal term; it admits of many different forms and degrees; and though, in all of them, it excludes poliſhed manners, it is, however, not inconſiſtent with generous ſentiments and tender affections *. What degrees of friendſhip, love, and and heroiſm, may poſſibly be found to prevail in a rude ſtate of ſociety, no one can ſay. Aſtoniſhing inſtances of them we know, from hiſtory, have ſometimes appeared: and a few characters diſtinguiſhed by thoſe high qualities, might lay a foundation for a ſet of manners being introduced into the ſongs of the bards, more refined, it is probable, and exalted, according to the uſual poetical licence, than the real manners of the country. In particular, with reſpect to heroiſm; the great employment of the Celtic bards, was to delineate the characters, and ſing the praiſes of heroes. So Lucan:

which Scheffer has given us in his Lapponia, are a proof that natural tenderneſs of ſentiment may be found in a country, into which the leaſt glimmering of ſcience has never penetrated. To moſt Engliſh readers theſe ſongs are well known by the elegant tranſlations of them in the Spectator, N° 366 and 406. I ſhall ſubjoin Scheffer's Latin verſion of one of them, which has the appearance of being ſtrictly literal.

Now when we conſider a college or order of men, who, cultivating poetry throughout a long ſeries of ages, had their imaginations continually employed on the ideas of heroiſm; who had all the poems and panegyrics, which were compoſed by their predeceſſors, handed down to them with care; who rivalled and endeavoured to outſtrip thoſe who had gone before them, each in the celebration of his particular hero; is it not natural to think, that at length the character of a hero would appear in their ſongs with the higheſt luſtre, and be adorned with qualities truly noble? Some of the qualities indeed which diſtinguiſh a Fingal, moderation, humanity, and clemency, would not probably be the firſt ideas of heroiſm occuring to a barbarous people: But no ſooner had ſuch ideas begun to dawn on the minds of poets, than, as the human mind eaſily opens to the native repreſentations of human perfection, they would be ſeized and embraced; they would enter into their panegyrics; they would afford materials for ſucceeding bards to work upon, and improve; they would contribute not a little to exalt the public manners. For ſuch ſongs as theſe, familiar to the Celtic warriors from their childhood, and throughout their whole life, both in war and in peace, their principal entertainment, muſt have had a very conſiderable influence in propagating among them real manners nearly approaching to the poetical; and in forming even ſuch a hero as Fingal. Eſpecially when we conſider that among their limited objects of ambition, among the few advantages which in a ſavage ſtate, man could obtain over man, the chief was Fame, and that immortality which they expected to receive from their virtues and exploits, in the ſongs of bards *.

Having

* When Edward I. conquered Wales, he put to death all the Welch bards. This cruel policy plainly ſhews, how great

Having made theſe remarks on the Celtic poetry and bards in general, I ſhall next conſider the particular advantages which Oſſian poſſeſſed. He appears clearly to have lived in a period which enjoyed all the benefit I juſt now mentioned of traditionary poetry. The exploits of Trathal, Trenmor, and the other anceſtors of Fingal, are ſpoken of as familiarly known. Ancient bards are frequently alluded to. In one remarkable paſſage, Oſſian deſcribes himſelf as living in a ſort of claſſical age, enlightened by the memorials of former times, which were conveyed in the ſongs of bards; and points at a period of darkneſs and ignorance which lay beyond the reach of tradition. "His words," ſays he, "came only by halves to our ears; they were dark as the tales of other times, before the light of the ſong aroſe." Oſſian, himſelf, appears to have been endowed by nature with an exquiſite ſenſibility of heart; prone to that tender melancholy which is ſo often an attendant on great genius; and ſuſceptible equally of ſtrong and of ſoft emotions. He was not only a profeſſed bard, educated with care, as we may eaſily believe, to all the poetical art then known, and connected, as he ſhews us himſelf, in intimate friendſhip with the other contemporary bards, but a warrior alſo; and the ſon of the moſt renowned hero and prince of his age. This formed a conjunction of circumſtances, uncommonly favourable towards exalting the imagination of a poet. He relates expeditions in which he had been engaged; he ſings of battles in which he had fought and overcome; he had beheld the moſt illuſtrious ſcenes which that age could exhibit, both of heroiſm in war, and magnificence in peace. For however rude the magnificence of thoſe great an influence he imagined the ſongs of theſe bards to have over the minds of the people; and of what nature he judged that influence to be. The Welch bards were of the ſame Celtic race with the Scottiſh and Iriſh.

thoſe times may ſeem to us, we muſt remember that all ideas of magnificence are comparative; and that the age of Fingal was an æra of diſtinguiſhed ſplendor in that part of the world. Fingal reigned over a conſiderable territory; he was enriched with the ſpoils of the Roman province; he was ennobled by his victories and great actions; and was in all reſpects a perſonage of much higher dignity than any of the Chieftains, or heads of Clans, who lived in the ſame country, after a more extenſive monarchy was eſtabliſhed.

The manners of Oſſian's age, ſo far as we can gather them from his writings, were abundantly favourable to a poetical genius. The two diſpirited vices, to which Longinus imputes the decline of poetry, covetouſneſs and effeminacy, were as yet unknown. The cares of men were few. They lived a roving indolent life; hunting and war their principal employments; and their chief amuſements, the muſic of bards and "the feaſt of ſhells." The great object purſued by heroic ſpirits, was "to receive their fame," that is to become worthy of being celebrated in the ſongs of bards; and "to have their name on the four gray ſtones." To die, unlamented by a bard, was deemed ſo great a misfortune, as even to diſturb their ghoſts in another ſtate. "They wander in thick miſts beſide the reedy lake; but never ſhall they riſe, without the ſong, to the dwelling of winds." After death, they expected to follow employments of the ſame nature with thoſe which had amuſed them on earth; to fly with their friends on clouds, to purſue airy deer, and to liſten to their praiſe in the mouths of bards. In ſuch times as theſe, in a country where poetry had been ſo long cultivated, and ſo highly honoured, is it any wonder that among the race and ſucceſſion of bards, one Homer ſhould ariſe; a man who, endowed with a natural happy genius, favoured by peculiar advantages of birth and condition, and meeting in the courſe of his life, with a variety of incidents proper to fire his imagination, and to touch his heart, ſhould attain a degree of eminence in poetry, worthy to draw the admiration of more refined ages?

The compoſitions of Oſſian are ſo ſtrongly marked with characters of antiquity, that although there were no external proof to ſupport that antiquity, hardly any reader of judgment and taſte, could heſitate in referring them to a very remote æra. There are four great ſtages through which men ſucceſſively paſs in the progreſs of ſociety. The firſt and earlieſt is the life of hunters; paſturage ſucceeds to this, as the ideas of property begin to take root; next agriculture; and laſtly, commerce. Throughout Oſſian's poems, we plainly find ourſelves in the firſt of theſe periods of ſociety; during which, hunting was the chief employment of men, and the principal method of their procuring ſubſiſtence. Paſturage was not indeed wholly unknown; for we hear of dividing the herd in the caſe of a divorce; but the alluſions to herds and to cattle are not many; and of agriculture we find no traces. No cities appear to have been built in the territories of Fingal. No arts are mentioned except that of navigation and of working in iron.* Every thing preſents to us the moſt ſimple and unimproved improved manners. At their feaſts, the heroes prepared their own repaſt; they ſat round the light of the burning oak; the wind lifted their locks, and whiſtled through their open halls. Whatever was beyond the neceſſaries of life was known to them only as the ſpoil of the Roman province; "the gold of the ſtranger; the lights of the ſtranger; the ſteeds of the ſtranger; the children of the rein."

* Their ſkill in navigation need not at all ſurpriſe us. Living in the weſtern iſlands, along the coaſt, or in a country which is every where interſected with arms of the ſea, one of the firſt objects of their attention, from the earlieſt time, muſt have been how to traverſe the waters. Hence that knowledge of the ſtars, ſo neceſſary for guiding them by night, of which we find ſeveral traces in Oſſian's works; particularly in the beautiful deſcription of Cathmor's ſhield, in the ſeventh book of Temora. Among all the northern maritime nations, navigation was very early ſtudied. Piratical incurſions were the chief means they employed for acquiring booty; and were among the firſt exploits which diſtinguiſhed

This repreſentation of Oſſian's times, muſt ſtrike us the more, as genuine and authentic, when it is compared with a poem of later date, which Mr Macpherſon has preſerved in one of his notes. It is that wherein five bards are repreſented as paſſing the evening in the houſe of a chief, and each of them ſeparately giving his deſcription of the night. The night ſcenery is beautiful; and the author has plainly imitated the ſtyle and manner of Oſſian: But he has allowed ſome images to appear which betray a later period of ſociety. For we meet with windows clapping, the herds of goats and cows ſeeking ſhelter, the ſhepherd wandering, corn on the plain, and the wakeful hind rebuilding the ſhocks of corn which had been overturned by the tempeſt. Whereas, in Oſſian's works, from beginning to end, all is conſiſtent; no modern alluſion drops from him; but every where, the ſame face of rude nature appears; a country wholly uncultivated, thinly inhabited, and recently peopled. The graſs of the rock, the flower of the heath, the thiſtle with diſtinguiſhed them in the world. Even the ſavage Americans were at their firſt diſcovery found to poſſeſs the moſt ſurpriſing ſkill and dexterity in navigating their immenſe lakes and rivers.

The deſcription of Cuchullin's chariot, in the firſt book of Fingal, has been objected to by ſome, as repreſenting greater magnificence than is conſiſtent with the ſuppoſed poverty of that age. But this chariot is plainly only a horſe-litter; and the gems mentioned in the deſcription, are no other than the ſhining ſtones or pebbles, known to be frequently found along the weſtern coaſt of Scotland.

with its beard, are the chief ornaments of his landſcapes "The deſart," ſays Fingal, "is enough to me, with all its woods and deer."

The circle of ideas and tranſactions, is no wider than ſuits ſuch an age: Nor any greater diverſity introduced into characters, than the events of that period would naturally diſplay. Valour and bodily ſtrength are the admired qualities. Contentions ariſe, as is uſual among ſavage nations, from the ſlighteſt cauſes. To be affronted at a tournament, or to be omitted in the invitation to a feaſt, kindles a war. Women are often carried away by force; and the whole tribe, as in the Homeric times, riſe to avenge the wrong. The heroes ſhow refinement of ſentiment, indeed, on ſeveral occaſions, but none of manners. They ſpeak of their paſt actions with freedom, boaſt of their exploits, and ſing their own praiſe. In their battles, it is evident that drums, trumpets, or bagpipes, were not known or uſed. They had no expedient for giving the military alarms but ſtriking a ſhield, or raiſing a loud cry. And hence the loud and terrible voice of Fingal is often mentioned, as a neceſſary qualification of a great general, like the βοην αγαθος Μενελαος of Homer. Of military diſcipline or ſkill, they appear to have been entirely deſtitute. Their armies ſeem not to have been numerous; their battles were diſorderly; and terminated, for the moſt part, by a perſonal combat, or wreſtling of the two chiefs; after which, "the bard ſung the ſong of peace, and the battle ceaſed along the field."

The manner of compoſition bears all the marks of the greateſt antiquity. No artful tranſitions; nor full and extended connection of parts; ſuch as we find among the poets of later times, when order and regularity of compoſition were more ſtudied and known; but a ſtyle always rapid and vehement; in narration conciſe even to abruptneſs, and leaving ſeveral circumſtances to be ſupplied by the reader's imagination. The language has all that figurative caſt, which, as I before ſhewed, partly a glowing and undiſciplined imagination, partly the ſterility of language and the want of proper terms, have always introduced into the early ſpeech of nations; and, in ſeveral reſpects, it carries a remarkable reſemblance to the ſtyle of the Old Teſtament. It deſerves particular notice, as one of the moſt genuine and deciſive characters of antiquity, that very few general terms or abſtract ideas, are to be met with in the whole collection of Oſſian's works. The ideas of men, at firſt, were all particular. They had not words to expreſs general conceptions. Theſe were the conſequence of more profound reflection, and longer acquaintance with the arts of thought and of ſpeech. Oſſian, accordingly, almoſt never expreſſes himſelf in the abſtract. His ideas extended little farther than to the objects he ſaw around him. A public, a community, the univerſe, were conceptions beyond his ſphere. Even a mountain, a ſea, or a lake, which he has occaſion to mention, though only in a ſimile, are for the moſt part particularized; it is the hill of Cromla, the ſtorm of the ſea of Malmor, or the reeds of the lake of Lego. A mode of expreſſion, which, whilſt it is characteriſtical of ancient ages, is at the ſame time highly favourable to deſcriptive poetry. For the ſame reaſons, perſonification is a poetical figure not very common with Oſſian. Inanimate objects ſuch as winds, trees, flowers, he ſometimes perſonifies with great beauty. But the perſonifications which are ſo familiar to later poets of Fame, Time, Terror, Virtue, and the reſt of that claſs, were unknown to our Celtic bard. Theſe were modes of conception too abſtract for his age.

All theſe are marks ſo undoubted, and ſome of them too, ſo nice and delicate, of the moſt early times, as put the high antiquity antiquity of theſe poems out of queſtion. Eſpecially when we conſider, that if there had been any impoſture in this caſe, it muſt have been contrived and executed in the Highlands of Scotland, two or three centuries ago; as, up to this period, both by manuſcripts, and by the teſtimony of a multitude of living witneſſes, concerning the uncontrovertible tradition of theſe poems, they can clearly be traced. Now, this is a period when that country enjoyed no advantages for a compoſition of this kind, which it may not be ſuppoſed to have enjoyed in as great, if not in a greater degree, a thouſand years before. To ſuppoſe that two or three hundred years ago, when we well know the Highlands to have been in a ſtate of groſs ignorance and barbarity, there ſhould have ariſen in that country a poet, of ſuch exquiſite genius, and of ſuch deep knowledge of mankind, and of hiſtory, as to diveſt himſelf of the ideas and manners of his own age, and to give us a juſt and natural picture of a ſtate of ſociety ancienter by a thouſand years; one who could ſupport this counterfeited antiquity through ſuch a large collection of poems, without the leaſt inconſiſtency; and who, poſſeſſed of all this genius and art, had at the ſame time the ſelf-denial of concealing himſelf, and of aſcribing his own works to an antiquated bard, without the impoſture being detected; is a ſuppoſition that tranſcends all bounds of credibility.

There are, beſides, two other circumſtances to be attended to, ſtill of greater weight, if poſſible, againſt this hypotheſis. One is, the total abſence of religious ideas from this work; for which the tranſlator has, in his preface, given a very probable account, on the footing of its being the work of Oſſian. The druidical ſuperſtition was, in the days of Oſſian, on the point of its final extinction; and for particular reaſons, odious to the family of Fingal; whilſt the Chriſ-tian faith was not yet eſtabliſhed. But had it been the work of one, to whom the ideas of Chriſtianity were familiar from his infancy; and who had ſuperadded to them alſo the bigotted ſuperſtition of a dark age and country; it is impoſſible but in ſome paſſage or other, the traces of them would have appeared. The other circumſtance is, the entire ſilence which reigns with reſpect to all the great clans or families, which are now eſtabliſhed in the Highlands. The origin of theſe ſeveral clans is known to be very ancient: And it is as well known, that there is no paſſion by which a native Highlander is more diſtinguiſhed, than by attachment to his clan, and jealouſy for its honour. That a Highland bard, in forging a work relating to the antiquities of his country, ſhould have inſerted no circumſtance which pointed out the riſe of his own clan, which aſcertained its antiquity, or increaſed its glory, is of all ſuppoſitions that can be formed, the moſt improbable; and the ſilence on this head amounts to a demonſtration that the author lived before any of the preſent great clans were formed or known.

Aſſuming it then, as we well may, for certain, that the poems now under conſideration, are genuine venerable monuments of very remote antiquity; I proceed to make ſome remarks upon their general ſpirit and ſtrain. The two great characteriſtics of Oſſian's poetry are, tenderneſs and ſublimity. It breathes nothing of the gay and cheerful kind; an air of ſolemnity and ſerioufneſs is diffuſed over the whole. Oſſian is perhaps the only poet who never relaxes, or lets himſelf down into the light and amuſing ſtrain; which I readily admit to be no ſmall diſadvantage to him, with the bulk of readers. He moves perpetually in the high region of the grand and the pathetic. One key note is ſtruck at the beginning, and ſupported to the end; nor is any ornament introduced but what is perfectly concordant with the general tone or melody. The events recorded, are all ſerious and grave; the ſcenery throughout, wild and romantic. The extended heath by the ſea ſhore; the mountain ſhaded with miſt; the torrent ruſhing through a ſolitary valley; the ſcattered oaks, and the tombs of warriors overgrown with moſs; all produce a ſolemn attention in the mind, and prepare it for great and extraordinary events. We find not in Oſſian, an imagination that ſports itſelf, and dreſſes out gay trifles to pleaſe the fancy. His poetry, more perhaps than that of any other writer, deſerves to be ſtyled, The Poetry of the Heart. It is a heart penetrated with noble ſentiments, and with ſublime and tender paſſions; and a heart that glows, and kindles the fancy; a heart that is full, and pours itſelf forth. Oſſian did not write, like modern poets, to pleaſe readers and critics. He ſung from the love of poetry and ſong. His delight was to think of the heroes among whom he had flouriſhed; to recal the affecting incidents of his life; to dwell upon his paſt wars and loves and friendſhips; till, as he expreſſes it himſelf, "there comes a voice to Oſſian and awakes his ſoul. It is the voice of years that are gone; they roll before me with all their deeds;" and under this true poetic inſpiration, giving vent to his genius, no wonder we ſhould ſo often hear, and acknowledge in his ſtrains, the powerful and ever-pleaſing voice of nature.

——Arte, natura potentior omni.'—
Eſt Deus in nobis, agitante caleſcimus illo.

It is neceſſary here to obſerve, that the beauties of Oſſian's writings cannot be felt by thoſe who have given them only a ſingle or a haſty peruſal. His manner is ſo different from that of the poets, to whom we are moſt accuſtomed; his ſtyle is ſo conciſe, and ſo much crowded with imagery; the mind is kept at ſuch a ſtretch in accompanying the author; that an ordinary reader is at firſt apt to be dazzled and and fatigued, rather than pleaſed. His poems require to be taken up at intervals, and to be frequently reviewed; and then it is impoſſible but his beauties muſt open to every reader who is capable of ſenſibility. Thoſe who have the higheſt degree of it, will reliſh them the moſt.

As Homer is of all the great poets, the one whoſe manner, and whoſe times come the neareſt to Oſſian's, we are naturally led to run a parallel in ſome inſtances between the Greek and the Celtic bard. For though Homer lived more than a thouſand years before Oſſian, it is not from the age of the world, but from the ſtate of ſociety, that we are to judge of reſembling times. The Greek has, in ſeveral points, a manifeſt ſuperiority. He introduces a greater variety of incidents; he poſſeſſes a larger compaſs of ideas; has more diverſity in his characters; and a much deeper knowledge of human nature. It was not to be expected, that in any of theſe particulars, Oſſian could equal Homer. For Homer lived in a country where ſociety was much farther advanced; he had beheld many more objects; cities built and flouriſhing; laws inſtituted; order, diſcipline, and arts begun. His field of obſervation was much larger and more ſplendid; his knowledge, of courſe, more extenſive; his mind alſo, it ſhall be granted, more penetrating. But, if Oſſian's ideas and objects be leſs diverſified than thoſe of Homer, they are all, however, of the kind fitteſt for poetry: The bravery and generoſity of heroes, the tenderneſs of lovers, the attachments of friends, parents, and children. In a rude age and country, though the events that happen be few, the undiſſipated mind broods over them more; they ſtrike the imagination, and fire the paſſions in a higher degree; and of conſequence become happier materials to a poetical genius, than the

ſame events when ſcattered through the wide circle of more varied action, and cultivated life.

Homer is a more cheerful and ſprightly poet than Oſſian. You diſcern in him all the Greek vivacity; whereas Oſſian uniformly maintains the gravity and ſolemnity of a Celtic hero. This too is in a great meaſure to be accounted for from the different ſituations in which they lived, partly perſonal, and partly national. Oſſian had ſurvived all his friends, and was diſpoſed to melancholy by the incidents of his life. But beſides this, cheerfulneſs is one of the many bleſſings which we owe to formed ſociety. The ſolitary wild ſtate is always a ſerious one. Bating the ſudden and violent burſts of mirth, which ſometimes break forth at their dances and feaſts; the ſavage American tribes have been noted by all travellers for their gravity and taciturnity. Somewhat of this taciturnity may be alſo remarked in Oſſian. On all occaſions he is frugal of his words; and never gives you more of an image or a deſcription than is juſt ſufficient to place it before you in one clear point of view. It is a blaze of lightning, which flaſhes and vaniſhes. Homer is more extended in his deſcriptions; and fills them up with a greater variety of circumſtances. Both the poets are dramatic; that is, they introduce their perſonages frequently ſpeaking before us. But Oſſian is conciſe and rapid in his ſpeeches, as he is in every other thing. Homer, with the Greek vivacity, had alſo ſome portion of the Greek loquacity. His ſpeeches indeed are highly characteriſtical; and to them we are much indebted for that admirable diſplay he has given of human nature. Yet if he be tedious any where, it is in theſe; ſome of them trifling and ſome of them plainly unſeaſonable. Both poets are eminently ſublime; but a difference may be remarked in the ſpecies of their ſublimity. Homer's ſublimity is accompanied with more impetuoſity and fire; Oſſian's with more of a ſolemn and awful grandeur. Homer hurries you along; Oſſian elevates, and fixes you in aſtoniſhment. Homer is moſt ſublime in actions and battles; Oſſian, in deſcription and ſentiment. In the pathetic, Homer, when he chuſes to exert it, has great power; but Oſſian exerts that power much oftener, and has the character of tenderneſs far more deeply imprinted on his works. No poet knew better how to ſeize and melt the heart. With regard to dignity of ſentiment, the pre-eminence muſt clearly be given to Oſſian. This is indeed a ſurpriſing circumſtance, that in point of humanity, virtuous feelings of every kind, our rude Celtic bard ſhould be diſtinguiſhed to ſuch a degree, that not only the heroes of Homer, but even thoſe of the polite and refined Virgil, are left far behind by thoſe of Oſſian.

After theſe general obſervations on the genius and ſpirit of our author, I now proceed to a nearer view, and more accurate examination of his works; and as Fingal is the firſt great poem in this collection, it is proper to begin with it. To refuſe the title of an epic poem to Fingal, becauſe it is not in every little particular exactly conformable to the practice of Homer and Virgil, were the mere ſqueamiſhneſs and pedantry of criticiſm. Examined even according to Ariſtotle's rule, it will be found to have all the eſſential requiſites of a true and regular epic; and to have ſeveral of them in ſo high a degree, as at firſt view to raiſe our aſtoniſhment on finding Oſſian's compoſition ſo agreeable to rules of which he was entirely ignorant. But our aſtoniſhment will ceaſe, when we conſider from what ſource Ariſtotle drew thoſe rules. Homer knew no more of the laws of criticiſm than Oſſian. But guided by nature, he compoſed in verſe a regular ſtory, founded on heroic actions, which all poſterity admired. Ariſtotle, with great ſagacity and penetration, traced the cauſes of this general admiration. He obſerved what it was in Homer's compoſition, and in the conduct of his ſtory, which gave it ſuch power to pleaſe; from this obſervation he deduced the rules which poets ought to follow, who would write and pleaſe like Homer; and to a compoſition formed according to ſuch rules, he gave the name of an Epic poem. Hence his whole ſyſtem aroſe. Ariſtotle ſtudied nature in Homer. Homer and Oſſian both wrote from nature. No wonder that among all the three, there ſhould be ſuch agreement and conformity.

The fundamental rules delivered by Ariſtotle concerning an epic poem, are theſe: That the action which is the ground work of the poem, ſhould be one, complete, and great; that it ſhould be feigned, not merely hiſtorical; that it ſhould be enlivened with characters and manners; and heightened by the marvellous.

But before entering on any of theſe, it may perhaps be aſked, what is the moral of Fingal? For, according to M. Boſſu, an epic poem is no other than an allegory contrived to illuſtrate ſome moral truth. The poet, ſays this critic, muſt begin with fixing on ſome maxim, or inſtruction, which he intends to inculcate on mankind. He next forms a fable, like one of Æſop's, wholly with a view to the moral: and having thus ſettled and arranged his plan, he then looks into traditionary hiſtory for names and incidents, to give his fable ſome air of probability. Never did a more frigid, pedantic notion, enter into the mind of a critic. We may ſafely pronounce, that he who ſhould compoſe an epic poem after this manner, who ſhould firſt lay down a moral and contrive a plan, before he had thought of his perſonages and actors, might deliver indeed very ſound inſtruction, but would find few readers. There cannot be the leaſt doubt that the firſt object which ſtrikes an epic poet, which fires his genius, and gives him any idea of his work, is the action or ſubject he is to celebrate. Hardly is there any tale, any ſubject a poet can chuſe for ſuch a work, but will afford ſome moral general inſtruction. An epic poem is by its nature one of the moſt moral of all poetical compoſitions: But its moral tendency is by no means to be limited to ſome common-place maxim, which may be gathered from the ſtory. It ariſes from the admiration of heroic actions, which ſuch a compoſition is peculiarly calcuted to produce; from the virtuous emotions which the characters and incidents raiſe, whilſt we read it; from the happy impreſſion which all the parts ſeparately, as well as the whole taken together, leave upon the mind. However, if a general moral be ſtill inſiſted on, Fingal, obviouſly furniſhes one, not inferior to that of any other poet, viz. That Wiſdom and Bravery always triumph over brutal force; or another nobler ſtill: That the moſt complete victory over an enemy is obtained by that moderation and generoſity which convert him into a friend.

The unity of the epic action, which, of all Ariſtotle's rules, is the chief and moſt material, is ſo ſtrictly preſerved in Fingal, that it muſt be perceived by every reader. It is a more complete unity than what ariſes from relating the actions of one man, which the Greek critic juſtly cenſures as imperfect; it is the unity of one enterpriſe, the deliverance of Ireland from the invaſion of Swaran: An enterpriſe, which has ſurely the full heroic dignity. All the incidents recorded bear a conſtant reference to one end; no double plot is carried on; but the parts unite into a regular whole: And as the action is one and great, ſo it is an entire or complete action. For we find as the critic farther requires, a beginning, a middle, and an end; a nodus, or intrigue in the poem; difficulties occurring through Cuchullin's raſhneſs and bad ſucceſs; thoſe difficulties gradually ſurmounted; and at laſt the work conducted to that happy concluſion which is held eſſential to epic poetry. Unity is indeed obſerved with greater exactneſs in Fingal, than in almoſt any other epic compoſition. For not only is unity of ſubject maintained, but that of time and place alſo. The Autumn is clearly pointed out as the ſeaſon of the action: and from beginning to end the ſcene is never ſhifted from the heath of Lena, along the ſea-ſhore. The duration of the action in Fingal, is much ſhorter than in the Iliad or Æneid. But ſure, there may be ſhorter as well as longer heroic poems; and if the authority of Ariſtotle be alſo required for this, he ſays expreſsly that the epic compoſition is indefinite as to the time of its duration. Accordingly the action of the Iliad laſts only forty-ſeven days, whilſt that of the Æneid is continued for more than a year.

Throughout the whole of Fingal, there reigns that grandeur of ſentiment, ſtyle, and imagery, which ought ever to diſtinguiſh this high ſpecies of poetry. The ſtory is conducted with no ſmall art. The poet goes not back to a tedious recital of the beginning of the war with Swaran; but haſtening to the main action, he falls in exactly, by a moſt happy coincidence of thought, with the rule of Horace.

Semper ad eventum feſtinat, & in medias res,
Non ſecus ac notas, auditorem rapit—
Nec gemino bellum Trojanum orditur ab ovo.

De Arte Poet.

He invokes no muſe, for he acknowledged none; but his occaſional addreſſes to Malvina, have a finer effect than the invocation of any muſe. He ſets out with no formal propoſition of his ſubject; but the ſubject naturally and eaſily unfolds itſelf; the poem opening in an animated manner, with the ſituation of Cuchullin, and the arrival of a ſcout who informs him of Swaran's landing. Mention is preſently made of Fingal, and of the expected aſſiſtance from the ſhips of the lonely iſle, in order to give further light to the ſubject. For the poet often ſhows his addreſs in gradually preparing us for the events he is to introduce; and in particular the preparation for the appearance of Fingal, the previous expectations, that are raiſed, and the extreme magnificence fully anſwering theſe expectations, with which the hero is at length preſented to us, are all worked up with ſuch ſkillful conduct as would do honour to any poet of the moſt refined times. Homer's art in magnifying the character of Achilles has been univerſally admired. Oſſian certainly ſhows no leſs in aggrandizing Fingal. Nothing could be more happily imagined for this purpoſe than the whole management of the laſt battle, wherein Gaul the ſon of Morni, had beſought Fingal to retire, and to leave him and his other chiefs the honour of the day. The generoſity of the king in agreeing to this propoſal; the majeſty with which he retreats to the hill, from whence he was to behold the engagement, attended by his bards, and waving the lightning of his ſword: his perceiving the chiefs overpowered by numbers, but from unwillingneſs to deprive them of the glory of victory by coming in perſon to their aſſiſtance, firſt ſending Ullin, the bard, to animate their courage; and at laſt, when the danger becomes more preſſing, his riſing in his might, and interpoſing, like a divinity, to decide the doubtful fate of the day; are all circumſtances contrived with ſo much art as plainly diſcover the Celtic bards to have been not unpractiſed in heroic poetry

as ſimple as that of Fingal. A quarrel ariſes between Achilles and Agamemnon concerning a female ſlave; on which, Achilles, apprehending himſelf to be injured, withdraws his aſſiſtance from the reſt of the Greeks. The Greeks fall into great diſtreſs, and beſeech him to be reconciled to them. He refuſes to fight for them in perſon, but ſends his friend Patroclus; and upon his being ſlain, goes forth to revenge his death, and kills Hector. The ſubject of Fingal is this: Swaran comes to invade Ireland: Cuchullin, the guardian of the young king, had applied for aſſiſtance to Fingal, who reigned in the oppoſite coaſt of Scotland. But before Fingal's arrival, he is hurried by raſh counſel to encounter Swaran. He is defeated; he retreats; and deſponds. Fingal arrives in this conjuncture. The battle is for ſome time dubious; but in the end he conquers Swaran; and the remembrance of Swaran's being the brother of Agandecca, who had once ſaved his life, makes him diſmiſs him honourably. Homer, it is true, has filled up his ſtory with a much greater variety of particulars than Oſſian; and in this has ſhown a compaſs of invention ſuperior to that of the other poet. But it muſt not be forgotten, that though Homer be more circumſtantial, his incidents, however, are leſs diverſified in kind than thoſe of Oſſian. War and bloodſhed reign throughout the Iliad; and notwithſtanding all the fertility of Homer's invention, there is ſo much uniformity in his ſubjects, that there are few readers, who before the cloſe, are not tired of perpetual fighting. Whereas in Oſſian, the mind is relieved by a more agreeable diverſity. There is a finer mixture of war and heroiſm, with love and friendſhip, of martial, with tender ſcenes, than is to be met with, perhaps, in any other poet. The epiſodes too, have great propriety: as natural, and proper to that age and country: conſiſting of the ſongs of bards, which are known to have been the great entertainment of the Celtic heroes in war, as well as in peace. Theſe ſongs are not introduced at random; if you except the epiſode of Duchomar and Morna, in the firſt book, which though beautiful, is more unartful, than any of the reſt; they have always ſome particular relation to the actor who is intereſted, or to the events which are going on; and, whilſt they vary the ſcene, they preſerve a ſufficient connection with the main ſubject, by the fitneſs and propriety of their introduction.

As Fingal's love to Agandecca, influences ſome circumſtances of the poem, particularly the honourable diſmiſſion of Swaran at the end; it was neceſſary that we ſhould be let into this part of the hero's ſtory. But as it lay without the compaſs of the preſent action, it could be regularly introduced no where, except in an epiſode. Accordingly the poet, with as much propriety, as if Ariſtotle himſelf had directed the plan, has contrived an epiſode, for this purpoſe in the ſong of Carril, at the beginning of the third book.

The concluſion of the poem is ſtrictly according to rule; and is every way noble and pleaſing. The reconciliation of the contending heroes, the conſolation of Cuchullin, and the general felicity that crowns the action, ſoothe the mind in a very agreeable manner, and form that paſſage from agitation and trouble, to perfect quiet and repoſe, which critics require as the proper termination of the epic work. "Thus they paſſed the night in ſong, and brought back the morning with joy. Fingal aroſe on the heath; and ſhook his glittering ſpear in his hand. He moved firſt towards the plains of Lena; and we followed like a ridge of fire. Spread the ſail, ſaid the king of Morven, and catch the winds that pour from Lena. We roſe on the wave with ſongs; and ruſhed with joy through the foam of the ocean." So much for the unity and general conduct of the epic action in Fingal.

With

With regard to that property of the ſubject which Ariſtotle requires that it ſhould be feigned not hiſtorical, he muſt not be underſtood ſo ſtrictly, as if he meant to exclude all ſubjects which have any foundation in truth. For ſuch excluſion would both be unreaſonable in itſelf; and what is more, would be contrary to the practice of Homer, who is known to have founded his Iliad on hiſtorical facts concerning the war of Troy, which was famous throughout all Greece. Ariſtotle means no more than that it is the buſineſs of a poet not to be a mere annaliſt of facts, but to embelliſh truth with beautiful, probable, and uſeful fictions; to copy nature, as he himſelf explains it, like painters, who preſerve a likeneſs, but exhibit their objects more grand and beautiful than they are in reality. That Oſſian has followed this courſe, and building upon true hiſtory, has ſufficiently adorned it with poetical fiction for aggrandizing his characters and facts, will not, I believe, be queſtioned by moſt readers. At the ſame time, the foundation which thoſe facts and characters had in truth, and the ſhare which the poet himſelf had in the tranſactions which he records, muſt be conſidered as no ſmall advantage to his work. For truth makes an impreſſion on the mind far beyond any fiction; and no man, let his imagination be ever ſo ſtrong, relates any events ſo feelingly as thoſe in which he has been intereſted; paints any ſcene ſo naturally as one which he has ſeen; or draws any characters in ſuch ſtrong colours as thoſe which he has perſonally known. It is conſidered as an advantage of the epic ſubject to be taken from a period ſo diſtant, as by being involved in the darkneſs of tradition, may give licence to fable. Though Oſſian's ſubject may at firſt view appear unfavourable in this reſpect, as being taken from his own times, yet when we reflect that he lived to an extreme old age; that he relates what had been tranſacted in another country, at the diſtance of many years, and after all that race of men who had been the actors were gone off the ſtage; we ſhall find the objection in a great meaſure obviated. In ſo rude an age, when no written records were known, when tradition was looſe, and accuracy of any kind little attended to, what was great and heroic in one generation, eaſily ripened into the marvellous in the next.

The natural repreſentation of human characters in an epic poem is highly eſſential to its merit: And in reſpect of this there can be no doubt of Homer's excelling all the heroic poets who have ever wrote. But though Oſſian be much inferior to Homer in this article, he will be found to be equal at leaſt, if not ſuperior, to Virgil; and has indeed given all the diſplay of human nature which the ſimple occurrences of his times could be expected to furniſh. No dead uniformity of character prevails in Fingal; but on the contrary the principal characters are not only clearly diſtinguiſhed, but ſometimes artfully contraſted ſo as to illuſtrate each other. Oſſian's heroes are like Homer's, all brave; but their bravery, like thoſe of Homer's too, is of different kinds. For inſtance; the prudent, the ſedate, the modeſt and circumſpect Connal, is finely oppoſed to the preſumptuous, raſh, overbearing, but gallant and generous Calmar. Calmar hurries Cuchullin into action by his temerity; and when he ſees the bad effect of his counſels, he will not ſurvive the diſgrace. Connal, like another Ulyſſes, attends Cuchullin to his retreat, counſels, and comforts him under his misfortune. The fierce, the proud, and high ſpirited Swaran is admirably contraſted with the calm, the moderate, and generous Fingal. The character of Oſcar is a favourite one throughout the whole poems. The amiable warmth of the young warrior; his eager impetuoſity in the day of action; his paſſion for fame; his ſubmiſſion to his father;

father; his tenderneſs for Malvina; are the ſtrokes of a maſterly pencil; the ſtrokes are few; but it is the hand of nature, and attracts the heart. Oſſian's own character, the old man, the hero, and the bard, all in one, preſents to us through the whole work a moſt reſpectable and venerable figure, which we always contemplate with pleaſure. Cuchullin is a hero of the higheſt claſs; daring, magnanimous, and exquiſitely ſenſible to honour. We become attached to his intereſt, and are deeply touched with his diſtreſs; and after the admiration raiſed for him in the firſt part of the poem, it is a ſtrong proof of Oſſian's maſterly genius that he durſt adventure to produce to us another hero, compared with whom, even the great Cuchullin, ſhould be only an inferior perſonage; and who ſhould riſe as far above him, as Cuchullin riſes above the reſt.

Here, indeed, in the character and deſcription of Fingal, Oſſian triumphs almoſt unrivalled: For we may boldly defy all antiquity to ſhew us any hero equal to Fingal. Homer's Hector poſſeſſes ſeveral great and amiable qualities; but Hector is a ſecondary perſonage in the Iliad, not the hero of the work. We ſee him only occaſionally; we know much leſs of him than we do of Fingal; who not only in this epic poem, but in Temora, and throughout the reſt of Oſſian's works, is preſented in all that variety of lights, which give the full diſplay of a character. And though Hector faithfully diſcharges his duty to his country, his friends, and his family, he is tinctured, however, with a degree of the ſame ſavage ferocity, which prevails among all the Homeric heroes. For we find him inſulting over the fallen Patroclus, with the moſt cruel taunts, and telling him when he lies in the agony of death, that Achilles cannot help him now; and that in a ſhort time his body, ſtripped naked, and deprived of funeral honours, ſhall be devoured by the vultures *. Whereas, in the character of Fingal, concur almoſt all the qualities that can ennoble human nature; that can either make us admire the hero, or love the man. He is not only unconquerable in war, but he makes his people happy by his wiſdom in the days of peace. He is truly the father of his people. He is known by the epithet of "Fingal of the mildeſt look;" and diſtinguiſhed on every occaſion, by humanity and generoſity. He is merciful to his foes †; full of affection to his children; full of concern about friends; and never mentions Agandecca, his firſt love, without the utmoſt tenderneſs. He is "the univerſal protector of the diſtreſſed;" "None ever went ſad from Fingal."—"O Oſcar! bend the ſtrong in arms; but ſpare the feeble hand. Be thou a ſtream of many tides againſt the foes of thy people; but like the gale that moves the graſs, to thoſe who aſk thine aid. So Trenmor lived; ſuch Trathal was; and ſuch has Fingal been. My arm was the ſupport of the injured; the weak reſted behind the lightning of my ſteel."—Theſe were the maxims of true heroiſm, to which he formed his grandſon. His fame is repreſented as every where ſpread; the greateſt heroes acknowledge his ſuperiority; his enemies tremble at his name; and the higheſt encomium that can be beſtowed on one whom the poet would moſt exalt, is to ſay, that his ſoul was like the ſoul of Fingal.

* Iliad 16. 830. Il. 17. 127.

† When he commands his ſons, after Swaran is taken priſoner, to "purſue the reſt of Lochlin, over the heath of Lena; that no veſſel may hereafter bound on the dark-rolling waves of Iniſtore;" he means not aſſuredly, as ſome have miſrepreſented him, to order a general ſlaughter of the foes, and to prevent their ſaving themſelves by flight; but, like a wiſe general, he commands his chiefs to render the victory complete, by a total route of the enemy: that they might adventure no more for the future, to fit out any fleet againſt him or his allies.

To do juſtice to the poet's merit, in ſupporting ſuch a character as this, I muſt obſerve, what is not commonly attended to, that there is no part of poetical execution more difficult, than to draw a perfect character in ſuch manner, as to render it diſtinct and affecting to the mind. Some ſtrokes of human imperfection and frailty, are what uſually give us the moſt clear view, and the moſt ſenſible impreſſion of a character; becauſe they preſent to us a man, ſuch as we have ſeen; they recal known features of human nature. When poets attempt to go beyond this range, and deſcribe a faultleſs hero, they, for the moſt part, ſet before us, a ſort of vague undiſtinguiſhable character, ſuch as the imagination cannot lay hold of, or realize to itſelf, as the object of affection. We know how much Virgil has failed in this particular. His perfect hero, Æneas, is an unanimated, inſipid perſonage, whom we may pretend to admire, but whom no one can heartily love. But what Virgil has failed in, Oſſian, to our aſtoniſhment, has ſucceſsfully executed. His Fingal, though exhibited without any of the common human failings, is nevertheleſs a real man; a character which touches and intereſts every reader. To this it has much contributed, that the poet has repreſented him as an old man; and by this has gained the advantage of throwing around him a great many circumſtances peculiar to that age, which paint him to the fancy in a more diſtinct light. He is ſurrounded with his family; he inſtructs his children in the principles of virtue; he is narrative of his paſt exploits; he is venerable with the gray locks of age; he is frequently diſpoſed to moralize, like an old man, on human vanity and the proſpect of death. There is more art, at leaſt more felicity, in this, than may at firſt be imagined. For youth and old age, are the two ſtates of human life, capable of being placed in the moſt picturesque lights. Middle age is more general and vague; and has fewer circumstances peculiar to the idea of it. And when any object is in a situation, that admits it to be rendered particular, and to be clothed with a variety of circumstances, it always stands out more clear and full in poetical description.

Besides human personages, divine or supernatural agents are often introduced into epic poetry; forming what is called the machinery of it; which most critics hold to be an essential part. The marvellous, it must be admitted, has always a great charm for the bulk of readers. It gratifies the imagination, and affords room for striking and sublime description. No wonder, therefore, that all poets should have a strong propensity towards it. But I must observe, that nothing is more difficult, than to adjust properly the marvellous with the probable. If a poet sacrifice probability, and fill his work with extravagant supernatural scenes, he spreads over it an appearance of romance and childish fiction; he transports his readers from this world, into a phantastic, visionary region; and loses that weight and dignity which should reign in epic poetry. No work, from which probability is altogether banished, can make a lasting or deep impression. Human actions and manners, are always the most interesting objects which can be presented to a human mind. All machinery, therefore, is faulty which withdraws these too much from view; or obscures them under a cloud of incredible fictions. Besides being temperately employed, machinery ought always to have some foundation in popular belief. A poet is by no means at liberty to invent what system of the marvellous he pleases: He must avail himself either of the religious faith, or the superstitious credulity of the country wherein he lives; lives; ſo as to give an air of probability to events which are moſt contrary to the common courſe of nature.

In theſe reſpects, Oſſian appears to me to have been remarkably happy. He has indeed followed the ſame courſe with Homer. For it is perfectly abſurd to imagine, as ſome critics have done, that Homer's mythology was invented by him, in conſequence of profound reflections on the benefit it would yield to poetry. Homer was no ſuch refining genius. He found the traditionary ſtories on which he built his Iliad, mingled with popular legends, concerning the intervention of the gods; and he adopted theſe, becauſe they amuſed the fancy. Oſſian, in like manner, found the tales of his country full of ghoſts and ſpirits: It is likely he believed them himſelf; and he introduced them, becauſe they gave his poems that ſolemn and marvellous caſt, which ſuited his genius. This was the only machinery he could employ with propriety; becauſe it was the only intervention of ſupernatural beings, which agreed with the common belief of the country. It was happy; becauſe it did not interfere in the leaſt, with the proper diſplay of human characters and actions; becauſe it had leſs of the incredible, than moſt other kinds of poetical machinery; and becauſe it ſerved to diverſify the ſcene, and to heighten the ſubject by an awful grandeur, which is the great deſign of machinery.

As Oſſian's mythology is peculiar to himſelf, and makes a conſiderable figure in his other poems, as well as in Fingal, it may be proper to make ſome obſervations on it, independent of its ſubſerviency to epic compoſition. It turns for the moſt part on the appearances of departed ſpirits. Theſe, conſonantly to the notions of every rude age, are repreſented not as purely immaterial, but as thin airy forms, which can be viſible or inviſible at pleaſure; their voice is feeble:

feeble: their arm is weak; but they are endowed with knowledge more than human. In a ſeparate ſtate, they retain the ſame diſpoſitions which animated them in this life. They ride on the wind? they bend their airy bows; and purſue deer formed of clouds. The ghoſts of departed bards continue to ſing. The ghoſts of departed heroes frequent the fields of their former fame. "They reſt together in their caves, and talk of mortal men. Their ſongs are of other worlds. They come ſometimes to the ear of reſt, and raiſe their feeble voice." All this preſents to us much the ſame ſet of ideas, concerning ſpirits, as we find in the eleventh book of the Odyſſey, where Ulyſſes viſits the regions of the dead: And in the twenty-third book of the Iliad, the ghoſt of Patroclus, after appearing to Achilles, vaniſhes preciſely like one of Oſſian's, emitting a ſhrill, feeble cry, and melting away like ſmoke.

But though Homer's and Oſſian's ideas concerning ghoſts were of the ſame nature, we cannot but obſerve, that Oſſian's ghoſts are drawn with much ſtronger and livelier colours than thoſe of Homer. Oſſian deſcribes ghoſts with all the particularity of one who had ſeen and converſed with them, and whoſe imagination was full of the impreſſion they had left upon it. He calls up thoſe awful and tremendous ideas which the ——Simulacra modis pallentia miris, are fitted to raiſe in the human mind; and which, in Shakeſpeare's ſtyle, "harrow up the ſoul." Crugal's ghoſt, in particular, in the beginning of the ſecond book of Fingal, may vie with any appearance of this kind, deſcribed by any epic or tragic poet whatever. Moſt poets would have contented themſelves with telling us, that he reſembled, in every particular, the living Crugal; that his form and dreſs were the ſame, only his face more pale and

ſad; and that he bore the mark of the wound by which he fell. But Oſſian ſets before our eyes a ſpirit from the inviſible world, diſtinguiſhed by all thoſe features, which a ſtrong aſtoniſhed imagination would give to a ghoſt. "A dark-red ſtream of fire comes down from the hill. Crugal ſat upon the beam; he that lately fell by the hand of Swaran, ſtriving in the battle of heroes. His face is like the beam of the ſetting moon. His robes are of the clouds of the hill. His eyes are like two decaying flames. Dark is the wound of his breaſt. The ſtars dim-twinkled through his form; and his voice was like the ſound of a diſtant ſtream." The circumſtance of the ſtars being beheld, "dim twinkling through his form," is wonderfully picturesque; and conveys the moſt lively impreſſion of his thin and ſhadowy ſubſtance. The attitude in which he is afterwards placed, and the ſpeech put into his mouth, are full of that ſolemn and awful ſublimity, which ſuits the ſubject. "Dim, and in tears, he ſtood and ſtretched his pale hand over the hero. Faintly he raiſed his feeble voice, like the gale of the reedy Lego. My ghoſt, O Connal! is on my native hills; but my corſe is on the ſands of Ullin. Thou ſhalt never talk with Crugal, or find his lone ſteps in the heath. I am light as the blaſt of Cromla; and I move like the ſhadow of miſt. Connal, ſon of Colgar! I ſee the dark cloud of death. It hovers over the plains of Lena. The ſons of green Erin ſhall fall. Remove from the field of ghoſts. Like the darkened moon he retired in the midſt of the whiſtling blaſt."

Several other appearances of ſpirits might be pointed out, as among the moſt ſublime paſſages of Oſſian's poetry. The circumſtances of them are conſiderably diverſified; and the ſcenery always ſuited to the occaſion. "Oſcar ſlowly aſcends the hill. The meteors of night ſet on the heath before fore him. A diſtant torrent faintly roars. Unfrequent blaſts ruſh through aged oaks. The half-enlightened moon ſinks dim and red behind her hill. Feeble voices are heard on the heath. Oſcar drew his ſword." Nothing can prepare the fancy more happily for the awful ſcene that is to follow. "Trenmor came from his hill, at the voice of his mighty ſon. A cloud like the ſteed of the ſtranger, ſupported his airy limbs. His robe is of the miſt of Lano, that brings death to the people. His ſword is a green meteor, half-extinguiſhed. His face is without form, and dark. He ſighed thrice over the Hero: And thrice, the winds of the night roared around. Many were his words to Oſcar. He ſlowly vaniſhed, like a miſt that melts on the ſunny hill." To appearances of this kind, we can find no parallel among the Greek or Roman poets. They bring to mind that noble deſcription in the book of Job: "In thoughts from the viſions of the night, when deep ſleep falleth on men, fear came upon me, and trembling, which made all my bones to ſhake. Then a ſpirit paſſed before my face. The hair of my fleſh ſtood up. It ſtood ſtill; but I could not diſcern the form thereof. An image was before mine eyes. There was ſilence; and I heard a voice—Shall mortal man be more juſt than God?" *

As Oſſian's ſupernatural beings are deſcribed with a ſurpriſing force of imagination, ſo they are introduced with propriety. We have only three ghoſts in Fingal: That of Crugal, which comes to warn the hoſt of impending deſtruction, and to adviſe them to ſave themſelves by retreat; that of Everallin, the ſpouſe of Oſſian, which calls him to riſe and reſcue their ſon from danger; and that of Agandecca, which, juſt before the laſt engagement with Swaran, moves Fingal to pity, by mourning for the approaching deſtruction ſtruction of her kinſman and people. In the other poems, ghoſts ſometimes appear when invoked to foretel futurity; frequently, according to the notions of theſe times, they come as forerunners of misfortune or death, to thoſe whom they viſit; ſometimes they inform their friends at a diſtance, of their own death; and ſometimes they are introduced to heighten the ſcenery on ſome great and ſolemn occaſion. "A hundred oaks burn to the wind; and faint light gleams over the heath. The ghoſts of Ardven paſs through the beam; and ſhew their dim and diſtant forms. Comala is half-unſeen on her meteor; and Hidallan is ſullen and dim." "The awful faces of other times, looked from the clouds of Crona." "Fercuth! I ſaw the ghoſt of night. Silent he ſtood on that bank; his robe of miſt flew on the wind. I could behold his tears. An aged man he ſeemed, and full of thought."

The ghoſts of ſtrangers mingle not with thoſe of the natives. "She is ſeen; but not like the daughters of the hill. Her robes are from the ſtrangers land; and ſhe is ſtill alone." When the ghoſt of one whom he had formerly known is introduced, the propriety of the living character is ſtill preſerved. This is remarkable in the appearance of Calmar's ghoſt, in the poem intitled The Death of Cuchullin. He ſeems to forebode Cuchullin's death, and to beckon him to his cave. Cuchullin reproaches him for ſuppoſing that he could be intimidated by ſuch prognoſtics. "Why doſt thou bend thy dark eyes on me, ghoſt of the car-borne Calmar! Would'ſt thou frighten me, O Matha's ſon! from the battles of Cormac? Thy hand was not feeble in war; neither was thy voice for peace. How art thou changed, chief of Lara! if now thou doſt adviſe to fly! Retire thou to thy cave: Thou art not Calmar's ghoſt: He delighted in battle; and his arm was like the thunder of heaven."

Calmar makes no return to this ſeeming reproach: But, "He retired in his blaſt with joy; for he had heard the voice of his praiſe." This is preciſely the ghoſt of Achilles in Homer; who notwithſtanding all the diſſatisfaction he expreſſes with his ſtate in the region of the dead, as ſoon as he had heard his ſon Neoptolemus praiſed for his gallant behaviour, ſtrode away with ſilent joy to rejoin the reſt of the ſhades. *

It is a great advantage of Oſſian's mythology, that it is not local and temporary, like that of moſt other ancient poets; which of courſe is apt to ſeem ridiculous, after the ſuperſtitions have paſſed away on which it was founded. Oſſian's mythology is, to ſpeak ſo, the mythology of human nature; for it is founded on what has been the popular belief, in all ages and countries, and under all forms of religion, concerning the appearances of departed ſpirits. Homer's machinery is always lively and amuſing; but far from being always ſupported with proper dignity. The indecent ſquabbles among his gods, ſurely do no honour to epic poetry. Whereas Oſſian's machinery has dignity upon all occaſions. It is indeed a dignity of the dark and awful kind; but this is proper: becauſe coincident with the ſtrain and ſpirit of the poetry. A light and gay mythology, like Homer's, would have been perfectly unſuitable to the ſubjects on which Oſſian's genius was employed. But though his machinery be always ſolemn, it is not, however, always dreary or diſmal; it is enlivened, as much as the ſubject would permit, by thoſe pleaſant and beautiful appearances, which he ſometimes introduces, of the ſpirits of the hill. Theſe are gentle ſpirits; deſcending in ſun-beams; fair-moving on the plain; their forms white and bright; their voices ſweet; and their viſits to men propitious. The greateſt greateſt praiſe that can be given, to the beauty of a living woman, is to ſay, "She is fair as the ghoſt of the hill; when it moves in a ſun-beam at noon, over the ſilence of Morven." —"The hunter ſhall hear my voice from his booth. He ſhall fear, but love my voice. For ſweet ſhall my voice be for my friends; for pleaſant were they to me."

Beſides ghoſts, or the ſpirits of departed men, we find in Oſſian ſome inſtances of other kinds of machinery. Spirits of a ſuperior nature to ghoſts are ſometimes alluded to, which have power to embroil the deep; to call forth winds and ſtorms, and pour them on the land of the ſtranger; to overturn foreſts, and to ſend death among the people. We have prodigies too; a ſhower of blood; and when ſome diſaſter is befalling at a diſtance, the ſound of death heard on the ſtrings of Oſſian's harp: all perfectly conſonant, not only to the peculiar ideas of northern nations, but to the general current of a ſuperſtitious imagination in all countries. The deſcription of Fingal's airy hall, in the poem called Berrathon, and of the aſcent of Malvina into it, deſerves particular notice, as remarkably noble and magnificent. But above all, the engagement of Fingal with the ſpirit of Loda, in Carric-thura, cannot be mentioned without admiration. I forbear tranſcribing the paſſage, as it muſt have drawn the attention of every one who has read the works of Oſſian. The undaunted courage of Fingal, oppoſed to all the terrors of the Scandinavian god; the appearance and the ſpeech of that awful ſpirit; the wound which he receives, and the ſhriek which he ſends forth, "as rolled into himſelf, he roſe upon the wind;" are full of the moſt amazing and terrible majeſty. I know no paſſage more ſublime in the writings of an uninſpired author. The fiction is calculated to aggrandize the hero; which it does to a high degree; nor is it ſo unnatural or wild a fiction, as might at firſt be thought. According to the notions of thoſe times, ſupernatural beings were material, and conſequently, vulnerable. The ſpirit of Loda was not acknowledged as a deity by Fingal; he did not worſhip at the ſtone of his power; he plainly conſidered him as the god of his enemies only; as a local deity, whoſe dominion extended no farther than to the regions where he was worſhipped; who had, therefore, no title to threaten him, and no claim to his ſubmiſſion. We know there are poetical precedents of great authority, for fictions fully as extravagant; and if Homer be forgiven for making Diomed attack and wound in battle, the gods whom that chief himſelf worſhipped, Oſſian ſurely is pardonable for making this hero ſuperior to the god of a foreign territory *.

Notwithſtanding the poetical advantages which I have aſcribed to Oſſian's machinery, I acknowledge it would have

* The ſcene of this encounter of Fingal with the ſpirit of Loda is laid in Iniſtore, or the iſlands of Orkney; and in the deſcription of Fingal's landing there it is ſaid, "A rock bends along the coaſt with all its echoing wood." On "the top is the circle of Loda, with the moſſy ſtone of power." In confirmation of Oſſian's topography, it is proper to acquaint the reader, that in theſe iſlands, as I have been well informed, there are many pillars, and circles of ſtones, ſtill remaining, known by the name of the ſtones and circles of Loda, or Loden: to which ſome degree of ſuperſtitious regard is annexed to this day. Theſe iſlands, until the year 1468, made a part of the Daniſh dominions. Their ancient language, of which there are yet ſome remains among the natives, is called the Norſe; and is a dialect, not of the Celtic, but of the Scandinavian tongue. The manners and the ſuperſtitions of the inhabitants, are quite diſtinct from thoſe of the Highlands and weſtern iſles of Scotland. Their ancient ſongs too, are of a different ſtrain and character, turning upon magical incantations and evocations from the dead, which were the favourite ſubjects of the old Runic poetry. They have many traditions among them of wars in former times with the inhabitants of the weſtern iſlands.

have been much more beautiful and perfect, had the author diſcovered ſome knowledge of a ſupreme Being. Although his ſilence on this head has been accounted for by the learned and ingenious tranſlator in a very probable manner, yet ſtill it muſt be held a conſiderable diſadvantage to the poetry. For the moſt auguſt and lofty ideas that can embelliſh poetry are derived from the belief of a divine adminiſtration of the univerſe: And hence the invocation of a ſupreme Being, or at leaſt of ſome ſuperior powers who are conceived as preſiding over human affairs, the ſolemnities of religious worſhip, prayers preferred, and aſſiſtance implored on critical occaſions, appear with great dignity in the works of almoſt all poets as chief ornaments of their compoſitions. The abſence of all ſuch religious ideas from Oſſian's poetry, is a ſenſible blank in it: the more to be regretted, as we can eaſily imagine what an illuſtrious figure they would have made under the management of ſuch a genius as his; and how finely they would have been adapted to many ſituations which occur in his works.

After ſo particular an examination of Fingal, it were needleſs to enter into as full a diſcuſſion of the conduct of Temora, the other epic poem. Many of the ſame obſervations, eſpecially with regard to the great characteriſtics of heroic poetry, apply to both. The high merit, however, of Temora, requires that we ſhould not paſs it by without ſome remarks.

The ſcene of Temora, as of Fingal, is laid in Ireland; and the action is of a poſterior date. The ſubject is, an expedition of the hero, to dethrone and puniſh a bloody uſurper, and to reſtore the poſſeſſion of the kingdom to the poſterity of the lawful prince; an undertaking worthy of the juſtice and heroiſm of the great Fingal. The action is one, and complete. The poem opens with the deſcent of Fingal on the coaſt, and the conſultation held among the chiefs of the enemy. The murder of the young prince Cormac, which was the cauſe of the war, being antecedent to the epic action, is introduced with great propriety as an epiſode in the firſt book. In the progreſs of the poem, three battles are deſcribed, which riſe in their importance above one another; the ſucceſs is various, and the iſſue for ſome time doubtful; till at laſt, Fingal brought into diſtreſs, by the wound of his great general Gaul, and the death of his ſon Fillan, aſſumes the command himſelf, and having ſlain the Iriſh king in ſingle combat, reſtores the rightful heir to his throne.

Temora has perhaps leſs fire than the other epic poem; but in return it has more variety, more tenderneſs, and more magnificence. The reigning idea, ſo often preſented to us of "Fingal in the laſt of his fields," is venerable and affecting; nor could any more noble concluſion be thought of, than the aged hero, after ſo many ſucceſsful atchievements, taking his leave of battles, and with all the ſolemnities of thoſe times reſigning his ſpear to his ſon. The events are leſs crowded in Temora than in Fingal; actions and characters are more particularly diſplayed; we are let into the tranſactions of both hoſts; and informed of the adventures of the night as well as of the day. The ſtill pathetic, and the romantic ſcenery of ſeveral of the night adventures, ſo remarkably ſuited to Oſſian's genius, occaſion a fine diverſity in the poem; and are happily contraſted with the military operations of the day.

In moſt of our author's poems, the horrors of war are ſoftened by intermixed ſcenes of love and friendſhip. In Fingal, theſe are introduced as epiſodes; in Temora, we have an incident of this nature wrought into the body of the piece; in the adventure of Cathmor and Sulmalla.

This

This forms one of the moſt conſpicuous beauties of that poem. The diſtreſs of Sulmalla, diſguiſed and unknown among ſtrangers, her tender and anxious concern for the ſafety of Cathmor, her dream, and her melting remembrance of the land of her fathers; Cathmor's emotion when he firſt diſcovers her, his ſtruggles to conceal and ſuppreſs his paſſion, leſt it ſhould unman him in the midſt of war, though "his ſoul poured forth in ſecret, when he beheld her fearful eye;" and the laſt interview between them, when overcome by her tenderneſs, he lets her know he had diſcovered her, and confeſſes his paſſion; are all wrought up with the moſt exquiſite ſenſibility and delicacy.

Beſides the characters which appeared in Fingal, ſeveral new ones are here introduced; and though, as they are all the characters of warriors, bravery is the predominant feature, they are nevertheleſs diverſified in a ſenſible and ſtriking manner. Foldath, for inſtance, the general of Cathmor, exhibits the perfect picture of a ſavage chieftain: Bold, and daring, but preſumptuous, cruel, and overbearing. He is diſtinguiſhed, on his firſt appearance, as the friend of the tyrant Cairbar; "His ſtride is haughty; his red eye rolls in wrath." In his perſon and whole deportment, he is contraſted with the mild and wiſe Hidalla, another leader of the ſame army, on whoſe humanity and gentleneſs he looks with great contempt. He profeſſedly delights in ſtrife and blood. He inſults over the fallen. He is imperious in his counſels, and factious when they are not followed. He is unrelenting in all his ſchemes of revenge, even to the length of denying the funeral ſong to the dead; which, from the injury thereby done to their ghoſts, was in thoſe days conſidered as the greateſt barbarity. Fierce to the laſt, he comforts himſelf in his dying moments with thinking that his ghoſt ſhall often leave its blaſt to rejoice over the graves of thoſe he had ſlain. Yet Oſſian, ever prone to the pathetic, has contrived to throw into his account of the death, even of this man, ſome tender circumſtances; by the moving deſcription of his daughter Dardulena, the laſt of his race.

The character of Foldath tends much to exalt that of Cathmor, the chief commander, which is diſtinguiſhed by the moſt humane virtues. He abhors all fraud and cruelty, is famous for his hoſpitality to ſtrangers; open to every generous ſentiment, and to every ſoft and compaſſionate feeling. He is ſo amiable as to divide the reader's attachment between him and the hero of the poem; though our author has artfully managed it ſo, as to make Cathmor himſelf indirectly acknowledge Fingal's ſuperiority, and to appear ſomewhat apprehenſive of the event, after the death of Finlan, which he knew would call forth Fingal in all his might. It is very remarkable, that although Oſſian has introduced into his poems three complete heroes, Cuchullin, Cathmor, and Fingal, he has, however, ſenſibly diſtinguiſhed each of their characters. Cuchullin is particularly honourable; Cathmor particularly amiable; Fingal wiſe and great, retaining an aſcendant peculiar to himſelf in whatever light he is viewed.

But the favourite figure in Temora, and the one moſt highly finiſhed, is Fillan. His character is of that ſort, for which Oſſian ſhews a particular fondneſs; an eager, fervent young warrior, fired with all the impatient enthuſiaſm for military glory, peculiar to that time of life. He had ſketched this in the deſcription of his own ſon Oſcar; but as he has extended it more fully in Fillan, and as the character is ſo conſonant to the epic ſtrain, though, ſo far as I remember, not placed in ſuch a conſpicuous light by any other epic poet, it may be worth while to attend a little to Oſſian's management of it in this inſtance.

Fillan

Fillan was the youngeſt of all the ſons of Fingal; younger, it is plain, than his nephew Oſcar, by whoſe fame and great deeds in war, we may naturally ſuppoſe his ambition to have been highly ſtimulated. Withal, as he is younger, he is deſcribed as more raſh and fiery. His firſt appearance is ſoon after Oſcar's death, when he was employed to watch the motions of the foe by night. In a converſation with his brother Oſſian, on that occaſion, we learn that it was not long ſince he began to lift the ſpear. "Few are the marks of my ſword in battle; but my ſoul is fire." He is with ſome difficulty reſtrained by Oſſian from going to attack the enemy; and complains to him, that his father had never allowed him any opportunity of ſignalizing his valour. "The king hath not remarked my ſword; I go forth with the crowd; I return without my fame." Soon after, when Fingal, according to cuſtom, was to appoint one of his chiefs to command the army, and each was ſtanding forth, and putting in his claim to this honour, Fillan is preſented in the following moſt picturеſque and natural attitude. "On his ſpear ſtood the ſon of Clatho, in the wandering of his locks. Thrice he raiſed his eyes on Fingal: his voice thrice failed him as he ſpoke. Fillan could not boaſt of battles; at once he ſtrode away. Bent over a diſtant ſtream he ſtood; the tear hung in his eye. He ſtruck, at times, the thiſtle's head, with his inverted ſpear." No leſs natural and beautiful is the deſcription of Fingal's paternal emotion on this occaſion. "Nor is he unſeen of Fingal. Side-long he beheld his ſon. He beheld him with burſting joy. He hid the big tear with his locks, and turned amidſt his crowded ſoul." The command, for that day, being given to Gaul, Fillan ruſhes amidſt the thickeſt of the foe, ſaves Gaul's life, who is wounded by a random arrow, and diſtinguiſhes himſelf ſo in battle, that "the days of old return on Fingal's mind, as he beholds the renown of his ſon. As the ſun rejoices from the cloud, over the tree his beams have raiſed, whilſt it ſhakes its lonely head on the heath, ſo joyful is the king over Fillan." Sedate, however, and wiſe, he mixes the praiſe which he beſtows on him with ſome reprehenſion of his raſhneſs, " My ſon, I ſaw thy deeds, and my ſoul was glad. Thou art brave, ſon of Clatho, but headlong in the ſtrife. So did not Fingal advance, though he never feared a foe. Let thy people be a ridge behind thee; they are thy ſtrength in the field. Then ſhalt thou be long renowned, and behold the tombs of thy fathers."

On the next day, the greateſt and the laſt of Fillan's life, the charge is committed to him of leading on the hoſt to battle. Fingal's ſpeech to his troops on this occaſion is full of noble ſentiment; and where he recommends his ſon to their care, extremely touching. " A young beam is before you; few are his ſteps to war. They are few, but he is valiant; defend my dark-haired ſon. Bring him back with joy; hereafter he may ſtand alone. His form is like his fathers; his ſoul is a flame of their fire." When the battle begins, the poet puts forth his ſtrength to deſcribe the exploits of the young hero; who, at laſt encountering and killing with his own hand Foldath the oppoſite general, attains the pinnacle of glory. In what follows, when the fate of Fillan is drawing near, Oſſian, if any where, excels himſelf. Foldath being ſlain, and a general rout begun, there was no reſource left to the enemy but in the great Cathmor himſelf, who in this extremity deſcends from the hill, where, according to the cuſtom of thoſe princes, he ſurveyed the battle. Obſerve how this critical event is wrought up by the poet. " Wide ſpreading over echoing Lubar, the flight of Bolga is rolled along. Fillan hung forward on their ſteps; and ſtrewed the heath with dead. Fingal rejoiced over his ſon. Blue-ſhielded Cathmor roſe. Son of Alpin, bring the harp! Give Fillan's praiſe to the wind; raiſe high his praiſe in my hall, while yet he ſhines in war. Leave blue-eyed Clatho! leave thy hall? behold that early beam of thine! The hoſt is withered in its courſe. No farther look—it is dark—light-trembling from the harp, ſtrike, virgins! ſtrike the ſound." The ſudden interruption, and ſuſpenſe of the narration on Cathmor's riſing from his hill, the abrupt burſting into the praiſe of Fillan, and the paſſionate apoſtrophe to his mother Clatho, are admirable efforts of poetical art, in order to intereſt us in Fillan's danger; and the whole is heightened by the immediately following ſimile, one of the moſt magnificent and ſublime that is to be met with in any poet, and which if it had been found in Homer, would have been the frequent ſubject of admiration to critics; "Fillan is like a ſpirit of heaven, that deſcends from the ſkirt of his blaſt. The troubled ocean feels his ſteps, as he ſtrides from wave to wave. His path kindles behind him; iſlands ſhake their heads on the heaving ſeas."

But the poet's art is not yet exhauſted. The fall of this noble young warrior, or in Oſſian's ſtyle, the extinction of this beam of heaven, could not be rendered too intereſting and affecting. Our attention is naturally drawn towards Fingal. He beholds from his hill the riſing of Cathmor, and the danger of his ſon. But what ſhall he do? "Shall Fingal riſe to his aid, and take the ſword of Luno? What then ſhould become of thy fame, ſon of white-boſomed Clatho? Turn not thine eyes from Fingal, daughter of Iniſtore! I ſhall not quench thy early beam. No cloud of mine ſhall riſe, my ſon, upon thy ſoul of fire." Struggling between concern for the fame, and fear for the ſafety of his ſon, he withdraws from the ſight of the engagement; and diſpatches Oſſian in haſte to the field, with this affectionate and delicate injunction. "Father of Oſcar!" addreſſing him by a title which on this occaſion has the higheſt propriety, "Father of Oſcar! lift the ſpear; defend the young in arms. But conceal thy ſteps from Fillan's eyes: He muſt not know that I doubt his ſteel" Oſſian arrived too late. But unwilling to deſcribe Fillan vanquiſhed, the poet ſuppreſſes all the circumſtances of the combat with Cathmor; and only ſhews us the dying hero. We ſee him animated to the end with the ſame martial and ardent ſpirit; breathing his laſt in bitter regret for being ſo early cut off from the field of glory. "Oſſian, lay me in that hollow rock. Raiſe no ſtone above me; leaſt one ſhould aſk about my fame. I am fallen in the firſt of my fields; fallen without renown. Let thy voice alone, ſend joy to my flying ſoul. Why ſhould the bard know where dwells the early-fallen Fillan?" He who after tracing the circumſtances of this ſtory, ſhall deny that our bard is poſſeſſed of high ſentiment and high art, muſt be ſtrangely prejudiced indeed. Let him read the ſtory of Pallas in Virgil, which is of a ſimilar kind; and after all the praiſe he may juſtly beſtow on the elegant and finiſhed deſcription of that amiable author, let him ſay, which of the two poets unfold moſt of the human ſoul. I wave inſiſting on any more of the particulars in Temora; as my aim is rather to lead the reader into the genius and ſpirit of Oſſian's poetry, than to dwell on all his beauties.

The judgment and art diſcovered in conducting works of ſuch length as Fingal and Temora, diſtinguiſh them from the other poems in this collection. The ſmaller pieces, however, contain particular beauties no leſs eminent. They are hiſtorical poems, generally of the elegiac kind; and plainly diſcover themſelves to be the work of the ſame author.

thor. One conſiſtent face of manners is every where preſented to us; one ſpirit of poetry reigns; the maſterly hand of Oſſian appears throughout; the ſame ſtrong colouring of imagination, and the ſame glowing ſenſibility of heart. Beſides the unity which belongs to the compoſitions of one man, there is moreover a certain unity of ſubject which very happily connects all theſe poems. They form the poetical hiſtory of the age of Fingal. The ſame race of heroes whom we had met with in the greater poems, Cuchullin, Oſcar, Connal, and Gaul, return again upon the ſtage; and Fingal himſelf is always the principal figure, preſented on every occaſion, with equal magnificence, nay, riſing upon us to the laſt. The circumſtances of Oſſian's old age and blindneſs, his ſurviving all his friends, and his relating their great exploits to Malvina, the ſpouſe or miſtreſs of his beloved ſon Oſcar, furniſh the fineſt poetical ſituations that fancy could deviſe for that tender pathetic which reigns in Oſſian's poetry.

On each of theſe poems, there might be room for ſeparate obſervations, with regard to the conduct and diſpoſition of the incidents, as well as to the beauty of the deſcriptions and ſentiments. Carthon is a regular and highly finiſhed piece. The main ſtory is very properly introduced by Cleſſamor's relation of the adventure of his youth; and this introduction is finely heightened by Fingal's ſong of mourning over Moina; in which Oſſian, ever fond of doing honour to his father, has contrived to diſtinguiſh him, for being an eminent poet, as well as warrior, Fingal's ſong upon this occaſion, when "his thouſand bards leaned forwards from their ſeats, to hear the voice of the king," is inferior to no paſſage in the whole book; and with great judgment put in his mouth, as the ſerioufneſs, no leſs than the ſublimity of the ſtrain, is peculiarly ſuited to the hero's character.

character. In Dar-thula, are aſſembled almoſt all the tender images that can touch the heart of man; friendſhip, love, the affections of parents, ſons, and brothers, the diſtreſs of the aged, and the unavailing bravery of the young. The beautiful addreſs to the moon, with which the poem opens, and the tranſition from thence to the ſubject, moſt happily prepare the mind for that train of affecting events that is to follow. The ſtory is regular, dramatic, intereſting to the laſt. He who can read it without emotion may congratulate himſelf, if he pleaſes, upon being completely armed againſt ſympathetic ſorrow. As Fingal had no occaſion of appearing in the action of this poem, Oſſian makes a very artful tranſition from his narration, to what was paſſing in the halls of Selma. The ſound heard there on the ſtrings of his harp, the concern which Fingal ſhows on hearing it, and the invocation of the ghoſts of their fathers, to receive the heroes falling in a diſtant land, are introduced with great beauty of imagination to increaſe the ſolemnity, and to diverſify the ſcenery of the poem.

Carric-thura is full of the moſt ſublime dignity; and has this advantage of being more cheerful in the ſubject, and more happy in the cataſtrophe than moſt of the other poems: Though tempered at the ſame time with epiſodes in that ſtrain of tender melancholy, which ſeems to have been the great delight of Oſſian and the bards of his age. Lathmon is peculiarly diſtinguiſhed, by high generoſity of ſentiment. This is carried ſo far, particularly in the refuſal of Gaul, on one ſide, to take the advantage of a ſleeping foe; and of Lathmon, on the other, to overpower by numbers the two young warriors, as to recal into one's mind the manners of chivalry; ſome reſemblance to which may perhaps be ſuggeſted by other incidents in this collection of poems. Chivalry, however, took riſe in an age and country country too remote from thoſe of Oſſian to admit the ſuſpicion that the one could have borrowed any thing from the other. So far as chivalry had any real exiſtence, the ſame military enthuſiaſm, which gave birth to it in the feudal times, might, in the days of Oſſian, that is, in the infancy of a riſing ſtate, through the operation of the ſame cauſe, very naturally produce effects of the ſame kind on the minds and manners of men. So far as chivalry was an ideal ſyſtem exiſting only in romance, it will not be thought ſurpriſing, when we reflect on the account before given of the Celtic bards, that this imaginary refinement of heroic manners ſhould be found among them, as much, at leaſt, as among the Trobadores, or ſtrolling Provencal bards, in the 10th or 11th century; whoſe ſongs, it is ſaid, firſt gave riſe to thoſe romantic ideas of heroiſm, which for ſo long a time inchanted Europe*. Oſſian's heroes have all the gallantry and generoſity of thoſe fabulous knights, without their extravagance; and his love ſcenes have native tenderneſs, without any mixture of theſe forced and unnatural conceits which abound in the old romances. The adventures related by our poet which reſemble the moſt thoſe of romance, concern women who follow their lovers to war diſguiſed in the armour of men; and theſe are ſo managed as to produce, in the diſcovery, ſeveral of the moſt intereſting ſituations; one beautiful inſtance of which may be ſeen in Carric-thura, and another in Calthon and Colmal.

Oithona preſents a ſituation of a different nature. In the abſence of her lover Gaul, ſhe had been carried off and raviſhed by Dunrommath. Gaul diſcovers the place where ſhe is kept concealed, and comes to revenge her. The meeting of the two lovers, the ſentiments and the behaviour of Oithona on that occaſion, are deſcribed with ſuch tender tender and exquiſite propriety, as does the greateſt honour both to the art and to the delicacy of our author: and would have been admired in any poet of the moſt refined age. The conduct of Croma muſt ſtrike every reader as remarkably judicious and beautiful. We are to be prepared for the death of Malvina, which is related in the ſucceeding poem. She is therefore introduced in perſon; "ſhe has heard a voice in a dream; ſhe feels the fluttering of her ſoul;" and in a moſt moving lamentation addreſſed to her beloved Oſcar, ſhe ſings her own Death Song. Nothing could be calculated with more art to ſooth and comfort her, than the ſtory which Oſſian relates. In the young and brave Fovargormo, another Oſcar is introduced; his praiſes are ſung; and the happineſs is ſet before her of thoſe who die in their youth, "when their renown is around them; before the feeble behold them in the hall, and ſmile at their trembling hand."

But no where does Oſſian's genius appear to greater advantage, than in Berrathon, which is reckoned the concluſion of his ſongs, "The laſt ſound of the Voice of Cona."[a]

Qualis olor noto poſiturus littore vitam,
Ingemit, et mæſtis mulcens concentibus auras
Præſago queritur venientia funera cantu.

The whole train of ideas is admirably ſuited to the ſubject. Every thing is full of that inviſible world, into which the aged bard believes himſelf now ready to enter. The airy hall of Fingal preſents itſelf to his view; "he ſees the cloud that ſhall receive his ghoſt; he beholds the miſt that ſhall form his robe when he appears on his hill;" and all the natural objects around him ſeem to carry the preſages of death. "The thiſtle ſhakes its beard to the wind. The flower hangs its heavy head—it ſeems to ſay, I am covered with the drops of heaven; the time of my departure is near, and and the blaſt ſhall ſcatter my leaves." Malvina's death is hinted to him in the moſt delicate manner by the ſon of Alpin. His lamentation over her apotheoſis, or aſcent to the habitation of heroes, and the introduction to the ſtory which follows from the mention which Oſſian ſuppoſes the father of Malvina to make of him in the hall of Fingal, are all in the higheſt ſpirit of poetry. "And doſt thou remember Oſſian, O Toſcar, ſon of Comloch? The battles of our youth were many; our ſwords went together to the field." Nothing could be more proper than to end his ſongs with recording an exploit of the father of that Malvina, of whom his heart was now ſo full; and who, from firſt to laſt, had been ſuch a favourite object throughout all his poems.

The ſcene of moſt of Oſſian's poems is laid in Scotland, or in the coaſt of Ireland oppoſite to the territories of Fingal. When the ſcene is in Ireland, we perceive no change of manners from thoſe of Oſſian's native country. For as Ireland was undoubtedly peopled with Celtic tribes, the language, cuſtoms, and religion of both nations were the ſame. They had been ſeparated from one another by migration, only a few generations, as it ſhould ſeem, before our poet's age; and they ſtill maintained a cloſe and frequent intercourſe. But when the poet relates the expeditions of any of his heroes to the Scandinavian coaſt or to the iſlands of Orkney, which were then part of the Scandinavian territory, as he does in Carric-thura, Sulmalla of Lumon, and Cathloda, the caſe is quite altered. Thoſe countries were inhabited by nations of the Teutonic deſcent, who in their manners and religious rites differed widely from the Celtæ; and it is curious and remarkable, to find this difference clearly pointed out in the poems of Oſſian. His deſcriptions bear the native marks of one who was preſent in the expeditions which he relates, and who deſcribes what he had ſeen with his own eyes. No ſooner are we carried to Lochlin, or the iſlands of Iniſtore, than we perceive that we are in a foreign region. New objects begin to appear. We meet every where with the ſtones and circles of Loda, that is, Odin, the great Scandinavian deity. We meet with the divinations and inchantments, for which it is well known thoſe northern nations were early famous. "There mixed with the murmur of waters, roſe the voice of aged men, who called the forms of night to aid them in their war;" whilſt the Caledonian chiefs who aſſiſted them, are deſcribed as ſtanding at a diſtance, heedleſs of their rites. That ferocity of manners which diſtinguiſhed thoſe nations, alſo becomes conſpicuous. In the combats of their chiefs there is a peculiar ſavageneſs; even their women are bloody and fierce. The ſpirit, and the very ideas of Regner Lodbrog, that northern ſcalder, whom I formerly quoted, occur to us again. "The hawks," Oſſian makes one of the Scandinavian chiefs ſay, "ruſh from all their winds: they are wont to trace my courſe. We rejoiced three days above the dead, and called the hawks of heaven. They came from all their winds, to feaſt on the foes of Annir."

Diſmiſſing now the ſeparate conſideration of any of our author's works, I proceed to make ſome obſervations on his manner of writing, under the general heads of Deſcription, Imagery, and Sentiment.

A poet of original genius is always diſtinguiſhed by his talent for deſcription *. A ſecond-rate writer diſcerns nothing new or peculiar in the object he means to deſcribe. His conceptions of it are vague and looſe; his expreſſions feeble; and of courſe the object is preſented to us indiſtinctly tinctly and as through a cloud. But a true poet makes us imagine that we ſee it before our eyes: he catches the diſtinguiſhing features; he gives it the colours of life and reality; he places it in ſuch a light that a painter could copy after him. The happy talent is chiefly owing to a lively imagination, which firſt receives a ſtrong impreſſion of the object; and then, by a proper ſelection of capital pictureſque circumſtances employed in deſcribing it, tranſmits that impreſſion in its full force to the imaginations of others. That Oſſian poſſeſſes this deſcriptive power in a high degree, we have a clear proof from the effect which his deſcriptions produce upon the imaginations of thoſe who read him with any degree of attention and taſte. Few poets are more intereſting. We contract an intimate acquaintance with his principal heroes. The characters, the manners, the face of the country, become familiar; we even think we could draw the figure of his ghoſts: In a word, whilſt reading him, we are tranſported as into a new region, and dwell among his objects as if they were all real.

* See the rules of poetical deſcription excellently illuſtrated by Lord Kaimes, in his Elements of Criticiſm, vol. iii. chap. 21. Of Narration and Deſcription.

It were eaſy to point out ſeveral inſtances of exquiſite painting in the works of our author. Such, for inſtance, as the ſcenery with which Temora opens, and the attitude in which Cairbar is there preſented to us; the deſcription of the young prince Cormac, in the ſame book; and the ruins of Balclutha in Carthon. "I have ſeen the walls of Balclutha, but they were deſolate. The fire had reſounded in the halls; and the voice of the people is heard no more. The ſtream of Clutha was removed from its place by the fall of the walls. The thiſtle ſhook there its lonely head: The moſs whiſtled to the wind. The fox looked out from the windows; the rank graſs of the wall waved round his head. Deſolate is the dwelling of Moina; ſilence is in the houſe of her fathers." Nothing alſo can be more natural and lively than the manner in which Carthon afterwards deſcribes how the conflagration of his city affected him when a child: "Have I not ſeen the fallen Balclutha? And ſhall I feaſt with Comhal's ſon? Comhal! who threw his fire in the midſt of my father's hall! I was young, and knew not the cauſe why the virgins wept. The columns of ſmoke pleaſed mine eye, when they roſe above my walls. I often looked back with gladneſs, when my friends fled above the hill. But when the years of my youth came on, I beheld the moſs of my fallen walls. My ſigh aroſe with the morning; and my tears deſcended with night. Shall I not fight, I ſaid to my ſoul, againſt the children of my foes? And I will fight, O bard! I feel the ſtrength of my ſoul." In the ſame poem, the aſſembling of the chiefs round Fingal, who had been warned of ſome impending danger by the appearance of a prodigy, is deſcribed with ſo many pictureſque circumſtances, that one imagines himſelf preſent in the aſſembly. "The king alone beheld the terrible ſight, and he foreſaw the death of his people. He came in ſilence to his hall, and took his father's ſpear; the mail rattled on his breaſt. The heroes roſe around. They looked in ſilence on each other, marking the eyes of Fingal. They ſaw the battle in his face. A thouſand ſhields are placed at once on their arms; and they drew a thouſand ſwords. The hall of Selma brightened around. The clang of arms aſcends. The gray dogs howl in their place. No word is among the mighty chiefs. Each marked the eyes of the king; and half aſſumed his ſpear."

It has been objected to Oſſian, that his deſcriptions of military actions are imperfect, and much leſs diverſified by circumſtances than thoſe of Homer. This is in ſome meaſure true. The amazing fertility of Homer's invention is no where ſo much diſplayed as in the incidents of his battles, ties, and in the little hiſtory pieces he gives of the perſons ſlain. Nor indeed, with regard to the talent of deſcription, can too much be ſaid in praiſe of Homer. Every thing is alive in his writings. The colours with which he paints are thoſe of nature. But Oſſian's genius was of a different kind from Homer's. It led him to hurry towards grand objects rather than to amuſe himſelf with particulars of leſs importance. He could dwell on the death of a favourite hero: but that of a private man ſeldom ſtopped his rapid courſe. Homer's genius was more comprehenſive than Oſſian's. It included a wider circle of objects; and could work up any incident into a deſcription. Oſſian's was more limited; but the region within which it chiefly exerted itſelf was the higheſt of all, the region of the pathetic and ſublime.

We muſt not imagine, however, that Oſſian's battles conſiſt only of general indiſtinct deſcription. Such beautiful incidents are ſometimes introduced, and the circumſtances of the perſons ſlain ſo much diverſified, as ſhow that he could have embelliſhed his military ſcenes with an abundant variety of particulars, if his genius had led him to to dwell upon them. One man "is ſtretched in the duſt of his native land; he fell, where often he had ſpread the feaſt, and often raiſed the voice of the harp." The maid of Iniſtore is introduced, in a moving apoſtrophe, as weeping for another; and a third, "as rolled in the duſt he lifted his faint eyes to the king," is remembered and mourned by Fingal as the friend of Agandecca. The blood pouring from the wound of one who is ſlain by night, is heard "hiſſing on the half extinguiſhed oak," which had been kindled for giving light: Another, climbing a tree to eſcape from his foe, is pierced by his ſpear from behind; "ſhrieking, panting he fell; whilſt moſs and withered branches

purſue his fall, and ſtrue the blue arms of Gaul." Never was a finer picture drawn of the ardour of two youthful warriors than the following: "I ſaw Gaul in his armour, and my ſoul was mixed with his: For the fire of the battle was in his eyes; he looked to the foe with joy. We ſpoke the words of friendſhip in ſecret; and the lightening of our ſwords poured together. We drew them behind the wood, and tried the ſtrength of our arms on the empty air."

Oſſian is always conciſe in his deſcriptions, which adds much to their beauty and force. For it is a great miſtake to imagine, that a crowd of particulars, or a very full and extended ſtyle, is of advantage to deſcription. On the contrary, ſuch a diffuſe manner for the moſt part weakens it. Any one redundant circumſtance is a nuiſance. It encumbers and loads the fancy, and renders the main image indiſtinct. "Obſtat," as Quintilian ſays with regard to ſtyle, "quicquid non adjuvat." To be conciſe in deſcription, is one thing; and to be general, is another. No deſcription that reſts in generals can poſſibly be good; it can convey no lively idea; for it is of particulars only that we have a diſtinct conception. But at the ſame time, no ſtrong imagination dwells long upon any one particular; or heaps together a maſs of trivial ones. By the happy choice of ſome one, or of a few that are the moſt ſtriking, it preſents the image more complete, ſhows us more at one glance, than a feeble imagination is able to do, by turning its object round and round into a variety of lights. Tacitus is of all proſe writers, the moſt conciſe. He has even a degree of abruptneſs in reſembling our author: Yet no writer is more eminent for lively deſcription. When Fingal, after having conquered the haughty Swaran, propoſes to diſmiſs him with honour: "Raiſe to-morrow thy white ſails to the wind, thou brother of Agandecca!" he conveys, by thus thus addreſſing his enemy, a ſtronger impreſſion of the emotions then paſſing within his mind, than if whole paragraphs had been ſpent in deſcribing the conflict between reſentment againſt Swaran and the tender remembrance of his ancient love. No amplification is needed to give us the moſt full idea of a hardy veteran, after the few following words: "His ſhield is marked with the ſtrokes of battle; his red eye deſpiſes danger." When Oſcar, left alone, was ſurrounded by foes, "he ſtood," it is ſaid, "growing in his place, like the flood of the narrow vale;" a happy repreſentation of one, who, by daring intrepidity in the midſt of danger, ſeems to increaſe in his appearance, and becomes more formidable every moment, like the ſudden riſing of the torrent hemmed in by the valley. And a whole crowd of ideas, concerning the circumſtances of domeſtic ſorrow occaſioned by a young warrior's firſt going forth to battle, is poured upon the mind by theſe words: "Calmar leaned on his father's ſpear; that ſpear which he brought from Lara's hall, when the ſoul of his mother was ſad."

The conciſeneſs of Oſſian's deſcriptions is the more proper on account of his ſubjects. Deſcriptions of gay and ſmiling ſcenes may, without any diſadvantage be amplified and prolonged. Force is not the predominant quality expected in theſe. The deſcription may be weakened by being diffuſe, yet notwithſtanding, may be beautiful ſtill. Whereas, with reſpect to grand, ſolemn, and pathetic ſubjects, which are Oſſian's chief field, the caſe is very different. In theſe, energy is above all things required. The imagination muſt be ſeized at once, or not at all; and is far more deeply impreſſed by one ſtrong and ardent image, than by the anxious minuteneſs of laboured illuſtration.

But

But Offian's genius, though chiefly turned towards the ſublime and pathetic, was not confined to it: In ſubjects alſo of grace and delicacy, he diſcovers the hand of a maſter. Take for an example the following elegant deſcription of Agandecca, wherein the tenderneſs of Tibullus ſeems united with the majeſty of Virgil. "The daughter of the ſnow overheard, and left the hall of her ſecret ſigh. She came in all her beauty; like the moon from the cloud of the eaſt. Lovelineſs was around her as light. Her ſteps were like the muſic of ſongs. She ſaw the youth and loved him. He was the ſtolen ſigh of her ſoul. Her blue eyes rolled on him in ſecret: And ſhe bleſt the chief of Morven." Several other inſtances might be produced of the feelings of love and friendſhip painted by our author with a moſt natural and happy delicacy.

The ſimplicity of Offian's manner adds great beauty to his deſcriptions, and indeed to his whole poetry. We meet with no affected ornaments; no forced refinement; no marks either in ſtyle or thought of a ſtudied endeavour to ſhine and ſparkle. Offian appears every where to be prompted by his feelings; and to ſpeak from the abundance of his heart. I remember no more than one inſtance of what can be called quaint thought in this whole collection of his works. It is in the firſt book of Fingal, where from the tomb of two lovers two lonely yews are mentioned to have ſprung, "whoſe branches wiſhed to meet on high." This ſympathy of the trees with the lovers, may be reckoned to border on an Italian conceit; and it is ſomewhat curious to find this ſingle inſtance of that ſort of wit in our Celtic poetry.

The "joy of grief," is one of Offian's remarkable expreſſions, ſeveral times repeated. If any one ſhall think that it needs to be juſtified by a precedent, he may find it twice twice uſed by Homer; in the Iliad, when Achilles is viſited by the ghoſt of Patroclus; and in the Odyſſey, when Ulyſſes meets his mother in the ſhades. On both theſe occaſions, the heroes, melted with tenderneſs, lament their not having it in their power to throw their arms round the ghoſt, "that we might," ſay they, "in a mutual embrace, enjoy the delight of grief."

—— κρυεροιο τεταρπωμεσθα γοοιο. *

But in truth the expreſſion ſtands in need of no defence from authority; for it is a natural and juſt expreſſion; and conveys a clear idea of that gratification, which a virtuous heart often feels in the indulgence of a tender melancholy. Oſſian makes a very proper diſtinction between this gratification, and the deſtructive effect of overpowering grief. "There is a joy in grief, when peace dwells in the breaſts of the ſad. But ſorrow waſtes the mournful, O daughter of Toſcar, and their days are few." To "give the joy of grief," generally ſignifies to raiſe the ſtrain of ſoft and grave muſic; and finely characteriſes the taſte of Oſſian's age and country. In thoſe days, when the ſongs of bards were the great delight of heroes, the tragic muſe was held in chief honour; gallant actions, and virtuous ſufferings, were the choſen theme; preferably to that light and trifling ſtrain of poetry and muſic, which promotes light and trifling manners, and ſerves to emaſculate the mind. "Strike the harp in my hall," ſaid the great Fingal, in the midſt of youth and victory, "Strike the harp in my hall, and let Fingal hear the ſong. Pleaſant is the joy of grief! It is like the ſhower of ſpring, when it ſoftens the branch of the oak; and the young leaf lifts its green head. Sing on, O bards! Tomorrow we lift the ſail †."

* Odyſſ. 11. 211. Iliad 23. 98.

Perſonal epithets have been much uſed by all the poets of the moſt ancient ages: and when well choſen, not general and unmeaning, they contribute not a little to render the ſtyle deſcriptive and animated. Beſides epithets founded on bodily diſtinctions, a-kin to many of Homer's, we find in Oſſian ſeveral which are remarkably beautiful and poetical. Such as, Oſcar of the future fights, Fingal of the mildeſt look, Carril of other times, the mildly bluſhing Everallin; Bragela, the lonely ſun-beam of Dunſcaich; a Culdee, the ſon of the ſecret cell.

But of all the ornaments employed in deſcriptive poetry compariſons or ſimilies are the moſt ſplendid. Theſe chiefly form what is called the imagery of a poem: And as they abound ſo much in the works of Oſſian, and are commonly among the favourite paſſages of all poets, it may be expected that I ſhould be ſomewhat particular in my remarks upon them.

A poetical ſimile always ſuppoſes two objects brought together, between which there is ſome near relation or connection in the fancy. What that relation ought to be, cannot be preciſely defined. For various, almoſt numberleſs, are the analogies formed among objects, by a ſprightly imagination. The relation of actual ſimilitude, or likeneſs of appearance, is far from being the only foundation of poetical compariſon. Sometimes a reſemblance in the effect produced by two objects, is made the connecting principle: Sometimes a reſemblance in one diſtinguiſhing property or circumſtance. Very often two objects are brought together in a ſimile, though they reſemble one another, ſtrictly ſpeaking, in nothing, only becauſe they raiſe in the mind a train of ſimilar, and what may be called, concordant ideas; ſo that the remembrance of the one, when recalled, ſerves to quicken and heighten the impreſſion made by the other. Thus, to give an inſtance from our poet, the pleaſure with which an old man looks back on the exploits of his youth, has certainly no direct reſemblance to the beauty of a fine evening; farther, than that both agree in producing a certain calm, placid joy. Yet Oſſian has founded upon this, one of the moſt beautiful compariſons that is to be met with in any poet. "Wilt thou not liſten, ſon of the rock, to the ſong of Oſſian? My ſoul is full of other times; the joy of my youth returns. Thus, the ſun appears in the weſt, after the ſteps of his brightneſs have moved behind a ſtorm. The green hills lift their dewy heads. The blue ſtreams rejoice in the vale. The aged hero comes forth on his ſtaff; and his gray hair glitters in the beam." Never was there a finer group of objects. It raiſes a ſtrong conception of the old man's joy and elation of heart, by diſplaying a ſcene, which produces in every ſpectator, a correſponding train of pleaſing emotions; the declining ſun looking forth in his brightneſs after a ſtorm; the cheerful face of all nature; and the ſtill life finely animated by the circumſtance of the aged hero, with his ſtaff and his gray locks; a circumſtance both extremely pictureſque in itſelf, and peculiarly ſuited to the main object of the compariſon. Such analogies and aſſociations of ideas as theſe, are highly pleaſing to the fancy. They give opportunity for introducing many a fine poetical picture. They diverſify the ſcene; they aggrandize the ſubject; they keep the imagination awake and ſprightly. For as the judgment is principally exerciſed in diſtinguiſhing objects, and remarking the differences among thoſe which ſeem like; ſo the higheſt amuſement of the imagination is to trace likeneſſes and agreements among thoſe which ſeem different.

The principal rules which reſpect poetical compariſons are, that they be introduced on proper occaſions, when the mind is diſpoſed to reliſh them; and not in the midſt of ſome ſevere and agitating paſſion, which cannot admit this play of fancy; that they be founded on a reſemblance neither too near and obvious, ſo as to give little amuſement to the imagination in tracing it, nor too faint and remote, ſo as to be apprehended with difficulty; that they ſerve either to illuſtrate the principal object, and to render the conception of it, more clear and diſtinct; or at leaſt, to heighten and embelliſh it, by a ſuitable aſſociation of images *.

Every country has a ſcenery peculiar to itſelf; and the imagery of a good poet will exhibit it. For as he copies after nature, his alluſions will of courſe be taken from thoſe objects which he ſees around him, and which have often ſtruck his fancy. For this reaſon, in order to judge of the propriety of poetical imagery, we ought to be, in ſome meaſure, acquainted with the natural hiſtory of the country where the ſcene of the poem is laid. The introduction of foreign images betrays a poet, copying not from nature, but from other writers. Hence ſo many Lions, and Tygers, and Eagles, and Serpents, which we meet with in the ſimilies of modern poets; as if theſe animals had acquired ſome right to a place in poetical compariſons for ever, becauſe employed by ancient authors. They employed them with propriety, as objects generally known in their country; but as they are abſurdly uſed for illuſtration by us, who know them only at ſecond hand, or by deſcription. To moſt readers of modern poetry, it were more to the purpoſe to deſcribe Lions or Tygers by ſimilies taken from men, than to compare men to Lions. Oſſian is very correct in this particular. His imagery is, without exception, copied from that face of nature, which he ſaw before his eyes; and by conſequence may be expected to be lively. We meet meet with no Grecian or Italian ſcenery; but with the miſts, and clouds, and ſtorms, of a northern mountainous region.

No poet abounds more in ſimilies than Oſſian. There are in this collection as many, at leaſt, as in the whole Iliad and Odyſſey of Homer. I am indeed inclined to think, that the works of both poets are too much crowded with them. Similies are ſparkling ornaments; and like all things that ſparkle, are apt to dazzle and tire us by their luſtre. But if Oſſian's ſimilies be too frequent, they have this advantage of being commonly ſhorter than Homer's; they interrupt his narration leſs; he juſt glances aſide to ſome reſembling object, and inſtantly returns to his former track. Homer's ſimilies include a wider range of objects. But in return, Oſſian's are, without exception, taken from objects of dignity, which cannot be ſaid for all thoſe which Homer employs. The Sun, the Moon, and the Stars, Clouds and Meteors, Lightning and Thunder, Seas and Whales, Rivers, Torrents, Winds, Ice, Rain, Snow, Dews, Miſt, Fire and Smoke, Trees and Foreſts, Heath and Graſs and Flowers, Rocks and Mountains, Muſic and Songs, Light and Darkneſs, Spirits and Ghoſts; theſe form the circle, within which Oſſian's comparifons generally run. Some, not many, are taken from Birds and Beaſts; as Eagles, Sea-Fowl, the Horſe, the Deer, and the Mountain Bee; and a very few from ſuch operations of art as were then known. Homer has diverſified his imagery by many more alluſions to the animal world; to Lions, Bulls, Goats, Herds of Cattle, Serpents, Inſects; and to the various occupations of rural and paſtoral life. Oſſian's defect in this article, is plainly owing to the deſart, uncultivated ſtate of his country, which ſuggeſted to him few images beyond natural inanimate objects, in their rudeſt form. The birds and animals of the country were probably not numerous; and his acquaintance quaintance with them was ſlender, as they were little ſubjected to the uſes of man.

The great objection made to Oſſian's imagery, is its uniformity, and the too frequent repetition of the ſame compariſons. In a work ſo thick ſown with ſimilies, one could not but expect to find images of the ſame kind ſometimes ſuggeſted to the poet by reſembling objects; eſpecially to a poet like Oſſian, who wrote from the immediate impulſe of poetical enthuſiaſm, and without much preparation of ſtudy or labour. Fertile as Homer's imagination is acknowledged to be, who does not know how often his Lions and Bulls, and Flocks of Sheep, recur with little or no variation; nay, ſometimes in the very ſame words? The objection made to Oſſian is, however, founded, in a great meaſure upon a miſtake. It has been ſuppoſed by inattentive readers, that wherever the Moon, the Cloud, or the Thunder, returns in a ſimile, it is the ſame ſimile, and the ſame Moon, or Cloud, or Thunder, which they had met with a few pages before. Whereas very often the ſimilies are widely different. The object, whence they are taken, is indeed in ſubſtance the ſame; but the image is new; for the appearance of the object is changed; it is preſented to the fancy in another attitude; and clothed with new circumſtances, to make it ſuit the different illuſtration for which it is employed. In this, lies Oſſian's great art; in ſo happily varying the form of the few natural appearances with which he was acquainted, as to make them correſpond to a great many different objects.

Let us take for one inſtance the Moon, which is very frequently introduced into his compariſons; as in northern climates, where the nights are long, the Moon is a greater object of attention, than in the climate of Homer; and let us view how much our poet has diverſified its appearance. The ſhield of a warrior is like "the darkened moon when it moves a dun circle through the heavens." The face of a ghoſt, wan and pale, is like "the beam of the ſetting moon." And a different appearance of a ghoſt, thin and indiſtinct, is like "the new moon ſeen through the gathered miſt, when the ſky pours down its flaky ſnow, and the world is ſilent and dark;" or in a different form ſtill, it is like "the watery beam of the moon, when it ruſhes from between two clouds, and the midnight ſhower is on the field." A very oppoſite uſe is made of the moon in the deſcription of Agandecca: "She came in all her beauty, like the moon from the cloud of the Eaſt." Hope, ſucceeded by diſappointment, is "joy riſing on her face, and ſorrow returning again, like a thin cloud on the moon." But when Swaran, after his defeat, is cheered by Fingal's generoſity, "His face brightened like the full moon of heaven, when the clouds vaniſh away, and leave her calm and broad in the midſt of the ſky." Venvela is "bright as the moon when it trembles over the weſtern wave;" but the ſoul of the guilty Uthal is "dark as the troubled face of the moon, when it foretels the ſtorm." And by a very fanciful and uncommon alluſion, it is ſaid of Cormac, who was to die in his early years, "Nor long ſhalt thou lift the ſpear, mildly ſhining beam of youth! Death ſtands dim behind thee, like the darkened half of the moon behind its growing light."

Another inſtance of the ſame nature may be taken from miſt, which, as being a very familiar appearance in the country of Oſſian, he applies to a variety of purpoſes, and purſues through a great many forms. Sometimes, which one would hardly expect, he employs it to heighten the appearance of a beautiful object. The hair of Morna is "like the miſt of Cromla, when it curls on the rock, and ſhines to the beam of the weſt"—"The ſong comes with its muſic to melt and pleaſe the ear. It is like ſoft miſt, that that rising from a lake pours on the silent vale. The green flowers are filled with dew. The sun returns in its strength, and the mist is gone." * But, for the most part, mist is employed as a similitude of some disagreeable or terrible object. "The soul of Nathos was sad, like the sun in the day of mist, when his face is watery and dim." "The darkness of old age comes like the mist of the desart." The face of a ghost is "pale as the mist of Cromla." "The gloom of battle is rolled along as mist that is poured on the valley, when storms invade the silent sun-shine of heaven." Fame suddenly departing, is likened to "mist that flies away before the rustling wind of the vale." A ghost, slowly vanishing, to "mist that melts by degrees on the sunny hill." Cairbar, after his treacherous assassination of Oscar, is compared to a pestilential fog. "I love a foe like Cathmor," says Fingal, "his soul is great; his arm is strong; his battles are full of fame. But the little soul is like a vapour that hovers round the marshy lake. It never rises on the green hill, lest the winds meet it there. Its dwelling is in the cave; and it sends forth the dart of death." This is a simile highly finished. But there is another which is still more striking, founded also on mist, in the fourth book of Temora. Two factious chiefs are contending; Cathmor the king interposes, rebukes and silences them. The poet intends

* There is a remarkable propriety in this comparison. It is intended to explain the effect of soft and mournful music. Armin appears disturbed at a performance of this kind. Carmor says to him, "Why bursts the sigh of Armin? Is there a cause to mourn? The song comes with its music to melt and please the ear. It is like soft mist, &c." that is, such mournful songs have a happy effect to soften the heart, and to improve it by tender emotions, as the moisture of the mist refreshes and nourishes the flowers; whilst the sadness they occasion is only transient, and soon dispelled by the succeeding occupations and amusements of life: "The sun returns in its strength, and the mist is gone."

intends to give us the higheſt idea of Cathmor's ſuperiority; and moſt effectually accompliſhes his intention by the following happy image. "They ſunk from the king on either ſide; like two columns of morning miſt, when the ſun riſes between them, on his glittering rocks. Dark is their rolling on either ſide; each towards its reedy pool." Theſe inſtances may ſufficiently ſhew with what richneſs of imagination Oſſian's compariſons abound, and at the ſame time, with what propriety of judgment they are employed. If his field was narrow, it muſt be admitted to have been as well cultivated as its extent would allow.

As it is uſual to judge of poets from a compariſon of their ſimilies more than of other paſſages, it will perhaps be agreeable to the reader, to ſee how Homer and Oſſian have conducted ſome images of the ſame kind. This might be ſhewn in many inſtances. For as the great objects of nature are common to the poets of all nations, and make the general ſtore-houſe of all imagery, the ground-work of their compariſons muſt of courſe be frequently the ſame. I ſhall ſelect only a few of the moſt conſiderable from both poets. Mr Pope's tranſlation of Homer can be of no uſe to us here.

The parallel is altogether unfair between proſe, and the impoſing harmony of flowing numbers. It is only by viewing Homer in the ſimplicity of a proſe tranſlation, that we can form any compariſon between the two bards.

The ſhock of two encountering armies, the noiſe and the tumult of battle, afford one of the moſt grand and awful ſubjects of deſcription; on which all epic poets have exerted their ſtrength. Let us firſt hear Homer. The following deſcription is a favourite one, for we find it twice repeated in the ſame words.* "When now the conflicting hoſts joined in the field of battle, then were mutually oppoſed ſhields, and ſwords, and the ſtrength of armed men. The boſſy bucklers were daſhed againſt each other. The univerſal tumult roſe. There were mingled the triumphant ſhouts and the dying groans of the victors and the vanquiſhed. The earth ſtreamed with blood. As when winter torrents, ruſhing from the mountains, pour into a narrow valley, their violent waters. They iſſue from a thouſand ſprings, and mix in the hollowed channel. The diſtant ſhepherd hears on the mountain, their roar from afar. Such was the terror and the ſhout of the engaging armies." In another paſſage, the poet, much in the manner of Oſſian, heaps ſimile on ſimile, to expreſs the vaſtneſs of the idea, with which his imagination ſeems to labour. "With a mighty ſhout the hoſts engage. Not ſo loud roars the wave of ocean, when driven againſt the ſhore by the whole force of the boiſterous north; not ſo loud in the woods of the mountain, the noiſe of the flame, when riſing in its fury to conſume the foreſt; not ſo loud the wind among the lofty oaks, when the wrath of the ſtorm rages; as was the clamour of the Greeks and Trojans, when, roaring terrible, they ruſhed againſt each other." *

To theſe deſcriptions and ſimilies, we may oppoſe the following from Oſſian, and leave the reader to judge between them. He will find images of the ſame kind employed; commonly leſs extended; but thrown forth with a glowing rapidity which characteriſes our poet. "As autumn's dark ſtorms pour from two echoing hills, towards each other, approached the heroes. As two dark ſtreams from high rocks meet, and mix, and roar on the plain; loud, rough, and dark in battle, meet Lochlin and Inisfail. Chief mixed his ſtrokes with chief, and man with man. Steel clanging, ſounded on ſteel. Helmets are cleft on on high; blood burſts and ſmokes around. As the troubled noiſe of the ocean, when roll the waves on high; as the laſt peal of the thunder of heaven, ſuch is the noiſe of battle. As roll a thouſand waves to the rock, ſo Swaran's hoſt came on; as meets a rock a thouſand waves, ſo Inisfail met Swaran. Death raiſes all his voices around, and mixes with the ſound of ſhields. The field echoes from wing to wing, as a hundred hammers that riſe by turns on the red ſon of the furnace. As a hundred winds on Morven; as the ſtreams of a hundred hills; as clouds fly ſucceſſive over heaven; or as the dark ocean aſſaults the ſhore of the deſart; ſo roaring, ſo vaſt, ſo terrible, the armies mixed on Lena's echoing heath." In ſeveral of theſe images, there is a remarkable ſimilarity to Homer's; but what follows is ſuperior to any compariſon that Homer uſes on this ſubject. "The groan of the people ſpread over the hills; it was like the thunder of night, when the cloud burſts on Cona; and a thouſand ghoſts ſhriek at once on the hollow wind." Never was an image of more awful ſublimity employed to heighten the terror of battle.

Both poets compare the appearance of an army approaching, to the gathering of dark clouds. "As when a ſhepherd," ſays Homer, "beholds from the rock a cloud borne along the ſea by the weſtern wind; black as pitch it appears from afar, ſailing over the ocean, and carrying the dreadful ſtorm. He ſhrinks at the ſight, and drives his flock into the cave: Such, under the Ajaces, moved on, the dark, the thickened phalanx to the war *."—"They came," ſays Oſſian, "over the deſart like ſtormy clouds, when the winds roll them over the heath; their edges are tinged with lightning; and the echoing groves foreſee the ſtorm." The edges of the cloud tinged with lightning, is a ſublime idea; but the ſhepherd and his flock, render Homer's ſimile more pictureſque. This is frequently the difference between the two poets. Oſſian gives no more than the main image, ſtrong and full. Homer adds circumſtances and appendages, which amuſe the fancy by enlivening the ſcenery.

Homer compares the regular appearance of an army, to "clouds that are ſettled on the mountain top, in the day of calmneſs, when the ſtrength of the north wind ſleeps*." Oſſian, with full as much propriety, compares the appearance of a diſordered army, to "the mountain cloud, when the blaſt hath entered its womb; and ſcatters the curling gloom on every ſide." Oſſian's clouds aſſume a great many forms; and, as we might expect from his climate, are a fertile ſource of imagery to him. "The warriors followed their chiefs, like the gathering of the rainy clouds, behind the red meteors of heaven." An army retreating without coming to action, is likened to "clouds, that having long threatened rain, retire ſlowly behind the hills." This picture of Oithona, after ſhe had determined to die, is lively and delicate. "Her ſoul was reſolved, and the tear was dried from her wildly-looking eye. A troubled joy roſe on her mind, like the red path of the lightning on a ſtormy cloud." The image alſo of the gloomy Cairbar, meditating in ſilence, the aſſaſſination of Oſcar, until the moment came when his deſigns were ripe for execution, is extremely noble, and complete in all its parts. "Cairbar heard their words in ſilence, like the cloud of a ſhower; it ſtands dark on Cromla, till the lightning burſts its ſide. The valley gleams with red light; the ſpirits of the ſtorm rejoice. So ſtood the ſilent king of Temora; at length his words are heard."

Homer's

* Iliad v. 522.

Homer's compariſon of Achilles to the Dog-Star is very ſublime. "Priam beheld him ruſhing along the plain, ſhining in his armour, like the ſtar of autumn; bright are its beams, diſtinguiſhed amidſt the multitude of ſtars in the dark hour of night. It riſes in its ſplendor; but its ſplendor is fatal; betokening to miſerable men, the deſtroying heat *." The firſt appearance of Fingal, is in like manner, compared by Oſſian, to a ſtar or meteor. "Fingal, tall in his ſhip, ſtretched his bright lance before him. Terrible was the gleam of his ſteel; it was like the green meteor of death, ſetting in the heath of Malmor, when the traveller is alone, and the broad moon is darkened in heaven." The hero's appearance in Homer, is more magnificent; in Oſſian, more terrible.

A tree cut down, or overthrown by a ſtorm, is a ſimilitude frequent among poets for deſcribing the fall of a warrior in battle. Homer employs it often. But the moſt beautiful, by far, of his compariſons founded on this object, indeed one of the moſt beautiful in the whole Iliad, is that on the death of Euphorbus. "He the young and verdant olive, which a man hath reared with care in a lonely field, where the ſprings of water bubble around it; it is fair and flouriſhing; it is fanned by the breath of all the winds, and loaded with white bloſſoms; when the ſudden blaſt of a whirlwind deſcending, roots it out from its bed, and ſtretches it on the duſt †." To this, elegant as it is, we may oppoſe the following ſimile of Oſſian's, relating to the death of the three ſons of Uſnoth. "They fell, like three young oaks which ſtood alone on the hill. The traveller ſaw the lovely trees, and wondered how they grew ſo lonely. The blaſt of the deſart came by night, and laid their green heads low. Next day he returned; but they were were withered, and the heath was bare." Malvina's allusion to the same object, in her lamentation over Oscar, is so exquisitely tender, that I cannot forbear giving it a place also. "I was a lovely tree in thy presence Oscar! with all my branches round me. But thy death came, like a blast from the desart, and laid my green head low. The spring returned with its showers; but no leaf of mine arose." Several of Ossian's similies taken from trees, are remarkably beautiful, and diversified with well chosen circumstances; such as that upon the death of Ryno and Orla: "They have fallen like the oak of the desart; when it lies across a stream, and withers in the wind of the mountains:" Or that which Ossian applies to himself; "I, like an ancient oak in Morven, moulder alone in my place; the blast hath lopped my branches away; and I tremble at the wings of the north."

As Homer exalts his heroes by comparing them to gods, Ossian makes the same use of comparisons taken from spirits and ghosts. Swaran "roared in battle, like the shrill spirit of a storm, that sits dim on the clouds of Gormal, and enjoys the death of the mariner." His people gathered around Erragon, "like storms around the ghost of night, when he calls them from the top of Morven, and prepares to pour them on the land of the stranger." "They fell before my son, like groves in the desart, when an angry ghost rushes through night, and takes their green heads in his hand." In such images, Ossian appears in his strength; for very seldom have supernatural beings been painted with so much sublimity, and such force of imagination, as by this poet. Even Homer, great as he is, must yield to him in similies formed upon these. Take, for instance, the following, which is the most remarkable of this kind in the Iliad. "Meriones followed Idomeneus to battle, like Mars the destroyer deſtroyer of men, when he ruſhes to war. Terror, his beloved ſon, ſtrong and fierce, attends him; who fills with diſmay, the moſt valiant hero. They come from Thracè, armed againſt the Ephyrians and Phlegyans; nor do they regard the prayers of either; but diſpoſe of ſucceſs at their will *." The idea here, is undoubtedly noble: but obſerve what a figure Oſſian ſets before the aſtoniſhed imagination, and with what ſublimely terrible circumſtances he has heightened it. "He ruſhed in the ſound of his arms, like the dreadful ſpirit of Loda, when he comes in the roar of a thouſand ſtorms, and ſcatters battles from his eyes. He ſits on a cloud over Lochlin's ſeas. His mighty hand is on his ſword. The winds lift his flaming locks. So terrible was Cuchullin in the day of his fame."

Homer's compariſons relate chiefly to martial ſubjects, to the appearances and motions of armies, the engagement and death of heroes, and the various incidents of war. In Oſſian, we find a greater variety of other ſubjects illuſtrated by ſimilies; particularly, the ſongs of bards, the beauty of women, the different circumſtances of old age, ſorrow, and private diſtreſs; which give occaſion to much beautiful imagery. What, for inſtance, can be more delicate and moving, than the following ſimile of Oithona's, in her lamentation, over the diſhonour ſhe had ſuffered? "Chief of Strumon," replied the ſighing maid, why didſt thou come over the dark blue wave to Nuath's mournful daughter? Why did not I paſs away in ſecret, like the flower of the rock, that lifts it fair head unſeen, and ſtrews its withered leaves on the blaſt?" The muſic of bards, a favourite object with Oſſian, is illuſtrated by a variety of the moſt beautiful appearances that are to be found in nature. It is compared to the calm ſhower of ſpring; ſpring; to the dews of the morning on the hill of roes; to the face of the blue and ſtill lake. Two ſimilies on this ſubject, I ſhall quote, becauſe they would do honour to any of the moſt celebrated claſſics. The one is; "Sit thou on the heath, O bard! and let us hear thy voice; it is pleaſant as the gale of the ſpring that ſighs on the hunter's ear, when he wakens from dreams of joy, and has heard the muſic of the ſpirits of the hill." The other contains a ſhort, but exquiſitely tender image, accompanied with the fineſt poetical painting. "The muſic of Carril was like the memory of joys that are paſt, pleaſant and mournful to the ſoul. The ghoſts of departed bards heard it from Slimora's ſide. Soft ſounds ſpread along the wood; and the ſilent valleys of night rejoice." What a figure would ſuch imagery and ſuch ſcenery have made, had they been preſented to us adorned with the ſweetneſs and harmony of the Virgilian numbers!

I have choſen all along to compare Oſſian with Homer, rather than Virgil, for an obvious reaſon. There is a much nearer correſpondence between the times and manners of the two former poets. Both wrote in an early period of ſociety; both are originals; both are diſtinguiſhed by ſimplicity, ſublimity, and fire. The correct elegance of Virgil, his artful imitation of Homer, the Roman ſtatelineſs which he every where maintains, admit no parallel with the abrupt boldneſs, and enthuſiaſtic warmth of the Celtic bard. In one article, indeed, there is a reſemblance. Virgil is more tender than Homer; and thereby agrees more with Oſſian; with this difference, that the feelings of the one are more gentle and poliſhed, thoſe of the other more ſtrong; the tenderneſs of Virgil ſoftens, that of Oſſian diſſolves and overcomes the heart.

A reſemblance

A reſemblance may be ſometimes obſerved between Oſſian's compariſons, and thoſe employed by the ſacred writers. They abound much in this figure, and they uſe it with the utmoſt propriety.* The imagery of Scripture exhibits a ſoil and climate altogether different from thoſe of Oſſian; a warmer country, a more ſmiling face of nature, the arts of agriculture and of rural life much farther advanced. The wine preſs, and the threſhing floor, are often preſented to us, the cedar and the palm-tree, the fragrance of perfumes, the voice of the turtle, and the beds of lilies. The ſimilies are, like Oſſian's, generally ſhort, touching on one point of reſemblance, rather than ſpread out into little epiſodes. In the following example may be perceived what inexpreſſible grandeur poetry receives from the intervention of the Deity. "The nations ſhall ruſh like the ruſhings of many waters; but God ſhall rebuke them, and they ſhall fly far off, and ſhall be chaſed as the chaff of the mountains before the wind, and like the down of the thiſtle before the whirlwind."†

Beſides formal compariſons, the poetry of Oſſian is embelliſhed with many beautiful metaphors: Such as that remarkably fine one applied to Deugala; "She was covered with the light of beauty; but her heart was the houſe of pride." This mode of expreſſion, which ſuppreſſes the mark of compariſon, and ſubſtitutes a figured deſcription in room of the object deſcribed, is a great enlivener of ſtyle. It denotes that glow and rapidity of fancy, which without pauſing to form a regular ſimile, paints the object at one ſtroke. "Thou art to me the beam of the eaſt, riſing in a land unknown."—"In peace, thou art the gale of ſpring; in war, the mountain ſtorm." "Pleaſant be thy reſt, O lovely beam, ſoon haſt thou ſet on our hills! the ſteps of thy departure were ſtately, like the moon on the blue trembling wave. But thou haſt left us in darkneſs, firſt of the maids of Lutha! Soon haſt thou ſet, Malvina! but thou riſeſt, like the beam of the eaſt, among the ſpirits of thy friends, where they ſit in their ſtormy halls, the chambers of the thunder." This is correct and finely ſupported. But in the following inſtance, the metaphor, though very beautiful at the beginning, becomes imperfect before it cloſes, by being improperly mixed with the literal ſenſe. "Trathal went forth with the ſtream of his people; but they met a rock; Fingal ſtood unmoved; broken they rolled back from his ſide. Nor did they roll in ſafety; the ſpear of the king purſued their flight."

* See Dr Lowth de Sacra Poeſi Hebræorum.

The hyperbole is a figure which we might expect to find often employed by Oſſian; as the undiſciplined imagination of early ages generally prompts exaggeration, and carries its objects to exceſs; whereas longer experience, and farther progreſs in the arts of life, chaſten men's ideas and expreſſions. Yet Oſſian's hyperboles appear not to me, either ſo frequent or ſo harſh as might at firſt have been looked for; an advantage owing no doubt to the more cultivated ſtate, in which, as was before ſhewn, poetry ſubſiſted among the ancient Celtæ, than among moſt other barbarous nations. One of the moſt exaggerated deſcriptions in the whole work, is what meets us at the beginning of Fingal, where the ſcout makes his report to Cuchullin of the landing of the foe. But this is ſo far from deſerving cenſure that it merits praiſe, as being, on that occaſion, natural and proper. The ſcout arrives, trembling and full of fears; and it is well known, that no paſſion diſpoſes men to hyperboliſe more than terror. It both annihilates themſelves in their own apprehenſion, and magnifies every object which they view through the medium medium of a troubled imagination. Hence all thoſe indiſtinct images of formidable greatneſs, the natural marks of a diſturbed and confuſed mind, which occur in Moran's deſcription of Swaran's appearance, and in his relation of the conference which they held together; not unlike the report, which the affrighted Jewiſh ſpies made to their leader of the land of Canaan. "The land through which we have gone to ſearch it, is a land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof; and all the people that we ſaw in it, are men of a great ſtature: and there ſaw we giants, the ſons of Anak, which come of the giants; and we were in our own ſight as graſshoppers, and ſo were we in their ſight." *

With regard to perſonifications, I formerly obſerved that Oſſian was ſparing, and I accounted for his being ſo. Allegorical perſonages he has none; and their abſence is not to be regretted. For the intermixture of thoſe ſhadowy beings, which have not the ſupport even of mythological or legendary belief, with human actors, ſeldom produces a good effect. The fiction becomes too viſible and fantaſtic; and overthrows that impreſſion of reality, which the probable recital of human actions is calculated to make upon the mind. In the ſerious and pathetic ſcenes of Oſſian eſpecially, allegorical characters would have been as much out of place, as in Tragedy; ſerving only unſeaſonably to amuſe the fancy, whilſt they ſtopped the current, and weakened the force of paſſion.

With apoſtrophes, or addreſſes to perſons abſent or dead, which have been, in all ages, the language of paſſion, our poet abounds; and they are among his higheſt beauties. Witneſs the apoſtrophe, in the firſt book of Fingal, to the maid of Iniſtore, whoſe lover had fallen in battle; and that inimitably fine one of Cuchullin to Bragela at the concluſion of the ſame book. He commands the harp to be ſtruck in her praiſe; and the mention of Bragela's name, immediately ſuggeſting to him a crowd of tender ideas; "Doſt thou raiſe thy fair face from the rocks, he exclaims, to find the ſails of Cuchullin? The ſea is rolling far diſtant, and its white foam ſhall deceive thee for my ſails." And now his imagination being wrought up to conceive her as, at that moment, really in this ſituation, he becomes afraid of the harm ſhe may receive from the inclemency of the night; and with an enthuſiaſm, happy and affecting, though beyond the cautious ſtrain of modern poetry, "Retire," he proceeds, "retire, for it is night, my love, and the dark winds ſigh in thy hair. Retire to the hall of my feaſts, and think of the times that are paſt; for I will not return till the ſtorm of war has ceaſed. O Connal, ſpeak of wars and arms, and ſend her from my mind; for lovely with her raven hair is the white-boſomed daughter of Sorglan." This breathes all the native ſpirit of paſſion and tenderneſs.

The addreſſes to the ſun, to the moon, and to the evening ſtar, muſt draw the attention of every reader of taſte, as among the moſt ſplendid ornaments of this collection. The beauties of each are too great, and too obvious to need any particular comment. In one paſſage only of the addreſs to the moon, there appears ſome obſcurity. "Whither doſt thou retire from thy courſe, when the darkneſs of thy countenance grows? Haſt thou thy hall like Oſſian? Dwelleſt thou in the ſhadow of grief? Have thy ſiſters fallan from heaven? Are they who rejoiced with thee at night, no more? Yes, they have fallen, fair light! and thou doſt often retire to mourn." We may be at a loſs to comprehend, at firſt view, the ground of theſe ſpeculations of Oſſian, concerning the moon; but when all the circumſtances are attended to, they will appear to flow naturally from the preſent ſituation of his mind. A mind under the dominion of any ſtrong paſſion, tinctures with its own diſpoſition, every object which it beholds. The old bard, with his heart bleeding for the loſs of all his friends, is meditating on the different phaſes of the moon. Her waning and darkneſs, preſents to his melancholy imagination, the image of ſorrow; and preſently the idea ariſes, and is indulged, that, like himſelf, ſhe retires to mourn over the loſs of other moons, or of ſtars, whom he calls her ſiſters, and fancies to have once rejoiced with her at night, now fallen from heaven. Darkneſs ſuggeſted the idea of mourning, and mourning ſuggeſted nothing ſo naturally to Oſſian, as the death of beloved friends. An inſtance preciſely ſimilar of this influence of paſſion, may be ſeen in a paſſage which has always been admired of Shakeſpeare's King Lear. The old man on the point of diſtraction, through the inhumanity of his daughters, ſees Edgar appear diſguiſed like a beggar and a madman.

Lear. Didſt thou give all to thy daughters? And art thou come to this?

Couldeſt thou leave nothing? Didſt thou give them all?

Kent. He hath no daughters, Sir.

Lear. Death, traitor! nothing could have ſubdued nature,

To ſuch a lowneſs, but his unkind daughters.

King Lear, Act 3. Scene 5.

The apoſtrophe to the winds, in the opening of Darthula, is in the higheſt ſpirit of poetry. "But the winds deceive thee, O Darthula: and deny the woody Etha to thy ſails. Theſe are not thy mountains, Nathos, nor is that the roar of thy climbing waves. The halls of Cairbar are near, and the towers of the foe lift their head. Where have ye been, ye ſouthern winds; when the ſons of my love were deceived?

deceived? But ye have been ſporting on plains, and purſuing the thiſtle's beard. O that ye had been ruſtling in the ſails of Nathos, till the hills of Etha roſe! till they roſe in their clouds, and ſaw their coming chief." This paſſage is remarkable for the reſemblance it bears to an expoſtulation with the wood nymphs, on their abſence at a critical time; which, as a favourite poetical idea, Virgil has copied from Theocritus, and Milton has very happily imitated from both.

Where were ye, nymphs! when the remorſeleſs deep Clos'd o'er the head of your lov'd Lycidas?
For neither were ye playing on the ſteep
Where your old bards, the famous Druids, lie;
Nor on the ſhaggy top of Mona, high,
Nor yet where Deva ſpreads her wizard ſtream *.

Having now treated fully of Oſſian's talents, with reſpect to deſcription and imagery, it only remains to make ſome obſervations on his ſentiments. No ſentiments can be beautiful without being proper; that is, ſuited to the character and ſituation of thoſe who utter them. In this reſpect, Oſſian is as correct as moſt writers. His characters, as above obſerved, are in general well ſupported; which could not have been the caſe, had the ſentiments been unnatural or out of place. A variety of perſonages of different ages, ſexes, and conditions, are introduced into his poems; and they ſpeak and act with a propriety of ſentiment and behaviour, which it is ſurpriſing to find in ſo rude an age. Let the poem of Darthula, throughout, be taken as an example.

But it is not enough that ſentiments be natural and proper.

per. In order to acquire any high degree of poetical merit, they muſt alſo be ſublime and pathetic.

The ſublime is not confined to ſentiment alone. It belongs to deſcription alſo; and whether in deſcription or in ſentiment, imports ſuch ideas preſented to the mind, as raiſe it to an uncommon degree of elevation, and fill it with admiration and aſtoniſhment. This is the higheſt effect either of eloquence or poetry: And to produce this effect, requires a genius glowing with the ſtrongeſt and warmeſt conception of ſome object awful, great, or magnificent. That this character of genius belongs to Oſſian, may, I think, ſufficiently appear from many of the paſſages I have already had occaſion to quote. To produce more inſtances, were ſuperfluous. If the engagement of Fingal with the ſpirit of Loda, in Carric-thura; if the encounters of the armies, in Fingal; if the addreſs to the ſun, in Carthon; if the ſimilies founded upon ghoſts and ſpirits of the night, all formerly mentioned, be not admitted as examples, and illuſtrious ones too, of the true poetical ſublime, I confeſs myſelf entirely ignorant of this quality in writing.

All the circumſtances, indeed, of Oſſian's compoſition, are favourable to the ſublime, more perhaps than to any other ſpecies of beauty. Accuracy and correctneſs; artfully connected narration; exact method and proportion of parts, we may look for in poliſhed times. The gay and the beautiful, will appear to more advantage in the midſt of ſmiling ſcenery and pleaſurable themes. But amidſt the rude ſcenes of nature, amidſt rocks and torrents, and whirlwinds and battles, dwells the ſublime. It is the thunder and the lightning of genius. It is the offspring of nature, not of art. It is negligent of all the leſſer graces, and perfectly conſiſtent with a certain noble diſorder. It aſſociates naturally with that grave and ſolemn ſpirit, which diſtinguiſhes our author.

For

For the ſublime, is an awful and ſerious emotion; and is heightened by all the images of Trouble, and Terror, and Darkneſs.

Ipſe pater, media nimborum in nocte, coruſca

Simplicity and conciſeneſs, are never-failing characteriſtics of the ſtyle of a ſublime writer. He reſts on the majeſty of his ſentiments, not on the pomp of his expreſſions. The main ſecret of being ſublime, is to ſay great things in few, and in plain words: For every ſuperfluous decoration degrades a ſublime idea. The mind riſes and ſwells, when a lofty deſcription or ſentiment is preſented to it, in its native form. But no ſooner does the poet attempt to ſpread out this ſentiment or deſcription, and to deck it round and round with glittering ornaments, than the mind begins to fall from its high elevation; the tranſport is over; the beautiful may remain, but the ſublime is gone. Hence the conciſe and ſimple ſtyle of Oſſian, gives great advantage to his ſublime conceptions; and aſſiſts them in ſeizing the imagination with full power *.

Sublimity

* The noted ſaying of Julius Cæſar, to the pilot in a ſtorm; "Quid times? Cæſarem vehis;" is magnanimous and ſublime. Lucan, not ſatisfied with this ſimple conciſeneſs, reſolved to amplify and improve the thought. Obſerve, how every time he twiſts it round, it departs farther from the ſublime, till, at laſt, it ends in tumid declamation.

Sublimity as belonging to ſentiment, coincides in a great meaſure with magnanimity, heroiſm, and generoſity of ſentiment. Whatever diſcovers human nature in its greateſt elevation; whatever beſpeaks a high effort of ſoul; or ſhews a mind ſuperior to pleaſures, to dangers, and to death, forms what may be called the moral or ſentimental ſublime. For this, Oſſian is eminently diſtinguiſhed. No poet maintains a higher tone of virtuous and noble ſentiment, throughout all his works. Particularly in all the ſentiments of Fingal, there is a grandeur and loftineſs proper to ſwell the higheſt ideas of human perfection. Wherever he appears, we behold the hero. The objects which he purſues, are always truly great; to bend the proud; to protect the injured; to defend his friends; to overcome his enemies by generoſity more than by force. A portion of the ſame ſpirit actuates all the other heroes. Valour reigns; but it is a generous valour, void of cruelty, animated by honour, not by hatred. We behold no debaſing paſſions among Fingal's warriors; no ſpirit of avarice or of inſult; but a perpetual contention for fame; a deſire of being diſtinguiſhed and remembered for gallant actions; a love of juſtice; and a zealous attachment to their friends and their country. Such is the ſtrain of ſentiment in the works of Oſſian.

But the ſublimity of moral ſentiments, if they wanted the ſoftening of the tender, would be in hazard of giving a hard and ſtiff air to poetry. It is not enough to admire. Admiration is a cold feeling, in compariſon of that deep intereſt, which the heart takes in tender and pathetic ſcenes;

Tutela ſecure mea. Coeli iſte fretique,
Non puppis noſtræ, labor eſt. Hanc Cæſare preſſam
A fluctu defendit onus.
——Quid tanta ſtrage paratur,
Ignoras? Quærit pelagi cælique tumultu
Quid præſtet fortuna mihi.——

PHARSAL. V. 578.

where, by a myſterious attachment to the objects of compaſſion, we are pleaſed and delighted, even whilſt we mourn. With ſcenes of this kind, Oſſian abounds; and his high merit in theſe, is inconteſtable. He may be blamed for drawing tears too often from our eyes; but that he has the power of commanding them, I believe no man, who has the leaſt ſenſibility, will queſtion. The general character of his poetry, is the heroic, mixed with the elegiac ſtrain; admiration tempered with pity. Ever fond of giving, as he expreſſes it, "the joy of grief," it is viſible, that on all moving ſubjects, he delights to exert his genius; and accordingly, never were there finer pathetic ſituations, than what his works preſent. His great art in managing them lies in giving vent to the ſimple and natural emotions of the heart. We meet with no exaggerated declamation; no ſubtile refinements on ſorrow; no ſubſtitution of deſcription in place of paſſion. Oſſian felt ſtrongly himſelf; and the heart when uttering its native language never fails, by powerful ſympathy, to affect the heart. A great variety of examples might be produced. We need only open the book to find them every where. What, for inſtance, can be more moving, than the lamentations of Oithono, after her misfortune? Gaul, the ſon of Morni, her lover, ignorant of what ſhe had ſuffered, comes to her reſcue. Their meeting is tender in the higheſt degree. He propoſes to engage her foe, in ſingle combat, and gives her in charge what ſhe is to do, if he himſelf ſhall fall. "And ſhall the daughter of Nuath live, ſhe replied with a burſting ſigh? Shall I live in Tromathon and the ſon of Morni low? My heart is not of that rock; nor my ſoul careleſs as that ſea, which lifts its blue waves to every wind, and rolls beneath the ſtorm. The blaſt, which ſhall lay thee low, ſhall ſpread the branches of Oithona on earth. We ſhall wither together, ſon of carborne Morni! The narrow houſe is pleaſant to me; and the gray ſtone of the dead; for never more will I leave thy rocks, ſea-ſurrounded Tromathon! Chief of Strumon, why cameſt thou over the waves to Nuath's mournful daughter? Why did not I paſs away in ſecret like the flower of the rock, that lifts its fair head unſeen, and ſtrews its withered leaves on the blaſt! Why didſt thou come, O Gaul! to hear my departing ſigh? O had I dwelt at Duvranna, in the bright beams of my fame! Then had my years come on with joy; and the virgins would bleſs my ſteps. But I fall in my youth, ſon of Morni, and my father ſhall bluſh in his hall."

Oithona mourns like a woman; in Cuchullin's expreſſions of grief after his defeat, we behold the ſentiments of a hero, generous but deſponding. The ſituation is remarkably fine. Cuchullin, rouſed from his cave, by the noiſe of battle, ſees Fingal victorious in the field. He is deſcribed as kindling at the ſight. "His hand is on the ſword, of his fathers his red-rolling eyes on the foe. He thrice attempted to ruſh to battle; and thrice did Connal ſtop him;" ſuggeſting, that Fingal was routing the foe; and that he ought not, by the ſhow of ſuperfluous aid, to deprive the king of any part of the honour of a victory, which was owing to him alone. Cuchullin yields to this generous ſentiment; but we ſee it ſtinging him to the heart with the ſenſe of his own diſgrace. "Then, Carril, go, replied the chief, and greet the king of Morven. When Lochlin falls away like a ſtream after rain, and the noiſe of the battle is over, then be thy voice ſweet in his ear, to praiſe the king of ſwords. Give him the ſword of Caithbat; for Cuchullin is worthy no more to lift the arms of his fathers. But, O ye ghoſts of the lonely Cromla! Ye ſouls of chiefs that are no more! Be ye the companions of Cuchullin, and talk to him in the cave of his ſorrow. For never more ſhall I be renowned among the mighty in the land. I am like a beam that has ſhone: Like a miſt that has fled away; when the blaſt of the morning came, and brightened the ſhaggy ſide of the hill. Connal! talk of arms no more: Departed is my fame. My ſighs ſhall be on Cromla's wind; till my footſteps ceaſe to be ſeen. And thou, white-boſomed Bragela! mourn over the fall of my fame; for vanquiſhed, I will never return to thee, thou ſun-beam of Dunſcaich!"

— — — — — — — — Æſtuat Ingens
Uno in corde pudor, luctuſque, et conſcia virtus.

Beſides ſuch extended pathetic ſcenes, Oſſian frequently pierces the heart by a ſingle unexpected ſtroke. When Oſcar fell in battle, "No father mourned his ſon ſlain in youth; no brother, his brother of love; they fell without tears, for the chief of the people was low." In the admirable interview of Hector with Andromache, in the ſixth Iliad, the circumſtance of the child in his nurſe's arms, has often been remarked, as adding much to the tenderneſs of the ſcene. In the following paſſage relating to the death of Cuchullin, we find a circumſtance that muſt ſtrike the imagination with ſtill greater force. "And is the ſon of Semo fallen? ſaid Carril with a ſigh. Mournful are Tura's walls, and ſorrow dwells at Dunſcaich. Thy ſpouſe is left alone in her youth; the ſon of thy love is alone. He ſhall come to Bragela, and aſk her why ſhe wept. He ſhall lift his eyes to the wall, and ſee his father's ſword. Whoſe ſword is that? he will ſay; and the ſoul of his mother is ſad." Soon after Fingal had ſhewn all the grief of a father's heart for Ryno, one of his ſons, fallen in battle, he is calling, after his accuſtomed manner, his ſons to the chaſe. "Call," ſays he "Fillan and Ryno—but he is not here here—My ſon reſts on the bed of death." This unexpected ſtart of anguiſh is worthy of the higheſt tragic poet,

If ſhe come in, ſhe'll ſure ſpeak to my wife—
My wife!—my wife—What wife?—I have no wife—
Oh inſupportable! Oh heavy hour!

Othello, Act 5. Scene 7.

The contrivance of the incident in both poets is ſimilar; but the circumſtances are varied with judgment. Othello dwells upon the name of wife, when it had fallen from him, with the confuſion and horror of one tortured with guilt. Fingal, with the dignity of a hero, corrects himſelf, and ſuppreſſes his riſing grief.

The contraſt which Oſſian frequently makes between his preſent and his former ſtate, diffuſes over his whole poetry, a ſolemn pathetic air, which cannot fail to make impreſſion on every heart. The concluſion of the ſongs of Selma, is particularly calculated for this purpoſe. Nothing can be more poetical and tender, or can leave upon the mind, a ſtronger, and more affecting idea of the venerable aged bard. "Such were the words of the bards in the days of the ſong; when the king heard the muſic of harps, and the tales of other times. The chiefs gathered from all their hills, and heard the lovely ſound. They praiſed the voice of Cona*; the firſt among a thouſand bards. But age is now on my tongue, and my ſoul has failed. I hear, ſometimes, the ghoſts of bards, and learn their pleaſant ſong. But memory fails on my mind; I hear the call of years. They ſay, as they paſs along; Why does Oſſian ſing? Soon ſhall he lie in the narrow houſe, and no bard ſhall raiſe his fame. Roll on, ye dark-brown years! for ye bring no joy in your courſe. Let the tomb open to Oſſian, for his ſtrength has failed.

failed. The ſons of the ſong are gone to reſt. My voice remains, like a blaſt, that roars lonely on a ſea-ſurrounded rock, after the winds are laid. The dark moſs whiſtles there, and the diſtant mariner ſees the waving trees."

Upon the whole; if to feel ſtrongly, and to deſcribe naturally, be the two chief ingredients in poetical genius, Oſſian, muſt after fair examination, be held to poſſeſs that genius in a high degree. The queſtion is not, whether a few improprieties may be pointed out in his works; whether this, or that paſſage, might not have been worked up with more art and ſkill, by ſome writer of happier times? A thouſand ſuch cold and frivolous criticiſms, are altogether indeciſive as to his genuine merit. But, has he the ſpirit, the fire, the inſpiration of a poet? Does he utter the voice of nature? Does he elevate by his ſentiments? Does he intereſt by his deſcriptions? Does he paint to the heart as well as to the fancy? Does he make his readers glow, and tremble, and weep? Theſe are the great characteriſtics of true poetry. Where theſe are found, he muſt be a minute critic indeed, who can dwell upon ſlight defects. A few beauties of this high kind, tranſcend whole volumes of faultleſs mediocrity. Uncouth and abrupt, Oſſian may ſometimes appear by reaſon of his conciſeneſs. But he is ſublime, he is pathetic, in an eminent degree. If he has not the extenſive knowledge, the regular dignity of narration, the fulneſs and accuracy of deſcription, which we find in Homer and Virgil, yet in ſtrength of imagination, in grandeur of ſentiment, in native majeſty of paſſion, he is fully their equal. If he flows not always like a clear ſtream, yet he breaks forth often like a torrent of fire. Of art too, he is far from being deſtitute; and his imagination is remarkable for delicacy as well as ſtrength. Seldom or never is he either trifling or tedious; and if he be thought too melancholy, yet he is always moral. Though his merit were in other reſpects much leſs than it is, this alone ought to entitle him to high regard, that his writings are remarkably favourable to virtue. They awake the tendereſt ſympathies, and inſpire the moſt generous emotions. No reader can riſe from him, without being warmed with the ſentiments of humanity, virtue, and honour.

Though unacquainted with the original language, there is no one but muſt judge the tranſlation to deſerve the higheſt praiſe, on account of its beauty and elegance.

Of its faithfulneſs and accuracy, I have been aſſured by perſons ſkilled in the Galic tongue, who, from their youth, were acquainted with many of theſe poems of Oſſian. To tranſfuſe ſuch ſpirited and fervid ideas from one language into another; to tranſlate literally, and yet with ſuch a glow of poetry; to keep alive ſo much paſſion, and ſupport ſo much dignity throughout, is one of the moſt difficult works of genius, and proves the tranſlator to have been animated with no ſmall portion of Oſſian's ſpirit.

The meaſured proſe which he has employed, poſſeſſes conſiderable advantages above any ſort of verſification he could have choſen. Whilſt it pleaſes and fills the ear with a variety of harmonious cadences, being, at the ſame time, freer from conſtraint in the choice and arrangement of words, it allows the ſpirit of the original to be exhibited with more juſtneſs, force, and ſimplicity. Elegant, however, and maſterly as Mr Macpherſon's tranſlation is, we muſt never forget, whilſt we read it, that we are putting the merit of the original to a ſevere teſt. For, we are examining a poet ſtripped of his native dreſs: diveſted of the harmony of his own numbers. We know how much grace and energy the works of the Greek and Latin poets receive from the charm of verſification in their original languages. If, then, deſtitute of this advantage, exhibited in a literal verſion, Oſſian ſtill has power to pleaſe as a poet; and not to pleaſe only, but often to command, to tranſport, to melt the heart; we may very ſafely infer, that his productions are the offspring of true and uncommon genius; and we may boldly aſſign him a place among thoſe whoſe works are to laſt for ages.

APPENDIX.

THE ſubſtance of the preceding Diſſertation was originally delivered, ſoon after the firſt publication of Fingal, in the courſe of my Lectures in the Univerſity of Edinburgh; and at the deſire of ſeveral of the hearers, was afterwards enlarged and given to the Public.

As the degree of antiquity belonging to the Poems of Oſſian, appeared to be a point which might bear diſpute, I endeavoured, from internal evidence, to ſhow that theſe poems muſt be referred to a very remote period; without pretending to aſcertain preciſely the date of their compoſition. I had not the leaſt ſuſpicion, when this Diſſertation was firſt publiſhed, that there was any occaſion for ſupporting their authenticity, as genuine productions of the Highlands of Scotland, as tranſlations from the Galic language; not forgeries of a ſuppoſed tranſlator. In Scotland, their authenticity was never called in queſtion. I myſelf had particular reaſons to be fully ſatisfied concerning it. My knowledge of Mr Macpherſon's perſonal honour and integrity, gave me full aſſurance of his being incapable of putting ſuch a groſs impoſition, firſt, upon his friends, and then upon the public; and if this had not been ſufficient, I knew, beſides, that the manner in which theſe poems were brought to light, was entirely inconſiſtent with any fraud. An accidental converſation with a gentleman diſtinguiſhed in the literary world, gave occaſion to Mr Macpherſon's tranſlating literally one or two ſmall pieces of the old Galic poetry. Theſe being ſhown to me and ſome others, rendered us very deſirous of becoming more acquainted with that poetry. Mr Macpherſon, afraid of not doing juſtice to compoſitions which he admired in the original, was very backward to undertake the taſk of tranſlating; and the publication of The Fragments of Ancient Poems, was, with no ſmall importunity, extorted from him. The high reputation which theſe preſently acquired, made it, he thought, unjuſt that the world ſhould be deprived of the poſſeſſion of more, if more of the ſame kind could be recovered: And Mr Macpherſon was warmly urged by ſeveral gentlemen of rank and taſte, to diſengage himſelf from other occupations, and to undertake a journey through the Highlands and Illands, on purpoſe to make a collection of thoſe curious remains of ancient genius. He complied with their deſires, and ſpent ſeveral months in viſiting thoſe remote parts of the country; during which time he correſponded frequently with his friends in Edinburgh, informed them of his progreſs, of the applications which he made in different quarters, and of the ſucceſs which he met with; ſeveral letters of his, and of thoſe who aſſiſted him in making diſcoveries paſſed through my hands; his undertaking was the object of conſiderable attention; and returning at laſt, fraught with the poetical treaſures of the north, he ſet himſelf to tranſlate under the eye of ſome who were acquainted with the Galic language, and looked into his manuſcripts; and, by a large publication, made an appeal to all the natives of the Highlands and Iſlands of Scotland, whether he had been faithful to his charge, and done juſtice to their well known and favourite poems.

Such a tranſaction certainly did not afford any favourable opportunity for carrying on an impoſture. Yet in England, it ſeems, an opinion has prevailed with ſome, that an impoſture has been carried on; that the poems which have been given to the world are not tranſlations of the works of any old Galic Bard, but modern compoſitions, formed, as it is ſaid, upon a higher plan of poetry and ſentiment than could belong to an age and a country reputed barbarous: And I have been called upon and urged to produce ſome evidence for ſatisfying the world that they are not the compoſitions of Mr Macpherſon himſelf, under the borrowed name of Oſſian.

If the queſtion had been concerning manuſcripts brought from ſome diſtant or unknown region, with which we had no intercourſe; or concerning tranſlations from an Aſiatic or American language which ſcarce any body underſtood, ſuſpicions might naturally have ariſen, and an author's aſſertions have been anxiouſly and ſcrupulouſly weighed. But in the caſe of a literal tranſlation, profeſſed to be given of old traditionary poems of our own country; of poems aſſerted to be known in the original to many thouſand inhabitants of Great Britain, and illuſtrated too by many of their current tales and ſtories concerning them, ſuch extreme ſcepticiſm is altogether out of place. For who would have been either ſo hardy or ſo ſtupid, as to attempt a forgery which could not have failed of being immediately detected? Either the author muſt have had the influence to engage, as confederates in the fraud, all the natives of the Highlands and Iſlands, diſperſed as they are throughout every corner of the Britiſh dominions; or, we ſhould, long ere this time, have heard their united voice exclaiming, "Theſe are not our poems, nor what we were ever accuſtomed tomed to hear from our bards or our fathers." Such remonſtrances would, at leaſt, have reached thoſe who dwell in a part of the country which is adjacent to the Highlands; and muſt have come loud to the ears of ſuch, eſpecially, as were known to be the promoters of Mr Macpherſon's undertaking. The ſilence of a whole country in this caſe, and of a country, whoſe inhabitants are well known to be attached, in a remarkable degree, to all their own antiquities, is of as much weight as a thouſand poſitive teſtimonies. And ſurely, no perſon of common underſtanding would have adventured, as Mr Macpherſon has done, in his diſſertation on Temora, to engage in a controverſy with the whole Iriſh nation concerning theſe poems, and to inſiſt upon the honour of them being due to Scotland, if they had been mere forgeries of his own; which the Scots, in place of ſupporting ſo ridiculous a claim, muſt have inſtantly rejected.

But as reaſoning alone is apt not to make much impreſſion, where ſuſpicions have been entertained concerning a matter of fact, it was thought proper to have recourſe to expreſs teſtimonies. I have accordingly applied to ſeveral perſons of credit and honour, both gentlemen of fortune, and clergymen of the eſtabliſhed church, who are natives of the Highlands or Iſlands of Scotland, and well acquainted with the language of the country, deſiring to know their real opinion of the tranſlations publiſhed by Mr Macpherſon. Their original letters to me, in return, are in my poſſeſſion. I ſhall give a fair and faithful account of the reſult of their teſtimony: And I have full authority to uſe the names of thoſe gentlemen for what I now advance.

I muſt begin with affirming, that though among thoſe with whom I have correſponded, ſome have had it in their power to be more particular and explicit in their teſtimony than others; there is not, however, one perſon, who inſinuates the moſt remote ſuſpicion that Mr Macpherſon has either forged, or adulterated any one of the poems he has publiſhed. If they make any complaints of him, it is on account of his having omitted other poems which they think of equal merit with any which he has publiſhed. They all, without exception, concur in holding his tranſlations to be genuine, and proceed upon their authenticity as a fact acknowledged throughout all thoſe Northern Provinces; aſſuring me that any one would be expoſed to ridicule among them, who ſhould call it in queſtion. I muſt obſerve, that I had no motive to direct my choice of the perſons to whom I applied for information preferably to others, except their being pointed out to me, as the perſons in their different counties who were moſt likely to give light on this head.

With regard to the manner in which the originals of theſe poems have been preſerved and tranſmitted, which has been repreſented as ſo myſterious and inexplicable, I have received the following plain account: That until the preſent century, almoſt every great family in the Highlands had their own bard, to whoſe office it belonged to be maſter of all the poems and ſongs of the country; that among theſe poems the works of Oſſian are eaſily diſtinguiſhed from thoſe of later bards by ſeveral peculiarities in his ſtyle and manner; that Oſſian has been always reputed the Homer of the Highlands, and all his compoſitions held in ſingular eſteem and veneration; that the whole country is full of traditionary ſtories derived from his poems, concerning Fingal and his race of heroes, of whom there is not a child but has heard, and not a diſtrict in which there are not places pointed out as famous for being the ſcene of ſome of their feats of arms; that it was wont to be the great entertainment of the Highlanders, to paſs the winter evenings in diſcourſing of the times of Fingal, and rehearſing theſe old poems, of which they have been all along enthuſiaſtically fond; that when aſſembled at their feſtivals, or any of their public occaſions, wagers were often laid who could repeat moſt of them, and to have ſtore of them in their memories, was both an honourable and a profitable acquiſition, as it procured them acceſs into the families of their great men; that with regard to their antiquity, they are beyond all memory or tradition; inſomuch that there is a word commonly uſed in the Highlands to this day, when they would expreſs any thing which is of the moſt remote or unknown antiquity, importing, that it belongs to the age of Fingal.

I am farther informed that after the uſe of letters was introduced into that part of the country, the bards and others began early to commit ſeveral of theſe poems to writing; that old manuſcripts of them, many of which are deſtroyed or loſt, are known and atteſted to have been in the poſſeſſion of ſome great families; that the moſt valuable of thoſe which remained, were collected by Mr Macpherſon during his journey through that country; that though the poems of Oſſian, ſo far as they were handed down by oral tradition, were no doubt liable to be interpolated, and to have their parts disjoined and put out of their natural order, yet by comparing together the different oral editions of them (if we may uſe that phraſe) in different corners of the country, and by comparing theſe alſo with the manuſcripts which he obtained, Mr Macpherſon had it in his power to aſcertain, in a great meaſure, the genuine original, to reſtore the parts to their proper order, and to give the whole to the public in that degree of correctneſs, in which it now appears.

I am alſo acquainted, that if inquiries had been made fifty or threeſcore years ago, many more particulars concerning theſe poems might have been learned, and many more living witneſſes have been produced for atteſting their authenticity; but that the manners of the inhabitants of the Highland counties have of late undergone a great change. Agriculture, trades, and manufactures, begin to take place of hunting, and the ſhepherd's life. The introduction of the buſy and laborious arts has conſiderably abated that poetical enthuſiaſm which is better ſuited to a vacant and indolent ſtate. The fondneſs of reciting their old poems decays; the cuſtom of teaching them to their children is fallen into deſuetude; and few are now to be found, except old men, who can rehearſe from memory any conſiderable parts of them.

For theſe particulars, concerning the ſtate of the Highlands and the tranſmiſſion of Oſſian's poems, I am indebted to the reverend and very learned and ingenious Mr John Macpherſon, miniſter of Slate, in the Iſland of Sky; and to the reverend Mr Donald Macqueen, miniſter of Kilmuir, in Sky; Mr Donald Macleod, miniſter of Glenelg, in Inverneſsſhire; Mr Lewis Grant, miniſter of Duthel, in Inverneſsſhire; Mr Angus Macneil, miniſter of the Iſland of South Uiſt; Mr Neil Macleod, miniſter of Roſs, in the Iſland of Mull; and Mr Alexander Macaulay, chaplain to the 88th regiment.

The honourable Colonel Hugh Mackay of Bighouſe, in the Shire of Sutherland; Donald Campbell of Airds, in Argyleſhire, Eſq; Æneas Mackintoſh of Mackintoſh, in Inverneſsſhire, Eſq; and Ronald Macdonell of Keappoch, in Lochaber, Eſq; captain in the 87th regiment commanded by Colonel Fraſer, all concur in teſtifying that Mr Macpherſon's collection conſiſts of genuine Highland poems; known to them to be ſuch, both from the general report of the country where they live, and from their own remembrance of the originals. Colonel Mackay aſſerts very poſitively, upon perſonal knowledge, that many of the poems publiſhed by Mr Macpherſon are true and faithful tranſlations. Mr Campbell declares that he has heard many of them, and Captain Macdonell that he has heard parts of every one of them, recited in the original language.

James Grant of Rothiemurchus, Eſq; and Alexander Grant

Grant of Delrachny, Eſq; both in the Shire of Inverneſs, deſire to be named as vouchers for the poem of Fingal in particular. They remember to have heard it often in their younger days, and are poſitive that Mr Macpherſon has given a juſt tranſlation of it.

Lauchlan Macpherſon of Strathmaſhie, in Inverneſs-ſhire, Eſq; gives a very full and explicit teſtimony, from particular knowledge, in the following words: That in the year 1760, he accompanied Mr Macpherſon during ſome part of his journey through the Highlands in ſearch of the poems of Oſſian, that he aſſiſted him in collecting them; that he took down from oral tradition, and tranſcribed from old manuſcripts by far the greateſt part of thoſe pieces Mr Macpherſon has publiſhed; that ſince the publication he has carefully compared the tranſlation with the copies of the originals in his hands; and that he finds it amazingly literal, even to ſuch a degree as often to preſerve the cadence of the Galic verſification. He affirms, that among the manuſcripts which were at that time in Mr Macpherſon's poſſeſſion, he ſaw one of as old a date as the year 141c.

Sir James Macdonald of Macdonald, in the Iſland of Sky, Baronet, aſſured me, that after having made, at my deſire, all the inquiries he could in his part of the country, he entertained no doubt that Mr Macpherſon's collection conſiſted entirely of authentic Highland poems; that he had lately heard ſeveral parts of them repeated in the original, in the Iſland of Sky, with ſome variations from the printed tranſlation, ſuch as might naturally be expected from the circumſtances of oral tradition; and ſome parts, in particular the epiſode of Fainaſollis in the third book of Fingal, which agree literally with the tranſlation; and added that he had heard recitations of other poems not tranſlated by Mr Macpherſon, but generally reputed to be of Oſſian's compoſition, which were of the ſame ſpirit and ſtrain with ſuch as are tranſlated, and which he eſteemed not inferior to any of them in ſublimity of deſcription, dignity of ſentiment, or any other of the beauties of poetry. This laſt particular muſt have great weight; as it is well known how much the judgment of Sir James Macdonald deſerves to be relied upon, in every thing that relates to literature and taſte.

The late reverend Mr Alexander Macfarlane, miniſter of Arrachar in Dumbartonſhire, who was remarkably eminent for his profound knowledge in Galic learning and antiquities, wrote to me ſoon after the publication of Mr Macpherſon's work, terming it a maſterly tranſlation; informing me that he had often heard ſeveral of theſe poems in the original, and remarked many paſſages ſo particularly ſtriking beyond any thing he had ever read in any human compoſition, that he never expected to ſee a ſtrength of genius able to do them that juſtice in a tranſlation, which Mr Macpherſon has done.

Norman Macleod of Macleod, in the Iſland of Sky, Eſq; Walter Macfarlane, in Dumbartonſhire, Eſq; Mr Alexander Macmillan, deputy-keeper of his Majeſty's ſignet, Mr Adam Ferguſſon, profeſſor of moral philoſophy in the Univerſity of Edinburgh, and many other gentlemen, natives of the Highland counties, whom I had occaſion to converſe with upon this ſubject, declare, that though they cannot now repeat from memory any of theſe poems in the original, yet from what they have heard in their youth, and from the impreſſion of the ſubject ſtill remaining on their minds, they firmly believe thoſe which Mr Macpherſon has publiſhed, to be the old poems of Oſſian current in the country.

Deſirous, however, to have this tranſlation particularly compared with the oral editions of any who had parts of the original diſtinctly on their memory, I applied to ſeveral clergymen to make inquiry in their reſpective pariſhes concerning ſuch perſons; and to compare what they rehearſed with the printed verſion. Accordingly, from the reverend Mr John Macpherſon, miniſter of Slate, in Sky; Mr Neil Macleod, miniſter of Roſs, in Mull; Mr Angus Macneil, miniſter of South Uiſt; Mr Donald Macqueen, miniſter of Kilmuir, in Sky; and Mr Donald Macleod, miniſter of Glenelg; I have had reports on this head, containing diſtinct and explicit teſtimonies to almoſt the whole epic poem of Fingal, from beginning to end, and to ſeveral alſo of the leſſer poems, as rehearſed in the original, in their preſence, by perſons whoſe names and places of abode they mention, and compared by themſelves with the printed tranſlation. They affirm that in many places, what was rehearſed in their preſence agreed literally and exactly with the tranſlation. In ſome places they found variations from it, and variations even among different rehearſers of the ſame poem in the original; as words and ſtanza's omitted by ſome, which others repeated, and the order and connection in ſome places changed. But they remark, that theſe variations are on the whole not very material; and that Mr Macpherſon ſeemed to them to follow the moſt juſt and authentic copy of the ſenſe of his author. Some of theſe clergymen, particularly Mr Neil Macleod, can themſelves repeat from memory ſeveral paſſages of Fingal; the tranſlation tion of which they aſſure me is exact. Mr Donald Macleod acquaints me, that it was in his houſe Mr Macpherſon had the deſcription of Cuchullin's horſes and chariot, in the firſt book of Fingal, given him by Allan Macaſkill ſchoolmaſter. Mr Angus Macneil writes, that Mr Macdonald, a pariſhioner of his, declares, that he has often ſeen and read a great part of an ancient manuſcript, once in the poſſeſſion of the family of Clanronald, and afterwards carried to Ireland, containing many of theſe poems; and that he rehearſed before him ſeveral paſſages out of Fingal, which agreed exactly with Mr Macpherſon's tranſlation; that Neil Macmurrich, whoſe predeceſſors had for many generations been bards to the family of Clanronald, declared alſo in his preſence, that he had often ſeen and read the ſame old manuſcript; that he himſelf, gave to Mr Macpherſon a manuſcript containing ſome of the poems which are now tranſlated and publiſhed, and rehearſed before Mr Macneil, in the original, the whole of the poem intitled Darthula, with very little variation from the printed tranſlation. I have received the ſame teſtimony concerning this poem, Dar-thula, from Mr Macpherſon miniſter of Slate: and in a letter communicated to me from Lieutenant Duncan Macnicol, of the 88th regiment, informing me of its being recited in the original, in their preſence, from beginning to end: On which I lay the more ſtreſs, as any perſon of taſte who turns to that poem will ſee, that it is one of the moſt highly finiſhed in the whole collection, and moſt diſtinguiſhed for poetical and ſentimental beauties; inſomuch, that whatever genius could produce Dar-thula, muſt be judged fully equal to any performance contained in Mr Macpherſon's publication. I muſt add here, that though they who have compared the tranſlation with what they have heard rehearſed of the original, beſtow high praiſe both upon Mr Macpherſon's genius and his fidelity; yet I find it to be their general opinion, that in many places he has not been able to attain to the ſtrength and ſublimity of the original which he copied.

I have authority to ſay, in the name of Lieutenant Colonel Archibald Macnab, of the 88th regiment, or regiment of Highland Volunteers commanded by Colonel Campbell, that he has undoubted evidence of Mr Macpherſon's collection being genuine, both from what he well remembers to have heard in his youth, and from his having heard very lately a conſiderable part of the poem of Temora rehearſed in the original, which agreed exactly with the printed verſion.

By the reverend Mr Alexander Pope, miniſter of Reay, in the ſhire of Caithneſs, I am informed, that twenty-four years years ago, he had begun to make a collection of ſome of the old poems current in his part of the country; on comparing which, with Mr Macpherſon's work, he found in his collection the poem intitled, the Battle of Lora, ſome parts of Lathmon, and the account of the Death of Oſcar. From the above mentioned Lieutenant Duncan Macnicol, teſtimonies have been received to a great part of Fingal, to part of Temora, and Carric-thura, as well as to the whole of Dar-thula, as recited in his preſence in the original, compared, and found to agree with the tranſlation.

I myſelf read over the greateſt part of the Engliſh verſion of the ſix books of Fingal, to Mr Kenneth Macpherſon of Stornoway, in the Iſland of Lewis, merchant, in preſence of the reverend Mr Alexander Macaulay, chaplain of the 88th regiment. In going along, Mr Macpherſon vouched what was read to be well known to him in the original, both the deſcriptions and the ſentiments. In ſome places, though he remembered the ſtory, he did not remember the words of the original; in other places, he remembered and repeated the Galic lines themſelves, which, being interpreted to me by Mr Macaulay, were found, upon compariſon, to agree often literally with the printed verſion, and ſometimes with ſlight variations of a word or an epithet. This teſtimony carried to me, and muſt have carried to any other who had been preſent, the higheſt conviction; being preciſely a teſtimony of that nature which an Engliſhman well acquainted with Milton, or any favourite author, would give to a foreigner, who ſhewed him a verſion of this author into his own language, and wanted to be ſatisfied from what the Engliſhman could recollect of the original, whether it was really a tranſlation of Paradiſe Loſt, or a ſpurious work under that title which had been put into his hands.

The above-mentioned Mr Alexander Macaulay, Mr Adam Ferguſſon profeſſor of moral philoſophy, and Mr Alexander Fraſer, governor to Francis Stuart, Eſq; inform me, that at ſeveral different times they were with Mr Macpherſon, after he had returned from his journey through the Highlands, and whilſt he was employed in the work of tranſlating; that they looked into his manuſcripts, ſeveral of which had the appearance of being old; that they were fully ſatisfied of their being genuine Highland poems; that they compared the tranſlation in many places with the original; and they atteſt it to be very juſt and faithful, and remarkably literal.

It has been thought worth while to beſtow this attention on eſtabliſhing the authenticity of the works of Oſſian, now in poſſeſſion of the public: Becauſe whatever rank they are allowed to hold as works of genius; whatever different opinions may be entertained concerning their poetical merit, they are unqueſtionably valuable in another view; as monuments of the taſte and manners of an ancient age, as uſeful materials for enlarging our knowledge of the human mind and character; and muſt, beyond all diſpute, be held as at leaſt one of the greateſt curioſities, which have at any time enriched the republic of letters. More teſtimonies to them might have been produced by a more enlarged correſpondence with the Highland counties: But I apprehend, if any apology is neceſſary, it is for producing ſo many names, in a queſtion, where the conſenting ſilence of a whole country, was to every unprejudiced perſon, the ſtrongeſt proof, that ſpurious compoſitions, in the name of that country, had not been obtruded upon the world.

THE preceding chain of evidence would be ſufficient, one ſhould think, to ſettle any point of controverſy whatever. At leaſt we are in the habit of believing traditions in themſelves the moſt incredible, upon authority far leſs ſatisfactory. If additional proof is however wanted, we refer the reader to a Diſſertation on the Authenticity of Oſſian's Poems, inſerted by the reverend Mr Smith in his Galic Antiquities. This Gentleman has not only added his own teſtimony to the foregoing evidence, but has ſubjoined a numerous liſt of correſpondents, and of perſons to whom he was indebted "by oral recitation" for a conſiderable part of the originals of the poems which he has tranſlated, and which are intimately connected with the preſent collection. As it had been loudly demanded,* that the originals themſelves ſhould be produced, Mr Smith has printed his Galic Poems in a quarto volume, extending to an hundred and ſeventy-four pages. If any reader can reſiſt the conviction of ſuch evidence, as to the exiſtence of Oſſian's Poems in the Galic language, he muſt be ranked with thoſe hardy ſceptics who would not believe, though one had ariſen from the dead.

* This paragraph is addreſſed, in particular, to the admirers of the late Dr Samuel Johnſon. For his petulance upon this ſubject, the hereditary† diſtemper of lunacy forms a melancholy vindication. An apology of the ſame kind may be advanced for the buffoonery of James Boſwell, Eſq.
